Metro's starting pair are widely diversified. With Lionel Barrymore, Elizabeth Allen, Lewis Stone, Maureen O'Sullivan, Charles Laughton, Frank Lawton, Hugh Williams and Madge Evans, camera work began on the Dickens classic, "David Copperfield." Simultaneously a strictly modern drama, "Repeal," got underway. In this Carole Lombard, Chester Morris, Una Merkel and Leo Carillo are the principals.

Radio started "Romance in Manhattan," with Charles Lederer and Ginger Rogers in the featured spots. Universal began "When a Man Sees Red," a western for Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier and Peggy Campbell. Warner's feature, "Maybe It's Love," a modern romance drama, will present Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander, Helen Lowell and Joseph Cawthorn.

At Mascot, Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp and Henry B. Walthall, started in "In Old Santa Fe," but it was postponed after a mule kick had sent Maynard to a hospital. At Columbia "Stake Out," a romantic drama, will feature Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen and Charles Sabin.

Fox completed "Music in the Air," in which Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery and Reginald Owen will be seen. It also completed "Marie Galante," featuring its new star, Ketti Gallian.

"Gridiron Flash," football picture formerly titled "Kickoff," moved to the cutting rooms at Radio. In this Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness, Grant Mitchell, Lucien Littlefield and Joe Sauers are the name principals. Warner's finished product is "Murder in the Clouds," presenting Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak and Gordon Wescott as the leading players. Chesterfield completed "The Curtain Falls," which features Henrietta Crosman, Natalie Moorhead and William Bakewell. Universal finished "Life Returns," with Onslow Stevens, Lois Wilson, George Breakstone and Valeria Hudson the leading personalities.

Monogram's completed pair are "Girl of My Dreams," a companion show to "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," in which Mary Carlisle, Eddie Nugent, Sterling Holloway and Creighton Chaney are featured, and "Flirting With Danger," a comedy adventure show presenting Robert Armstrong, Maria Alba, William Cagney, Ed Kennedy and Marion Burns in the leading roles.

KORDA'S STAGE UNITS TO FEED SCREEN CASTS

Liaison Gets Underway with Showing of "Josephine"; Aim Is to Do Without Hollywood

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

When "Josephine" is produced at His Majesty's Theatre on Friday night the first definite step will have been taken toward realization of a liaison between the British stage and screen which ultimately may have important effects on production policy.

I already have recorded the bare facts that Alexander Korda of London Films had founded a subsidiary company for the production of stage plays and that his first drama would be based on the early life of Napoleon.

It is this project which has now taken definite shape in "Josephine," which is being produced, on the stage, by Eugen Robert and later, as a film, will be directed by Mr. Korda.

More important than the fact that London Films is obtaining a reasonable security of adequate dramatic values for screen purposes, by having them carefully tested out on the stage, is the fact that Mr. Korda also is looking to his dramatic adventure to provide British production with its future stars and writers.

He is definitely aiming to create a company of young players for the theatrical venture, with a stiffening of established stars, and it will also be his settled policy to encourage youthful dramatists.

British Stage for British Screen

When L. F. Play Productions is in full swing London Films will try to do without Hollywood, or at least to use Hollywood personalities strictly for their specialties.

Already ambitious plans have been made for stage productions to follow "Josephine." James Bridie's play, "Mary Read," has been acquired; the leading figure is the 18th century woman pirate. Tyrone Guthrie will produce it on the stage. Flora Robson will lead in both play and film.

Another ambitious project is to dramatize the Life of Nijinski, as written by his wife, who has disposed of stage and film rights to London Films.

Elizabeth Bergner probably will play Rachel in a two-fold production of a story by Thomas Mann, the German author of "The Tales of Jacob."

Still another contract is with Robert Sherwood, author of "Reunion in Vienna." He will write for London for both media.

When the shooting of "The Scarlet Pimpernel" is completed, Mr. Korda is going to devote close attention to organization of a greatly extended department dealing exclusively with the discovery of new plays.

"Exclusive Rights" in News

An important legal test case is promised by announcement that Jeff Dickson, promoter of the recent Petersen-Gains fight, has issued writs against various parties alleged to have been concerned in the preparation or presentation of "pirate" films of the contest.

Exclusive rights to shoot the fight were granted by the Dickson enterprise to Gaumont-British and Movietone jointly. The parties sued are: Pathe Pictures, Hyde Park Cinemas, Paramount Astorias, Olympic Kinematograph Laboratories, British Pictorial Productions, The Plaza, Piccadilly Circus, Associated British Cinemas.

The uncertainty of the legal issues involved is indicated in the advice to exhibitors from Norman Hart, solicitor to the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, that it is undesirable, until the courts have had their say, to show any "unofficial" films of the fight.

In attempts to obtain a preliminary injunction against British Broadcasting Corporation, which had threatened to put a running commentary "on the air," counsel for Mr. Dickson made it plain that his client relied upon a special indorsement on all the tickets of admission to the fight as barring any purchaser from either broadcasting or photographing the contest. Tickets were sold, it was argued, on this condition.

An important precedent will be established if the promoter wins his case. It has been previously held that there can be no copyright in a news happening; the point now to be determined is whether it is possible so to control the means of access to such events that an "unofficial" picture must have implied a breach of the terms of admission.

Auten to Release Associated British

Captain Harold Auten has taken over the complete output of Associated Talking Pictures, Ltd., of London, for distribution in the United States. Six features have been delivered already, with a minimum of 12 to be delivered within 12 months.

Basil Dean, British theatrical and motion picture producer, and Reginald P. Baker are joint managing directors of Associated Talking. Also on the board of directors of the company are Stephen L. and Major J. S. Courtauld. Productions are completed under the personal supervision of Mr. Dean, John Walter Ruben, Carmine Gallone and others.

The six already set for distribution by Captain Auten in this country, are: "Loyalties," adapted by John Galsworthy from his play of the same title, and featuring Basil Rathbone; "Java Head," adapted from the Joseph Hergesheimer novel, and featuring Anna May Wong; "Autumn Crocus," featuring Ivor Novello; "For Love of You," musical comedy set in Venice; "Going Gay," also a musical, and set in Vienna, and "Lorna Doone," famous novel.

Jay Paley Heads Wanger Pictures

Jay Paley, financier and member of the board of the Columbia Broadcasting System, has begun his new duties in Hollywood as president of Walter Wanger Productions. Mr. Paley is the uncle of William S. Paley, president of CBS. He will retain his associations with the broadcasting concern but will give most of his time to picture production.

Walter Wanger Productions recently signed a contract to produce six pictures for release through Paramount. The first production, "The President Vanishes," based upon the novel of the same title which Farrar and Rinehart will bring forth in October, went into work this week at the Metropolitan Studios on the Coast.

SMPE Now Has 850 Members

With 300 members added in the last year, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers now has an all-time high membership total of 850. O. M. Glunt, financial vice-president, reported the figures, which were taken to reflect in part an improvement of business conditions within the industry as well as the widened scope of the society's activities and a reduction in fees.

Plans are near completion for the semi-annual meeting at the Pennsylvania hotel, New York, October 29 and November 1. With the banquet falling on Hallowe'en Night, W. C. Kunzmann, vice-president in charge of conventions, said "We'll observe all the conventions and have all the trimmings from roast turkey to pumpkin pie."

"You will be making a mistake if you do not go to see 'The Richest Girl in the World,' at the Radio City Music Hall. It is an expertly played, deft, sparkling, highly entertaining comedy . . . it is frankly porous-knit and summer-weight nonsense . . . unmistakably alive and chuckling, tinkling and sprightly and sometimes greatly genial and gleeful . . . Miss Hopkins is brisk, lovely and exciting, and proves herself a truly clever comedienne in the part . . ."

William Boehnel—World-Telegram 9/21

"Smartly presented, both dialogue and situations are amusingly subtle and the excellent production is benefited both by the direction of William A. Seiter and the trouping of Miriam Hopkins and her capable supporting cast . . . the dialogue is cleverly intimate and pointed. Suspense and fun build to an hilarious climax."

Regina Crewe—N. Y. American 9/21

"Full of joy and the stuff that makes box offices look well fed. Get in back of it and listen to your audiences laugh. The lines sparkle. Miriam Hopkins hasn't been so happily cast nor done such good work since her Lubitsch pictures. The gal looks gorgeous and wears clothes that will enchant the 'femmes' . . . lavish production."

Hollywood Reporter

"Delightfully smart comedy containing all the requisites that spell entertainment. Cast, story, direction, photography—all combined to make this excellent screen fare. Clean, wholesome, with a surfeit of snappy lines and situations, has just about everything to make it box-office."

Hollywood Variety

"Delightful and unusual love story that will charm the femmes, with fine cast and direction. This one is a honey for any showman's theatre. The laughs come frequently in the midst of delightful love situations. Dialogue crisp and clever. Handsomely mounted sets."

The Film Daily

"... gay and sparkling ... a breezy and well-sustained comedy which numbers among its virtues the kind of role which Miss Miriam Hopkins not only can but does play better than any one else . . . a spirited and delightful picture . . ."

Thornton Delehanty—N. Y. Post 9/21

"... Amusingly written by Norman Krasna, wisely directed by William A. Seiter and delightfully played by Miss Miriam Hopkins, 'The Richest Girl in the World' proves to be an extremely engaging light comedy . . ."—Richard Watts, Jr.—Herald-Tribune 9/21

"... Sparkling film comedy ... so lightly and cleverly handled that 'The Richest Girl in the World' is an exhilarating comedy . . . delightful dialogue and highly amusing situations . . ."

Bland Johaneson—Mirror 9/21

"Not since the delightful comedy of Colbert and Gable in 'It Happened One Night' have you met with such a grand comedy team as Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea . . . The picture's a honey from start to finish—just the kind of stuff you like best to see . . ."

I AM A THIEF

Warner

The combination of title tone, story content and cast names indicates the potential showmanship value of this production. Original story and screen play are by Doris Malloy, who wrote "Gambling Lady," and Ralph Block, who collaborated with her on that picture, "Dark Hazard," and also did "Massacre." Direction is by Robert Florey, who made "Bedside," "Smarty" and "Registered Nurse."

The cast is headed by Ricardo Cortez and Mary Astor, whose most recent pictures are respectively, "A Lost Lady" and "The Case of the Howling Dog." The supporting cast includes Dudley Digges, Hobart Cavanaugh, Irving Pichel, Arthur Aylesworth, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Florence Fair, Oscar Apfel and John Wray, all of whom are in recent Warner features.

The locales are Paris, other continental cities and on trains between. The yarn is a baffling mystery drama involving several groups of clever diamond thieves. As one endeavors to outslick and outsteal the other, there is a succession of murders and double crossing, all leading to the climax which has the whole party aboard train. Then the last killer to assure himself of the jewels would cut the train loose from the engine, letting it and its passengers roll down a grade to destruction.

Naturally there is a romantic accompaniment to the direct motivation, but for selling purposes a capitalization on the thrill, color, intrigue, mystery and nerve tingling adventure appears to be the outstanding angle. The premise of the story not being entirely new, angles should be devised that convince that it is the brand of entertainment which many times has demonstrated its commercial ability.

GIRL OF THE ISLANDS

(Tentative Title)

Radio

This is an action adventure story. Its author, Gouverneur Morris, is a noted novelist and short story writer and consequently a definite showmanship asset. The screen play is by John Twist and Wallace Fox, who is directing.

Steffi Duna, who made her screen debut with Charles Lederer in "Man of Two Worlds," is starred. Supporting principals are Regis Toomey, currently in "Red Head"; Lionel Belmore, Raymond Hatton, Gilbert Emery, appearing in "One More River," Michel Lewis, Charles Middleton and George Lewis. Additionally, Francis McDonald, Ray West, Willie Fung and Sleep 'n' Eat are in the cast.

The yarn, which is full of hair-raising situations, has Steffi Duna, a he-man sailor girl accompanying her father through tropical seas on a quest for buried treasure. Dogged by cutthroat hijackers, they land on a cannibal island and save a shipwrecked white man from the cannibals, whereupon romance blossoms for the girl. Various complications, principally paternal objections to the girl, interlude prior to the climax in which the girls' cannibal friends, rallying to her defense, give the pirates the works.

With highly theatrical premise, the yarn suggests startling showmanship; a kind that has been long dormant in stimulating interest in an attraction that is anything but sophisticated and in fact is almost a throwback to the days "when movies moved."

EVELYN PRENTICE

MGM

One of the valuable showmanship assets of this story is that the two leads of "The Thin Man," William Powell and Myrna Loy, are teamed again. In this case, however, their story is straight and startling drama, modern in its premise and dealing with a subject in which Powell always has appeared to good advantage. "Evelyn Prentice" is a published novel by W. E. Woodward. The adaptation is by Howard Emmett Rogers, who did "The Mystery of Mr. X." Added dialogue was contributed by Leonore Coffee. Direction is by William K. Howard, maker of "The Power and the Glory," "Cat and the Fiddle" and "This Side of Heaven."

Supporting principals are Una Merkel, now in "The Merry Widow" and in the recent "Murder in the Private Car"; Isabel Jewell, seen in "Manhattan Melodrama" and "Here Comes the Groom"; Edward Brophy, currently in "The Thin Man" and "Hideout"; also Harry Stevens, Cora Sue Collins, Rosalind Russell, Henry Wadsworth and Jessie Ralph. Also included are Claudell Kaye, Jack Mulhall, Ruth Renick, Clarence Wilson, Georgia Caine, Craufurd Kent and Richard Tucker.

In the story, which colors its drama premise with comedy, romance, heart-interest, emotion stimulating excitement and suspense, Powell is a lawyer, specializing in defending erring women. Liking to relax, he leaves his wife, Myrna Loy, alone at home while he has affairs with other women. Amazed and disappointed when she learns, she also plays the same game. Both run into dramatic complications. Powell gets out of his cleverly, but in trying to escape hers, Loy kills a man accidentally. Another woman, arrested on circumstantial evidence, is being defended by Powell when he discovers that his own wife is guilty. His job is to keep her name out of the courts and the papers and at the same time obtain the freedom of the accused. He does, in a way that is a surprise.

BORDERTOWN

Warner

This story has all the advance indications in human interest value, romance, drama, action, thrill, clash of races and unusual color necessary for outstanding entertainment and showmanship. Suggested by Carroll Graham's novel of the same title, it was whipped into screen shape by men who have been responsible for many of this company's most successful pictures. The screen story is by Robert Lord, recently similarly credited with "Dames" and "He Was Her Man." Adaptation is by Laird Doyle, who did "British Agent" and "The Key," and Wallace Smith. It is being directed by Archie Mayo.

Paul Muni is starred. The two women who so startlingly influence his life are Bette Davis, whose work in "Of Human Bondage" means much in a current showmanship way, and Margaret Lindsay, recently in several Warner pictures.

Powerful realistic human drama, which "Fugitive From a Chain Gang" proved right down Muni's alley, is the essence of the story. A vivid portrayal of a storm ridden life, it depicts the heartbreaking struggle of a young Mexican, fired with honest ambition and self-educated, to fit into the American social picture.

CHEATING CHEATERS

Universal

Clean, funny comedy, built around a situation which, while not brand new, has consistently proved its entertainment and showmanship value, is the substance of this show. It was adapted from Max Marcin's stage play of the same title by Gladys Ungar. The screen play is by Allen Rivkin, who specializes in light comedy, as attested by such pictures as "Picture Snatcher," "Melody Cruise" and "Headline Shooter." Direction is by Richard Thorpe, who recently completed "Secrets of the Chateau."

The cast combines both old familiar names and some that are new. Fay Wray, whose most recent appearances are in "Affairs of Cellini" and "Countess of Monte Cristo," has the lead. Sharing top honors with her are Cesar Romero, a comparative newcomer who was seen in minor parts in "Thin Man" and "British Agent," and Francis Sullivan, a young British actor, who will appear in Universal's forthcoming "Great Expectations."

With comedy as the outstanding trait, indicating plenty of laughs, the yarn runs the gamut of modern entertainment against a background of unique romance and of light drama in which suspense takes some surprising twists. As can be gleaned from the title, which has more than ordinary commercial value, the story concerns a group of international jewel thieves who set out to reap a harvest only to discover the group they are taking for suckers is endeavoring to work the same game. Upon this premise is built the romantic, comedy, dramatic and mystery interest. For selling purposes, the title plus story content makes available several novel exploitation possibilities that can be put across at comparatively little or no cost.

MAYBE IT'S LOVE

Warner

This story is comedy romance drama, dealing principally with two young folk, their love affair, marriage which through reasons of clashing temperament, jealousy and financial troubles convinces them that they are unsuited to each other, only to have a sudden burst of understanding smack them into a realization of what they really mean to each other. As a showmanship feature it satirically delves into that menace to all young couples' marital happiness—family interference.

The picture is adapted by Lawrence Hazzard from a successful stage play by Maxwell Anderson. The screen play is by Jerry Wald and Harry Sauber, who recently was credited with "Happiness Ahead." Direction is by William McGann, formerly an assistant director for this company, making his first appearance on his own.

Although the cast includes no outstanding names, it is composed of personalities with whom audiences are generally familiar. The two principals are Gloria Stuart, now in "Gift of Gab," and Ross Alexander, seen in several MGM pictures. In support are Frank McHugh, whose latest picture is "Happiness Ahead"; Helen Lowell, in "Midnight Alibi" and "Case of the Howling Dog"; Phillip Read, in "British Agent" and "Lost Lady"; Joseph Cawthorn, both a stage and screen veteran; Ruth Donnelly and Dorothy Dare, two of the "Happiness Ahead" featured players, and Henry Travers, Maude Eburne and J. Farrell MacDonald.

In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

NO. 70—SALARIES IN EXHIBITION IN TOWNS OF 1,500 PERSONS

QUESTION—I am working as projectionist in a town of 1,500 population. I would like to learn what salary should be paid in towns of this population. I am now getting $12.50 per week, but in addition to working as projectionist, I book and date all pictures, also do all the correspondence.—GEORGIA.

ANSWER—Under an Executive Order of the President there is no minimum wage applicable to theatre workers employed in towns having a population of 2,500 or less. The Exective Order exempted all such towns of 2,500 population, or less, from maximum working schedules and minimum wage clauses of the code.

NO. 71—CANCELLATIONS UNDER LEGION REGULATIONS

QUESTION—Can you tell me if I have the right to cancel any picture from any company if such picture does not conform with the standard the Legion of Decency has set? Can you also give me a list of such pictures from RKO and Columbia?—SOUTH DAKOTA.

ANSWER—All large distributors agreed in July to permit an exhibitor to cancel any of their pictures released prior to July 15 against which picture there has been lodged in the exhibitor's community a bona fide public protest upon moral grounds made in good faith. The protest must actually exist among the residents in the community in which the exhibitor's theatre is located. A public protest against a certain picture in another community does not make that picture eligible for cancellation.

The exchange reserves the right to investigate the source and the nature of the protest to determine its good faith.

In case of a dispute between the branch manager and the exhibitor as to whether or not there is a genuine objection to the picture in the particular community in which the theatre is located, the distributor will consent to refer the questions of fact to the Local Grievance Board of the code for determination.

This offer applies to all pictures actually released prior to July 15th. Pictures released after that date are required to meet with the standards of good taste as provided for by the Production Code Administration in Hollywood, under Joseph I. Breen, and bear the seal of the Administration next to the main title on all prints.

Lists of pictures carrying the Production Code Administration's certificate of approval seal may be obtained frim Mr. Breen, at 5514 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif.

The complete text of the rules and regulations governing cancellation of pictures released prior to July 15, 1934, under the agreement of the distributors, appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on July 14.

NO. 72—SALARIES IN EXHIBITION IN TOWNS OF 2,500 PERSONS

QUESTION—Under the motion picture code, what is the minimum which can be paid a projectionist in a town of less than 10,000 inhabitants? Also, in a town of less than 2,500*? —ARIZONA.*

ANSWER—Relating to the same subject as Question No. 70, in the foregoing, under an Executive Order of the President, there is no minimum wage applicable to theatre workers employed in towns having a population of 2,500 or less. The Executive Order exempted all such towns of 2,500 population, or less, from maximum working schedules and minimum wage clauses of the code.

The minimum wage scale for projectionists employed in towns having a population of more than 2,500 shall be, under the motion picture code, no less than the minimum wage that was in force in that community as of August 23, 1933; nor shall the maximum working hours for projectionists employed in towns of more than 2,500 inhabitants exceed the maximum working hours that were in force on August 23, 1933—but, in no event shall the maximum hours for projectionists exceed 40 weekly.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 241.—(A) Name the various objections to the use of a.c. at the projection arc. (B) What is meant by "rectifying the current"? (C) Name the various means available for current rectification. (D) Give your views as to whether or not a current rectifying device will return its cost to the management.

Answer to Question No. 234

Bluebook School Question No. 234 was: (A) What is the area, in fractions of a square inch, of one square millimeter? (B) What is meant by the mil-foot standard of resistance? (C) How would you calculate the resistance of an electric arc, voltage and amperage being known? (D) Suppose current to be 110 volts, the arc is a 60-volt one. There are four 45-ampere, 220-volt fixed resistance rheostats available. You want 60 amperes of current. How nearly would you be able to get it, and what would be your hook-up? The rheostats are regulation 220-volt, fixed resistances, made to work with a projection light source. (E) Just what inspection do you make of the wires inside your lamphouses, and how often? In what condition must they be to receive your O.K.?

Six hundred and ninety-eight made the answer to Section A, 0.00155 of a square inch, so I guess it must be correct, what?

(B) Our old friends Evans and Rau answer thus: "The 'mil-foot' Standard of Resistance" is the resistance offered by a wire one circular mil in cross section and one foot in length, made of the same material as the wire it is proposed to measure the resistance of. The resistance of such a wire made of commercial copper is 10.8 ohms.

(C) P. and L. Felt say, "By the application of Ohm's law, which tells us that voltage divided by amperage gives us resistance in ohms. We then would merely divide the voltage of the arc by the number of amperes flowing, thus: 80 amperes flowing through a 58-volt arc would indicate $58 \div 80 = 0.75$ of an ohm resistance."

(D) G. E. Doe says, "The problem is one only capable of being worked approximately, for the reason that such rheostats are not made to work with any exact arc voltage. There then must be considerable error in working the problem out by Ohm's law. The necessary rheostatic resistance to pass 60 amperes with 110 volts initial or line pressure is $\frac{110-60}{60} = 0.833$ of an ohm, which of course means line voltage minus arc voltage divided by 60, the latter representing the number of amperes flowing.

"The resistance of each available rheostat is approximately $\frac{220-60}{45} = 3.555$ ohms. The resistance of a 60-ampere arc at 60 volts is 1 ohm, hence with each rheostat connected in series with the one ohm arc resistance, we would of course have $3.555 + 1 = 4.555$ ohms resistance, and 4.555 ohms resistance will pass $110 \div 4.555 = 24$ plus amperes, therefore with two of the rheostats in parallel we would have 48 amperes, whereas with three of them thus connected the amperage would be 72.

"However, if we connect two of them in parallel, and the remaining two in series and then in parallel with the others, we would have $48 + 13.5$ (approximately) amperes, which is 61.5, or approximately what we want."

(E) L. J. O'Melia answers Section E thus: "Inspection of wires, etc., inside the lamphouse is just as necessary as it is for the rest of the equipment. I make it my rule to inspect the various contacts and general condition thoroughly once each week.

"To receive my O.K., the contacts must be firm and clean. The insulation and the wires near the contacts must be in first class condition. The lamp must be clean and the lamp assembly work free—without any binding."

D. L. Sinklow says, "Each morning I carefully examine everything inside the lamphouse, moving the wires to make sure they are still firm."

SOUND TRACK VARIATIONS

Recently a very wide variation in variable density sound tracks has been complained of by projectionists. Not infrequently such wide variations adjoin each other, making it difficult or even impossible to project them without either a period blare or too much volume.

This is a condition that outrages projection. It cannot always be handled successfully in one-man rooms. It calls for rectification, and to that end I ask projectionists immediately to forward to me two-frame clippings of either adjoining scenes in which there is wide change in sound track density or one-frame clippings from different portions of the same productions showing wide range in sound track density. Give name of production and number of reel from which clipping is taken. Neither your name nor location will be used.—F. H. R.

Children Prefer The Old Favorites As Film Material

School children from eight to 15 years of age, representatively selected from New York and New Orleans public schools, answering a question submitted by the National Board of Review: What books would you like to see made into motion pictures?" gave the greatest vote to "Treasure Island," already released by MGM.

Other books receiving a number of votes were: "Little Men," "The Odyssey," "The Last of the Mohicans," "Robin Hood," "An Old-Fashioned Girl," any "Little Colonel" stories, "Patty," "The Five Little Peppers," "Gulliver's Travels," "Stover at Yale," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Captain Blood," "Anne of Green Gables," "Honeybunch," "The Call of the Wild," "Nobody's Boy" and "Nobody's Girl," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The House of Seven Gables," "Seventeen," "Julius Caesar," "Ivanhoe," "The Three Musketeers," "David Copperfield," "Green Mansions" and "Jo's Boys."

The list of favorites receiving one or more votes is indicated by the following: "The Tennessee Shad," "David Goes to Greenland," "Renfrew's Pony Trail," "Princess of Mars," "War Lords of Mars," "The Man Who Was Thursday," "The Swiss Family Robinson," "The Importance of Being Earnest," "Hamlet," "The Taking of the Bastile," "Knute Rockne—Man Builder," "The Last of the Plainsmen," "Mr. Isaacs," "Eight Cousins," "The Poor Little Rich Girl," "Rose in Bloom," "A Little Princess" and "The Girl Next Door."

The younger element also requested "more baseball stories," "some basketball stories," "any of Gene Stratton Porter's books," "some Andersen fairy tales," "any colorful biography," etc., etc.

A recent meeting of the Young Reviewers, a group of children, from eight to 15 years, organized by the National Board to review and discuss pictures, was featured by the remark of one eight-year-old, during a discussion of child actors, who said: "If they can act it's all right, but it's better when they have grown people in the picture with them who can act, too." There was, it is reported, enthusiastic agreement.

Reports Pictures Make Child Lax

Changes in the attitude of children under the influence of the motion picture are more frequently in the direction of laxer standards, such alteration in outlook being retained for a longer period than changes in the direction of more strict standards, according to Professor Vernon Jones of Clark University, reporting to the forty-second annual meeting of the American Psychological Association at Columbia University last week.

The basis of the report was the study of three large classes in a school in a poor section of New Haven. In all cases, he reported, the change was in the expected direction as indicated by the emphasis in the film. Used in the study were "The Champ," "Fast Companions," "Abraham Lincoln," "Tom Brown of Culver," shown two at a time, with a week intervening before showing of the second two.

Results were obtained by giving attitude tests to the children before and after seeing the films and repeating the tests six months later. Changes in attitude were obtained by comparison of the test results of children who had seen the films with those of children who had not. The pictures selected were used because they raised certain moral issues.

Free Film Courses, State Sponsored, Begin in New York

Its aim is to provide "wholesome entertainment for the school children of New York," declared George J. Ryan, president of the board of education.

Theatres Accept New Code, Asking Labor Revisions

The League of New York Theatres, Inc., and the National Association of Legitimate Theatres, Inc., meeting separately in New York late last week, approved the revised code for the legitimate theatre, with the exception of one section. That section would give employees the right to complain to the Industrial Relations Committee against violations by employers.

Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive adviser of the league and vice-chairman of the Legitimate Theatre Code Authority, held that employers should have the same right as labor to go before the Industrial Relations Committee on violations. He said he did not know what Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA division administrator, would do about inserting that recommendation into the code, but indicated that if the request were refused the league and association would accept the situation.

The league also indorsed the recent action of Actors' Equity that no pay cuts be allowed by managements in players' salaries until the management's books have been submitted to Equity. It also would be glad to cooperate with Equity in protecting players' contracts, and to prevent the "motion picture industry from stealing our actors," said Dr. Moskowitz.

An amendment will be voted by the league October 8 to increase the board of governors from seven to 10 members. A nominating committee, named to draw up a slate for next year, includes L. Lawrence Weber, chairman; Gilbert Miller, Rowland Stebbins and Max Gordon.

The revised theatrical code puts stringent restrictions on theatre ticket sales, and raises the salaries of certain classes of actors and other employees. Wages of ushers, scrubwomen and such employees are set at a minimum of 40 cents per hour for a 35-hour week, with time and a half for overtime. Employees and employers get equal power in the code authority.

FILMS TOP AMUSEMENT FIELD IN MEXICO CITY

Only Six Stage Theatres Left of 23 Operating in 1924; Legitimate Is Seeking Aid

By JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

The handwriting on the wall that the cinema is much wanted and that the playhouse is out in these parts has become bolder. It is virtually a certainty that Mexico City will soon find itself in a unique position among world metropolises—a first class city with but one playhouse, and the patrons of that lone thespian temple wobbling in favor of the silver screen.

This town now has but six stage theatres of the 23 that functioned in 1924. The other 17 have either been converted into cinemas or have been pulled down or become stores. During the past decade, Mexico City public taste has swung decidedly toward pictures. One by one, houses of whom their owners proudly asserted at their inauguration that they would ever be dedicated to thespian art, have been wired and made into picture palaces. The biggest jolt in this regard was what recently happened to the venerable Teatro Principal, claimed to be the Americas' oldest playhouse. After two and a half centuries the theatre went cinema.

Three of Remaining Six Go Cinema

Now five of the six remaining playhouses are quitting the stage. Three of them will be cinemas. Of this trio, the Teatro Iris has already been wired and will start its film career in August. Work starts soon preparing the Teatro Politeama, revue and musical comedy house, for pictures, with inauguration in that field set for the national independence holidays this month. It is also expected that soon after Columbus Day, the staid old Teatro Arbeu, home of concerts, recitals, lectures, art theatricals and the like, will be exhibiting pictures along with the best of them.

Two other old theatres are going to quit art altogether. One of them, the Teatro Fabregas, built in honor of Virginia Fabregas, Mexico's ace dramatic actress and which has struggled long and hard to uphold the drama here, is to be renovated into new accommodations for the national senate. The other, the Teatro Lirico, show window for burlesque is to be torn down.

Mexican Thespians Worried

This decimation of theatres will leave but the Teatro Ideal to carry the stage tradition in the city. There is talk that the owners of that house, eyeing the revenues of the proprietors of theatres that became cinemas, will eventually surrender to the amusement trend. Mexico City exhibitors predict that the near future will find the town supporting no fewer than 100 cinemas. There are now 54 picture houses.

The success of the cinema has worried the Mexican thespians and kindred theatre employees into holding a national convention in Mexico City to determine what can be done to prevent the stage from giving up the ghost. The session has brought forth plenty of verbal fireworks against films and some definite action. The meeting has petitioned President General Abelardo L. Rodriguez to exert action toward extending the theatre's days, or even nights, by forbidding the cinemas to function after eight o'clock each evening, so as to force the night crowds into the stage houses.

The municipal government has hearkened to the wails of the thespians and given them a sop in the form of exempting all stage performances, including operas, operettas, musical comedies, concerts and revues from civic taxes. The motion pictures and all other forms of amusement are still assessed.

Exhibitors, distributors and other motion picture men are sitting safely atop the Mexican amusements world, it is proved by figures compiled by the department of national statistics. These official data demonstrate that in the Mexico City district people prefer the cinema to all other forms of amusement. The gross last year was 8,803,525.88 pesos (about $2,495,000, U. S.) while that for 1932 was 8,573,952.60 pesos. Tickets sold for these amusements in 1933 totaled 21,167,245, with the 48 cinemas then functioning vending 18,123,748 at 5,623,416.93 pesos for 20,061 performances. The eleven theatres operating here last year were runners up in public favor to the films, but were outnumbered 18 to one in attendance by the screen houses. The theatres sold 1,866,250 tickets at a gross of 1,471,560.21 pesos for 4,025 shows.

The department's figures showed that last year the three district bullfights arenas, Mexico's big time stands for this "sport," attracted but 393,215 cash customers for 817,739.41 pesos at their 97 functions.

Decency Drive Meets Response

The American crusade against indecent pictures has been accorded hearty response in Ciudad Juarez on the border, over the River from El Paso, Tex. Thirty thousand residents of that town declared in writing that they will stay away from all cinemas in their city as well as El Paso that exhibit off color pictures.

Ciudad Juarez is the first Mexican community to fall in line with the clean-picture drive that is now progressing in the United States. It is predicted that the border town's example will be followed by the folk of other Mexican communities.

Helen A. Mehrmann, Comedienne, Is Dead

Helen Alice Mehrmann, who appeared on the stage and in motion pictures during the last days of the silent film, died in Oakland, Cal., Monday after a long illness.

Miss Mehrmann had played in Mack Sennett comedies for a number of years.

Throngs See "Night of Stars"

Approximately 90,000 people crowded the Yankee Stadium in New York last week to see "Night of Stars," a huge benefit performance for German Jews. Numerous radio, screen and stage stars participated.

Equity Rules on Wage Reductions

The Council of the Actors' Equity Association in New York has determined to establish a permanent "cuts board" at Equity headquarters, to which a theatre management desiring to introduce a reduction in players' salaries must submit his arguments and be prepared to substantiate those arguments by showing his books.

It has been decided, also, that even though the cuts board is agreed as to the justification of a reduction, it will not force members to take the cut. If the cuts board refuses the management's request for a cut, no member of Equity may accept it on his own responsibility. No cuts may be made in salaries of $50 or less, nor may any cut cause a salary to fall below that figure.

The procedure was agreed upon by the Council September 11 and was deemed to be in full effect on September 18. The legislation within Equity is designed primarily to halt the abuses which it is claimed grew out of the widespread policy of salary reductions instituted by almost all managements during the depression period. Reductions, it is said, were often ordered without sufficient justification on the part of the management.

IEPA Offers Plan to MPTO

The Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association, recently formed in Philadelphia, has asked the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, with which it has been at odds for some time, to lend its support to a "definite program for immediate relief for the independent exhibitor." The request is made in the second issue of the new publication of the IEPA, called the "Independent Exhibitors Film Bulletin," which is, according to its subcaption, " . . . dedicated to the protection of their (independents') interests."

The publication points out that the record of exhibitor organizations in the territory is one "of utter futility," and asks "one strong independent organization free from producer and chain theatre control." It suggests that the MPTO unit "try" the IEPA plan for one year, "not the ten years that we have tried yours so unsuccessfully. If we fail to show results the officers of this organization will step down to make way for others."

The IEPA plans to go to the public in the territory following its failure to obtain cooperation from Warner Theatres in certain situations where independent exhibitors are shut out of product, according to the IEPA's charge. Every effort will be made to enlist the sympathy of the people, the bulletin declares.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ending September 22, 1934, from 100 houses in 18 major cities of the country, reached $1,115,508, a decrease of $7,588 from the total for the preceding calendar week, ending September 15, when 101 houses in 18 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,123,096.

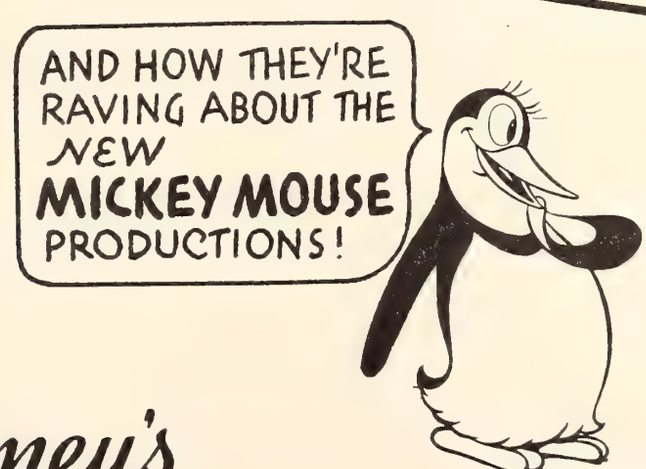
LOOKEE! LIBERTY MAGAZINE GIVES 4 STARS TO THREE MORE SILLY SYMPHONIES!

Liberty



★★★★ THREE SILLY SYMPHONIES

The Flying Mouse, Peculiar Penguins, The Wise Little Hen. Walt Disney color cartoons.

EVEN the greatest players turn out occasional inferior pictures, but there has yet to be a Silly Symphony which hasn't given perfect lilting and delightful entertainment. Ever since Three Little Pigs broke all records for Broadway re-runs, interest has so mounted in the doings of grasshoppers, ants, pigs, flowers, and rodents that these fantasies—with the possible exception of Mickey Mouse, also a Disney creation—are now the most enthusiastically greeted items in the varied Hollywood output.

The new Sillies—Peculiar Penguins, The Flying Mouse, The Wise Little Hen—are up to the unsurpassed spellbinding standard Disney has set for himself, to the despair of his legion of imitators.

The Silly Symphonies defy analysis or criticism. It is sufficient merely to announce that they are ready for your enjoyment. Bring the children along too.

The Box Office Measures Creative Talent In Cold Figures

Box office figures represent the true value of the creative talent of the screen, guiding production along lines indicated by box office performance and public response.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Box Office Champions, compiled and published for each month since October, 1931, based on a nation-wide report of box office figures, has been invaluable to motion picture executives as a judgment on their activities and as a mark for the future.

Similarly figures gathered and published by MOTION PICTURE DAILY have served to measure the attainments and contributions of the screen's creative workers.

They have served exhibitors as a foundation for profitable bookings and for extended exploitation efforts.

The forthcoming BOX OFFICE CHECK-UP will analyze and summarize the year's outstanding screen successes in terms of the box office and indicate other factors that have contributed to the notable achievements of recent months.

THE BOX OFFICE CHECK-UP of 1934

QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS, 1790 Broadway, New York

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Ida Grove, Iowa

DEAR HERALD:

When we go through Plainview, Nebraska, we always stop to see J. J. Hoffman, who operates the Plainview theatre, and we seldom find him at home. This time when we came through Plainview we were told that he and his wife had gone to Omaha. We were glad to learn this because we knew that he would get a good feed at Hay's cafe, while if he had stayed at home he would probably have had to eat cold potatoes while his wife was out playing golf. That's the reason why he has dwindled down to 190 in his B.V.D.'s.

A. A. Ulm of the Orpheum theatre at Randolph, Neb., is still running at large. We wanted to see Mrs. Ulm, because she is among the finest ladies of the land, but they live over the theatre and climbing stairs is about the hardest work we do, and besides that A. A. stood around watching us all the while. He told us that if the HERALD would cut out our Column he would consent to take it out of the postoffice occasionally. We told him if he would pay for his subscription the HERALD would be sent to him occasionally. Then he flashed a receipt on us for two more years' subscription, and we drove away.

Kind-hearted Dalton

We drove through Sioux City. That's the town where they sell so many hogs. We drove right on through the town because we were afraid they might put us in the wrong pen, but before we got there we called on Ralph Dalton of the Osmond theatre at Osmond, Neb. Ralph was fully dressed in the raw except that he had on a pair of overalls. He claimed to be the chef while his wife was doing the family washing. Ralph always gave his wife the easy job to do, he's so good-hearted that way. Then we stopped to see Miss Kathleen Voter, who operates the Auditorium at Laurel. We always stop to see Miss Voter because she is a very interesting person to talk to. Besides that she knows a whole lot about the show business and is a strong advocate of clean pictures.

We have traveled as far west this fall as Sterling, Colorado, and the best prospect for corn we have seen is around Holstein, Iowa. Holstein is where they raise enough popcorn to keep every kid in the United States busy all winter shaking a popper. Holstein is where the Holstein cows and the Wooden-Shoe Dutch come from. Fred Levey operates the theatre there and claims to be a Holland Dutchman and wears wooden shoes. We asked Fred if he was a relative of our friend Lew Levey, who is a branch manager at Des Moines, and he said he wasn't. We were glad to learn this, for Lew has enough hanging on him now.

Mrs. Levey said she was going to write to the HERALD and ask them if they knew we were at large and what the number of our cell was. Fred told her she had better sit over on the other side of the room. Then we got into the car and drove away while they were trying to coax us to stay overnight, but we wanted to get down here to Ida Grove to see Harry Day and Mrs. Harry Day, who operate the King theatre.

The boys were out in the street shooting firecrackers and guns on the 4th of July when Harry was born and he became so scared that he has been gun-shy ever since, and when we pulled our gun to make him subscribe for the HERALD he jumped through a window and that's the last we saw of him, but the next morning we learned that he was hiding in Bill Bowker's hayloft at Dunlap, Iowa. That's just how it goes, we never get to shoot an exhibitor, they always get away before we can pull the trigger, but then some of 'em are about half shot anyhow. Mrs. Day said that when she came home from a whist party last spring Harry had set a couple of hens in the bathtub and had gone to bed with his rubber boots on. We looked up his record on our list and found that he had paid his subscription to the HERALD to September, 1935. That's just the way it is with these Iowa guys, they are so doggone afraid that they might miss a copy that they keep their subscriptions paid a year or more ahead, and then kick because we call on 'em.

Night Kittenball Plague

Say, we want to call the attention of you boys to something that you probably already know, and that is that when night kittenball strikes your town the attendance at your theatre will remind you of the effects of a smallpox epidemic. Over here in Iowa we find that night kittenball is worse on theatres than grasshoppers in South Dakota. It is said to be generally sponsored by the electric light company because they want to sell juice. It doesn't seem to be like the skating-rink fad, in that it doesn't seem to wear out, but runs from spring to winter, and the players are quite often those who are on relief who don't even help to support a good resolution. The merchants in some towns, we are told, are sponsoring these kittenball games because they don't cost anything except for the electricity. We wish somebody would open a free store in their town.

There is no use in dwelling on one subject all the time, so let's take up something else. We are still of the opinion that the best way to reach Hollywood and get clean pictures is through the pocketbook, for that will touch 'em when reason won't.

In our travels through northwest Iowa we have seen some excellent corn fields. We have seen some that we believe will yield from 50 to 75 bushels per acre. This condition is very limited and only about one Iowa farmer out of thirty will have any corn to sell, as the bulk of the state won't even raise a nubbin, or so we are told. If the present price of corn stays up where it now is, prosperity will hit these farmers with a bang, but how about the other twenty-nine who have no corn and have to buy it? Don't you think that prosperity to them will look like it had been run through a sick cow? Robbing Peter to settle up with Paul will make Paul feel pretty good but Pete and his whole family are apt to get pretty doggone sore about it.

Bass-Fishing Fever

We stopped at Odebolt to see Mr. Hartsell, who runs the theatre there, but his wife told us that he had gone up to northern Minnesota bass-fishing for a couple of weeks. That's just the way it goes, whenever a man gets the bass fever you can't find him with a search-warrant. We've had that fever at times when we broke out in spots and looked like an alligator. A man will do anything when he gets the bass fever. It's worse than the N.R.A. As soon as a man gets that fever somebody ought to shoot 'em.

A man told us out in California when we were there two years ago that if the HERALD would cut out our Colyum the magazine would probably be worth the price. The ambulance took him to the nearest hospital. We don't know whether he lived or not. Then the other day an exhibitor told us that the picture critic for the magazine must have poor eyesight since he never sees any bad pictures. Maybe he is like Uncle 'Leazer Biggs was when he said that all whiskey was bad, but some was worse than others, but then we shouldn't talk that way, we live in a prohibition state. (We are not speaking personally, we had reference to Nebraska.)

P. S.—Harry Day wired the chief of police this morning to know if we had left town yet.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Columbia

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—I read a report on this by an exhibitor and was a little afraid of it, but it proved a very satisfying picture for bargain nights. Holt goes better here in action pictures.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—A good program picture. Gave good satisfaction here. Interesting story.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. City and country patronage.

LADY IS WILLING, THE: Leslie Howard, Binnie Barnes, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Sir Nigel Playfair—Our outstanding mistake is in having played this picture. It should be canned and junked. Boresome to the extreme. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 17-18.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe, Gregory Ratoff, Miriam Jordan—This is a good program picture. We played it too old to get anything out of it in the way of satisfactory business, but those we did get said it was good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. Town and country patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis—This is a very good picture and the best ever from Joe E. Brown. It is full of comedy, drama, romance and thrills, and will please the entire family. It is a typical circus picture and should prove a great business getter. Here's hoping Brown will continue making this type of show. The trailer sold the picture well in advance and we played one day to best business in months. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Good. I mean extra good.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Aline MacMahon—They don't come any worse than this one. If they do, I have not seen it. It is poor from start to finish. Reaching for laughs and not getting them. Should have been sealed in the can and left there. A general exodus during the showing and me behind the office chimney when they came out.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown, Alice White—They did not give Joe Brown much story to go on in this one. In fact, I think that it is the thinnest that we have run. He does the best that he can with it but it is nothing to cheer about. It will get by all right, but it could have been a whole lot better with a better scenario.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—It is OK. Don't worry what others have said, old Joe E. gets them in. Running time, 68 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown, Alice White—There is plenty of entertainment even though it may not reach the height of some of the Joe E. Brown hits. Alice White seems to be improving with age and she looks young enough to make good in many more pictures. A fair drawing card.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES: Hugh Williams—Pass this up or double bill it. A percentage picture that didn't take in the guarantee and they didn't like it besides. This is another "export picture" from Hollywood.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES: Helen Twelvetrees—The beginning of this picture is great. The playing is felt right in your heart. One would think from this music the picture would be just what they are all looking for, but it ends so differently.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—You can bring them in with this one. Drew one of the largest crowds in two days we have ever had. Try and run a kid matinee after school and your kid trade will advertise it. Good and clean and one for the family to see. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, Claire Trevor, James Dunn—Good show for the whole family. And it pleased the customers. Played Sept. 9-10.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: James Dunn, Shirley Temple—Hardly necessary to report on Shirley Temple's pictures. If she isn't next to Will Rogers in drawing power it's your fault.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—You might go to Mexico, Idaho, Ontario, but you will never find another Shirley Temple. Boys, this little star means lots to our box office and when you have a chance give her a big hand. Her act in "Baby Take a Bow" gladdens the hearts of our little folks and our dads and mothers long for a Shirley Temple.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Pat Paterson, John Boles, Spencer Tracy—It's a Fox 1934 special and I am telling you it will please. We can make meat and bread from pictures like this. Played July 2.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CALL IT LUCK: Pat Paterson, Herbert Mundin, Charles Starrett—Nice clean feature; little draggy in spots. Better leave Mundin in supporting casts; he will get his comedy off better. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—A splendid audience picture that appeals to all classes A story with originality and cleverness. Because of Lloyd's absence from the screen for such a long period, and the weakness of his last attempts at talking pictures, it was difficult to get business on this production; but one or two pictures like this one will soon regain him the tremendous popularity he once enjoyed. Running time, 99 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3-4.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—A fairly good picture. Clean and wholesome. For some reason, did not draw as well as expected. Had a bigger second night than first. Running time, 76 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, James Dunn, Ginger Rogers—Gaynor, Farrell still draw a crowd. Played Aug. 25-26.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—Some liked it, others did not. This pair seems to be slipping with the poor stories they are getting. Give them another story like "Sunny Side Up" and believe we will see a big difference at the box office.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland—Good mystery. Ran only one night but will stand two anywhere. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 5.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—It took a long time fixing up for the party but when all was fixed the party started big and had a fine ending. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien, Mary Brian—Fox sure handed us a lemon in this one. Such a picture as this sure makes me sick. It might have gone over in Eve's days, when the world was young. Running time, 72 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—A second "David Harum" from Fox. My only error was that I didn't extend my playing time at least double my general policy. My advice to Fox is to watch the Rogers starring vehicles very carefully so that they might not go amiss. As they now are, they are tremendous B. O. grossers. At least 50 per cent believe this better than "Harum." I believe so also. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Sept. 12-13.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Here's the old meal ticket—Will Rogers. The bills keep piling up and then after a Rogers picture, we go out and pay some on account and re-establish our credit. "Handy Andy" is a dandy audience picture. The laughs are so spaced that they are about three minutes apart throughout the entire picture. Now that Marie Dressler has passed away, Will Rogers seems to be the biggest drawing card on the screen. At least he is in this section. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10-11.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—This is a sweet picture. Should go big in Swedish communities. It will go great any place and please everyone. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10.—D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minnesota. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Here's one that kept our week-end audiences in good humor throughout every performance. And for some reason or other, they sensed that it was going to be good and paid their money to see it. Result—everybody happy. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Aug. 23-24-25.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—This is a very good picture that pleased all of my patrons. It is entirely different from the usual musical production. This is great entertainment for the whole family and has plenty of music, dances, comedy and a bit of romance. The excellent cast adds much to the show and should prove excellent drawing names. Played one day to good business and pleased all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 13.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—Warner Baxter draws fairly well but he's slipping with this type of material.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

Mayfair

BADGE OF HONOR: "Buster" Crabbe, Ruth Hall—A good "Honor" picture. Was well received by our patrons. Running time, 68 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MGM

CHAINED: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Stuart Erwin, Otto Kruger—Good Gable and Crawford show. Stuart Erwin adds to the picture. The customers complimented it, so that's all that matters. Played Sept. 13-14.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—This is a very good picture that pleased our entire audience. It is a romantic melodrama pleasingly told. There is nothing offensive about this and this fact should be stressed in your advertising. Many reports state this is offensive but our patrons disagree with that statement. Don't fail to play this if you want to do a good business. Played two days to average business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 10-11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Lionel Barrymore—A very good picture. Gave good satisfaction to all that we got in to see it. Deserved better patronage. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. City and country patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: All Star Musical—I can most certainly agree with the exhibitor who said a few weeks ago that the biggest thing about this picture was the press book. The only thing he forgot to mention was Jimmy Durante's nose, of which we saw too much. Laurel and Hardy were the best things in it, and they were only on for just a few minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell—Gable and Powell both considered big stars and they are good to draw at my theatre when they are put in pictures suitable in their class of acting, but in this Gable goes to Sing Sing and Powell resigns as Governor of New York. Running time, 95 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—A good comedy mystery story with plenty of excitement . . . the type that will entertain every minute. Played Sept. 15.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—This is one of the greatest thrill pictures of the year. It is a melodramatic comedy with plenty of thrills, comedy and romance. This is good entertainment for the entire family, but would draw better with the "murder" left out of the title. The last reel of the picture makes this show what it is. Played one day to very good business and pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—This is a good picture, enjoyed by most. Good crowd. Played Sept. 4-5.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Gary Cooper, Marion Davies—Parts in this picture are fine, but when it comes to the war parts we all have had enough. But we must go on, too much invested to become hopeless. The comment is on now for cleaner pictures but my wish is for pictures for drawing them in better, especially the second night.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—What a pleasure it is to run a picture like this one! Had the town talking about it. Some came to see it the second day, so they must have gone for it. The scene where the four Mills Bros. sing "Sleepy Head" cannot be beaten. Played to the best crowds in six months and everyone went home happy, as well as myself.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—A high class picture in every way. One naked scene which would be covered more no doubt in future pictures, but which don't take up enough footage to bother much. I thought that the death scene of Gene Raymond dying of tuberculosis was stretched out much too long and the graveyard cough repeated too often. These are but minor criticisms upon a picture which deserves high praise. Drawing power, while above average, was not enough to cover the extra cost of this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—A very good mystery drama with much more humor than in most pictures of this type. The only fault I can find is the excessive drinking; enough is consumed to float a battleship. Drawing power of this above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Another detective picture. If your people like pictures like this, OK with me.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Johnny Mack Brown—Not an outstanding picture, but pretty well liked. Fair crowd. Played Sept. 1-2.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA! Wallace Beery—In my opinion, this is one of the best pictures made in the 1933-34 group. Didn't do great business, as the picture is a bit too gruesome for women and children. Beery does the best acting of his career in this picture. Supporting cast is good. Running time, 114 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10-11.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

Monogram

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—Ray Walker is all right. This is a good little picture. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Sept. 12-13.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

HE COULDN'T TAKE IT: Ray Walker, Virginia Cherrill—Second picture from Monogram and it is a very fine little picture. First Monogram picture I played was "Manhattan Love Song" and it was a big disappointment. But "He Couldn't Take It" cannot be compared to the other film.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—Ray Walker, because of his liveliness, youth and refreshing vivacity is well liked here. In "The Loudspeaker" Ray becomes a bit too "freshy." As a whole "Loudspeaker" is a fair picture on a double feature program. Running time, 71 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—Pretty good western. Inaccurate direction. Public address speakers on every port in grandstand during rodeo performances and the announcer uses a megaphone. Played Sept. 7-8.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

RETURN OF CASEY JONES: Charles Starrett, Ruth Hall—Good railroad story that everyone enjoyed. Played it with Baer-Carnera fight pictures and with my usual good luck, it rained us out both nights. If you can get them in, they will like the picture.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

SHOCK: Ralph Forbes, Gwenllian Gill—This is a very good picture that should please any patron. It is a drama of the war presenting the story of a shell-shocked victim. It is localed partly in London and partly in the front line trenches. It is good entertainment for the whole family and is one of the best war pictures in some time. We played one day to good business and pleased very well. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Sept. 7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino, Lona Andre, Monte Blue—Outside of an objectionable dance scene, this gave our customers satisfaction. Business normal. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 29-30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March, Evelyn Venable, Sir Guy Standing, Helen Westley—Very, very good. March surpasses about anything he has ever done. Much fodder contained here for the minds of country folk. But still a pretty "heavy" picture. Was well received, but only by those few who made the most of an opportunity to see it. Running time, 78 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

FEROCIOUS PAL, THE: Kazan—the Wonder Dog, Ruth Sullivan, Robert Manning—I picked this up as an experiment—whether or not I could substitute dog pictures for westerns, because of the latter's scarcity. The experiment is a failure. The plot in "Ferocious Pal" is an entertaining one, but sound and light was very, very bad. Running time, 55 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley, Patricia Ellis—Here is a good picture of the slapstick variety and will please all who like this type of entertainment. It is strictly comedy fare with plenty of wisecracks, together with a touch of drama, romance and thrills. We played this on a late Saturday night show and our patrons thought it good entertainment but rather silly. Good business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Adolphe Menjou, Shirley Temple—Hardly necessary to report on Shirley Temple's pictures. If she isn't next to Will Rogers in drawing power it's your fault.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper, Lila Lee, John Wray—Fair picture. Patrons like westerns. Pleased about seventy-five per cent. Fair crowd. Played Aug. 30-31.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—While some managers have reported adversely in reference to this attraction, our patrons were very well pleased. Normal business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson—Just a fair musical. Carl Brisson has a nice voice but is hard to understand. Jack Oakie yells his way through ten reels, much to the disgust of the patrons. Duke Ellington's band is too hot for motion pictures; the music sounds too brassy. They should confine their efforts to jazz. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Sept. 2-4.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh—A good program picture. Nothing big, but will satisfy anybody. Gertrude Michael is sure good to look at. Paramount should give her more and better parts. Fair business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 12-13.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple, Sir Guy Standing—A sure box office attraction. Everybody wants to see Shirley Temple. While I don't think she is quite as good in this picture as in "Little Miss Marker," still you will do more business with this picture, due to the advertising given her in "Little Miss Marker." Running time, 82 minutes. Played Sept. 15-16.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa. Above average patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie—The public is getting awfully tired of Jack Oakie trying to do a Lee Tracy. Faramount sems to be fumbling around in the dark and don't seem to know how to make a good first class musical. Bing Crosby is the only star they have that can put over a musical picture. Running time, nine reels. Played Sept. 6-7-8.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—A well liked picture. Miss Sidney does the "Princess-substitution" act for the real Princess. Our patrons liked this play very much and believe it suitable for Sunday playing.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Here is a nice little comedy that gave excellent satisfaction; but business was decidedly off. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Ethel Merman, Leon Errol—Everyone liked this that likes Bing Crosby. Drew well and pleased about ninety per cent. Played Sept. 8-9.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Sir Guy Standing, Judith Allen, Tom Brown, Gertrude Michael—A strong feature, produced with an excellent cast. Thrilled our audience. Business a little above normal. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, David Holt, Helen Morgan—We look for this picture to make a star out of David Holt. Be sure to play this picture and don't fail to advertise David Holt—another Shirley Temple. Played Sept. 1-2.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa. Above average patronage.

RKO

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Rochelle Hudson, Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher—A "Matrimonial Bureau" story. Stuart Erwin very good, as also were Rochelle Hudson, Pert Kelton and Skeets Gallagher. The political angle shown in this feature adds to the general hilarity. Business fair. Running time, 74 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—These stars are popular here. They help chase the blues away and that is the kind of entertainment the majority are looking for these days. Consider this picture better than the average Wheeler and Woolsey. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Aug. 23-24-25.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. General small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is one of the best this team has made. As a comedy picture it gave good satisfaction. Most people have forgotten how to laugh in these parts, but this one seemed to get out most of them and they said it was good. Played Sept. 9-10.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—The threatened shortage of westerns has led me to buy up a few of RKO's old ones. "Come On Danger" held up as good as any western which I have ever played. I hope that the rest of the Keenes are as good. Running time, 55 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley—They liked it but don't let them in on the last five minutes or the picture is spoiled. Played Sept. 11-12.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—This is just N. G. for drawing power; Ann Harding can't bring them in. People that saw it liked it, but they were few. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10-11.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

FINISHING SCHOOL: Ginger Rogers, Frances Dee, Bruce Cabot—Good program picture. Pleased them all. The stars fine and balance of cast good. Gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—A little old, but a good one to pick up if you have not played it. The age of it hurt our business, but it still is a pleasing feature. Some nice chorus work and individual dancing. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3-4.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

GOODBYE LOVE: Charles Ruggles, Verree Teasdale—If you want to keep your pictures up to moral standards, don't show this one, as it is made up of dirty cracks. Outside of this, it is fair comedy. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Aug. 29-30.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—Go after the women on this and don't worry about the Legion of Decency. You have stars and story and with a good shorts program of high class comedy you'll give them entertainment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Paul Lukas, Frances Dee, Jean Parker, Edna May Oliver, Douglass Montgomery—FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—Picked up these three pictures after signing my RKO contract. The result was they were instrumental in making August the best month of the past twelve. It proves they will come out for old pictures if they are high class productions. Played August, 1934.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, El Brendel, James Gleason, Richard "Skeets" Gallagher—Our patrons like comedy. Pitts, Brendel and Gleason are always good. Pert Kelton is good. Drew well. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Aug. 23-24.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—A very few of my patrons care for Leslie Howard. As a consequence, his vehicles do proportionate business, that is, heart-rending for both the box office and the manager. "Of Human Bondage," nevertheless, is a very fine, well-produced and directed picture.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, Edward Everett Horton, Nat Pendleton—Not very strong; probably pleased 75 per cent. Fair business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Aug. 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix—Sunday matinee was fair but it nose-dived for the night and two succeeding days. But Irene Dunne can sing anyway. The title needs explaining and the 11x14's will keep them away. Remember the old General Film series of two reelers of "Stingaree?"—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

THIS MAN IS MINE: Irene Dunne, Ralph Bellamy—A mighty fine picture. Good story and fine cast and both stars extra good. Gave good satisfaction to all. Played Sept. 13-14.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

State Rights

TRACY RIDES: Tom Tyler—This western was not as good as usual. We didn't have any comments good or bad. Follow this up with a good short and it will pass. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.

WESTERN RACKETEER: Bill Cody—We have never played a Western with so little to it worth seeing. Just the poorest ever. A few rodeo shots shuffled in without any reason for being there, some of which were so washed out from long usage they were only faintly visible. Played Sept. 14-15.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

United Artists

BORN TO BE BAD: Loretta Young, Cary Grant—It will satisfy and please all.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CATHERINE THE GREAT: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Elizabeth. Bergner—This is a splendid picture. Story interesting and well acted by a good cast. Stars fine.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. City and country patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Constance Cummings, Jack Oakie—A very good action picture. Telephone linemen mixed up with swindlers. A bit of Oakie slapstick and a Spencer Tracy-Constance Cummings romance about complete the story. Business fair. Running time, 77 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Constance Cummings, Jack Oakie—Good action comedy—the type that pleases the average patron. Played Sept. 11-12.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett, Franchot Tone, Tullio Carminati, Helen Westley—A little old, but pleased. No drawing power, as Benett is nil here. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27-28.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

ROMAN SCANDALS: Eddie Cantor—This is not nearly as good a picture as "The Kid From Spain." In my opinion Eddie Cantor is about through in motion pictures. Played this picture on a holiday and barely grossed film rental. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Paul McBridge, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

WHOOPEE (reissue): Eddie Cantor—This is one of the best pictures that I have ever seen. Many of my patrons said it was the best they had seen. A very beautiful picture. I received a very good print. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

Universal

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—The Austrian atmosphere, for once, did not injure the value of the picture. The escapades and antics of two girls holds the attention of the audience. "Countess of Monte Cristo" registered very well at the B. O. Running time, 78 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—This is an excellent program picture that will please the average picture fan. Nothing big, but a good little show. The story is well directed and the acting perfect. It is a story of a practical joker and the entire show is one joke after another. It is rather different from the usual run of pictures and should please all. Played one day to good business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Sept. 14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Tehatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Berton Churchill, Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—Nice comedy romance that will keep your patrons laughing. Has a bit of action, no draggy spots, the kind you like to run. Had a nice business; one the family will like. Churchill gives a nice piece of acting. Recommend it to your patrons. Running time, 78½ minutes. Played Aug. 24-25.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains—Another scary crow picture. But it drew a fair audience. Running time, 70 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: Margaret Sullavan, John Boles—If you have the new U product bought but have not as yet run this, pick it up to put Margaret Sullavan over and be sure to run a cartoon on the end so the women won't go out with the makeup running down their cheeks. Played Sept. 9-10.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Esther Ralston, Victor Moore—This is a natural; it will draw and please. The only mistake I made was not to run it on Sunday. If Universal keeps up the stride they have set in their past eight shows, I won't be sorry I bought their new product. I have seen "There's Always Tomorrow" and "Million Dollar Ransom" screened and they're OK. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Sept. 12-13.—D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minnesota. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Esther Ralston, Victor Moore—A honey of a picture. Has youth and pep and is real entertainment. Universal's product, as a whole, is good small town entertainment. They like "down-to-earth" stories and high-brow stuff. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Sept. 7-8.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams, Johnny Mack Brown, Mary Carlisle—If you want to pick up a football feature for the season, this is a good one. Last year's, but will do you some nice biz if your patrons like a good football story. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Sept. 7-8.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—This is a very good picture that has everything you could expect of a western. It is crammed full of action, fighting, comedy, riding and the necessary romance. Maynard is fast becoming a favorite with our patrons and especially with the kids. This one is sure to please all of your regular western fans and we played one day to very good business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard, Gloria Shea—Our best Saturday night business for some time, but our patrons think this was Maynard's weakest production. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 1. —C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

Warner

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck—It seemed to give satisfaction and drew well the second night. Running time, 66 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HE WAS HER MAN: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—A good crook story, but not good enough for these two stars. Both are favorites here, and people like them in better entertaining stories. The crooked yarns don't take so well. People are about fed up on this bump-'em-off stuff.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOUSEWIFE: George Brent, Bette Davis—Very good picture. Good dialogue, clean and smart. Did extra business on this one. Played Sept. 2.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell—A story of a prizefighter, but not too much fighting. A good little picture throughout. Everybody here enjoyed it. Use the trailer—push your advertising and it will get 'em. A nice business two days. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Sept. 10-11.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.

Short Features

Columbia

LOVE DETECTIVE: Frank Albertson—Poor.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MICKEY'S COVERED WAGON: Mickey McGuire comedy—Average McGuire comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: Mickey McGuire Comedy—A good comedy. Everybody seems to like these kids. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.

LOUISE MACE,
motion picture editor
SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN

"I do not need to tell you that I couldn't "keep house" without the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC. Hundreds of inquiries roll into my department during the year and the ALMANAC usually saves the day and probably my reputation. I can appreciate only to a degree, I'm afraid, the amount of work and research that went into its compilation. It is a work of immeasurable value not only to picture editors but to the whole industry."

MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC

1790 Broadway New York City

SCHOOL FOR ROMANCE: Lou Holtz—It's not a good musical nor a good comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

Educational

ALLEZ OOP: Buster Keaton—Much better than average two-reel comedy, very much better. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

THEN CAME THE YAWN: Treasure Chest Series—A burlesque on a deluxe trailer. Gets about as many laughs as Universal's "Goofytone News" did. Hollywood and show people like this type of stuff better than the audience does. Running time, nine minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

TRAV'LLING THE ROAD: Alexander Gray—A nice filler, all singing, and very good, too. This is the second Song Hit Story that has been good out of the series. The rest were nil. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

MGM

BACK TO NATURE: Todd-Kelly—This is only a fair comedy. Patsy Kelly is a very poor substitute for Zasu Pitts. Hal Roach comedies have fallen below par in comparison with other company's shorts. Running time, 20 minutes.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAUSAGE: Taxi Boys—This is about average entertainment from the Taxi Boys. It is only fair entertainment and quite a few patrons walked out on it. If you must play it, one day will be plenty. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FLYING HUNTERS: This is a very novel and interesting one-reeler and enough different to be well received anywhere. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

GLIMPSES OF ERIN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—These one-reelers are good for certain clientele, but your low-brow patrons will not go for them. Would say they are strictly educational. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronize.

GOING BYE-BYE: Laurel & Hardy—These are the most consistent comedies I have used this season. Pay a little more for them, but they're worth it as you can always feel safe when you have them booked. Running time, 20 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: No. 5—Here's a fair one-reeler that my public just will not go for, as there are very few who have commented favorably. Running time, 8 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

I'LL TAKE VANILLA: Charlie Chase—Personally could not see anything funny about this one, but, judging from the laughs, it pleased. Chase always goes over big here.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLIVER THE EIGHTH: Laurel & Hardy—This is a good comedy with Laurel and Hardy at their best. Plenty of laughs and pleased our entire audience. It is longer than most of their comedies, but much better and adds much to the entertainment. Let's have more of these good shorts. Running time, 28 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum The theatre. Running time, 28 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ONE-TRACK MINDS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—This is only fair entertainment and not up to the usual Pitts-Todd comedy. This team would have done much better with suitable story material. A few laughs and that is about all. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RASSLIN' ROUND: Willie Whopper—These things are too silly to be good and are not even funny. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Paramount

AXE ME ANOTHER: Popeye the Sailor—A cartoon that will please the adults as well as the kiddies. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa. Above average patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S TRIAL: OK Betty Boop cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 9—Such one-reelers will not even come in the filler class. Can't see why any man would buy these if there was any way out without doing so. With but few exceptions, they are all poor. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

MAKING THE ROUNDS: Pallette, Catlett—Fair comedy. However, not as good as some of this team's previous efforts. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. General patronage.

NEW DEAL RHYTHM: "Buddy" Rogers—The same old "Buddy" Rogers. Every time he makes anything, short subject or otherwise, it is a dismal flop. Same thing applies to this. Running time, 8 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

NO MORE BRIDGE: Leon Errol—Here's another has-been as a comedian and only the limber legs puts him over and he had no chance to use them in this one. Running time, 19 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

OIL'S WELL: Chic Sale—Don't understood why Paramount or any other outfit would make and release a thing like this; a lot of hokum that is very boresome; nothing to it at all. Chic Sale is no comedian. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

WILD ELEPHINKS: Popeye, the Sailor—You cannot beat these cartoons. The grown-ups and kids will enjoy them alike, and there is just enough of them to make every one want more. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO

DUMBBELL LETTERS NO. 1 & 2—Very short but gets the laughs. Five minutes of photographed actual letters really received by stores, insurance companies, etc. The more intelligent your audience, the more laughs you'll get. Running time, five minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—This is a beautiful featurette. It has a good story and the color is wonderful. The dance numbers are good as is the singing. This short subject will draw them in even if the feature won't. Running time, 20 minutes.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. General small town patronage.

United Artists

WISE LITTLE HEN, THE: Silly Symphony—Nice for the kids; grown-ups won't care for it. Of course, all Silly Symphonies are good, but some of them don't appeal to adult trade. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

Universal

FULL COVERAGE: Henry Armetta—Nothing to it and too much slapstick. Give them something funny and they will laugh, but not at this kind. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

Warner

GOIN' TO HEAVEN ON A MULE: Merrie Melodies—This is a very good cartoon with music. It is a burlesque of the "Going to Heaven on a Mule" number in Warner Brothers' "Wonder Bar." Running time, 9 minutes.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

HOW D'YA LIKE THAT: George Givot—Just a two-reel comedy. You know what that means and the heroine of this is addicted to alcohol and her husband tries to keep her away from the boys who have it—two sailors in this instance. What an idea. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

PICTURE PALACE: Broadway Brevities—Good vaudefilm type of musical that was well liked. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

WHY DO I DREAM THOSE DREAMS?: Merrie Melodies—This is an excellent one-reel cartoon comedy with music. It is a burlesque of the old story of Rip Van Kinkle. There is plenty of music and a very good comedy. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General partronage.

Serials

Universal

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—The kids like Buck Jones, so that's that. However, everybody laughed at the end of episode two last week as the climax was the "horse jumping off the cliff into the water" which we have had in about every serial and many features for years. Junk that shot, somebody. Running time, 20 minutes each.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslow Stevens, Ada Ince—This is the best serial that I have played for some time. Will build as you play it. Holds the interest of the audience to the end. Running time, 20 minutes per chapter.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

WE POINT WITH PRIDE

Quigley Awards click again as General Manager J. J. Fitzgibbons announces the appointment of May co-winner Ken Finlay to the managership of the newly opened deluxe Royal Theatre, of the Famous Players Canadian Circuit, in Guelph, Ontario.

The promotion is Ken's reward for his splendid work in Montreal that led up to the May honors, in addition to his mentions with Gene Curtis in the winning column every month since the beginning of the Competition.

Thus for the third time the Quigley project is credited directly as being the stepping stone to bigger and better jobs. Three times in nine months have the winners been selected for important promotions, a score to which we may be allowed to point with reasonable pride.

Theatremen who still question the advantages of competing for the Quigley Awards are respectfully referred to Gene Curtis, Ken Finlay or Nevin McCord.

HIGH RATES

Though a number of newspapers, by reducing advertising rates, have conceded that the theatre is entitled to a better break, little progress has been made nationally by the industry to obtain an equitable adjustment, according to the survey in last week's Motion Picture Herald.

Because of the so-called free publicity, many newspapers insist that the present rates are not out of line, which argument might have sufficed some years back. However, with today's insistent and voracious demand by readers for news of the stars and studios, the dailies cannot reasonably fall back on this time worn excuse.

High rates have undoubtedly caused the curtailment of much theatre display advertising, thus forcing managers into newspaper tieups of dubious value that reflect little credit upon the theatres and considerably less upon the dailies.

TO BUILD PRESTIGE

Closely following our recent editorial on the screen-school movement, Paramount now announces a nationwide essay contest on "Cleopatra," offering as prizes scholarships to participating high school and college students between the ages of 16 and 21. It is being done with a great degree of skill, what with the endorsements of "name" educators and contacting teachers of English in high schools and colleges. Provision has also been made for theatres desiring to tie in the national hookup with individual contests as part of their exploitation.

Though the Paramount plan is pointed to increase the picture's grosses, smart managers will also seize upon it to restore some of the theatre's prestige lost in the recent storm.

THE JUVENILE MATINEE

To be followed with interest is the future of the juvenile matinee plan in Harrisburg, Pa., where in cooperation with various civic organizations, the Wilmer & Vincent circuit recently sponsored a screen program made up of short subjects. The experiment, to run 10 weeks, is said to be the result of a quest for a new type of entertainment designed both to return a profit and to answer objections to controversial films.

Not the first of its kind, the Harrisburg plan follows similar projects not wholly successful. However, if the new type of program can be made sufficiently enjoyable to children nurtured upon the actionful Western and gang drama, it may make further progress along this scarce traveled trail.

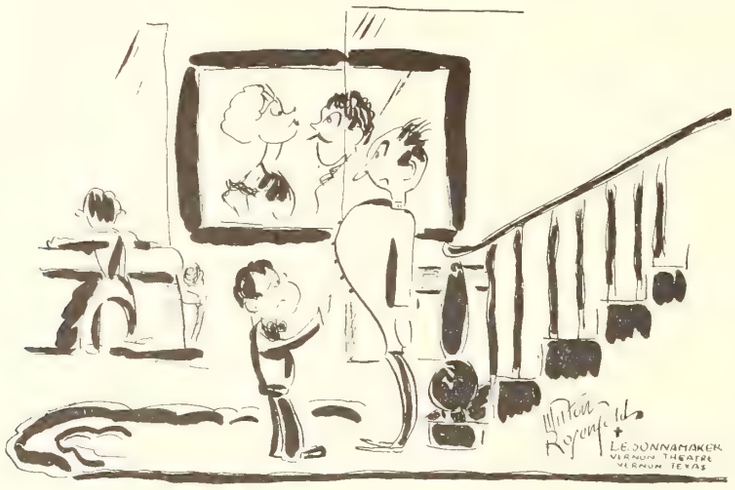
COME AGAIN, FOLKS

Allowing your chairman the opportunity to duck, for a few pleasant hours, the job of putting these pages together, the following members from various parts recently popped into headquarters for a bit of a visit:

Harry Botwick, Portland, Me.; Mark Chartrand and Sonny Shepherd, Miami, Fla.; Larry Carroll, Burlington, Vt.; Ed. M. Hart, Plainfield, N. J.; Sid Holland, Elkhart, Ind., Sig Solomon, Newark, N. J., and Lew Wasserman, Cleveland, Ohio.



To meet and greet the visiting brothers is something of which we'd like to do much more. Thank ye, folks, for stopping by and come see us again.

And now, Jack Cohn urges that exhibitors use advertising and publicity campaigns laid out by the distributors for better grosses. Be that as it may, the Columbia head might also have added that details of these campaigns appear regularly in the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club section.

Three Week Tieup Put Over by White

A series of fashion shows held daily for three weeks was the cooperation obtained by Paramount exploitation manager Bob White on "Melody in Spring" at the Prince Edward Theatre, Sydney, Australia. The idea was utilized by one of the leading department stores to inaugurate the Spring selling season in Australia, the picture receiving generous credits in all the store advertising.

The event was labeled "Fashion Melody in Spring Teas" and a week ahead the main windows of the store were completely covered with mammoth posters (see photo) in which the picture title was included. Similar posters were placed throughout the store, on delivery wagons, and customers notified by phone and further word of mouth advertising given the event by the 4,000 store employees. Distinctive programs were distributed at the store and also posted to customers in their monthly accounts, these containing full mention of the picture and theatre.

White also arranged displays of the song hits in all local and surrounding area music shops; leading hotel and ballroom orchestras were also promoted to play these numbers on their programs and over the air. Distribution of Lanny Ross autographed photos helped to spread the word.

Friary Prints Tide Tables For Local Fishermen

Many theatres in suburban spots include railroad time tables in their advertising, but Manager George Friary, Central, Biddeford, Maine, adapts this gag to the needs of his locality by putting out tide tables for the information of local fishermen, theatre ad carried below.

George also finds profitable a co-op herald, size 8 by 11, carrying 15 small ads in addition to theatre programs. Merchants pay the cost of these in exchange for the distribution at the theatre, an idea that may be worthwhile using in spots where newspaper facilities are limited.

Ties In Dillinger From News Angle

A Dillinger tieup on "Manhattan Melodrama" that was handled almost strictly from the news angle is credited to Manager Mark G. Margolis, Rivoli, Indianapolis, Ind. The picture opened on Sunday, the day of the bandit's demise, and as soon as Margolis got the flash he worked speedily to make the hookup in his Monday morning ads, promoted front page stories, put out heralds and a sound truck.

Mark wisely refrained from sensationalizing his break, and by treating it as news managed to corral a lot of extra business.

Hoover Promotes Stores On Chevvy Giveaway

Manager George Hoover, State, South Manchester, Conn., recently came in for a nice break by cooperating with three of his leading stores on a month's sales stunt for weekly prizes and grand prize of Chevrolet sedan.

Everyone who bought merchandise in the three stores was given coupons, and regulation drawing was held each week on the stage of the theatre. George said that all he had to do was arrange the drawings in exchange for the added business, merchants even coming in for full page co-op ad in which theatre was prominently mentioned

Leggiero Puts Over Usher "Strike" Bally

For his excellent campaign on "Circus Clown," Manager William Leggiero, Ritz Theatre, San Bernardino, Cal., received a well merited First Mention, and what elicited a flock of chuckles for the unique showmanship of this entrant was the snappy street gag, in which the ushers went "on strike," picketing the streets carrying banners (see photo) to the effect that they were striking because of the impossibility of working due to the laughs in the picture. As that section has been afflicted by a flock of industrial strikes lately, Leggiero says the gag gained extra attention.

Every one of the reliable circus stunts was put over, from dressing the house to costuming the staff. Large Joe Brown cutout was placed over box-office, cashier passing tickets through the oversize mouth. Papers tied in nicely, one coming in on classified contest six days ahead, reported to have netted over 300 inches for the date in return for 40 passes. Stores also included ad on style hookups.

Ice cream company put out special "Clown" brick, buying color space on at top of comic pages, and bakery stuffed all packages of bread and cake for two days ahead. Playground pet show was also put on, cracking papers, children parading to theatre after judging of pets. Tieup made with kid club of local store in which 150 names of members were posted on board in store mezzanine, and all youngsters paraded by board to see if names were included. Bill says 75 passes only were necessary in return for the ad barrage put on by merchant.

Of more than passing interest was four page regular newspaper size paper, thousands of which were distributed by leather lunged newsboys in downtown section and from house to house. Scare "cyclone" head was used, the storm referring of course to the date. Enough outside advertising was obtained to lay off the cost of this one which helped spread the word.

Armstrong Arranges Overseas Broadcast

For a buildup on "The Scarlet Empress" John Armstrong, Director of Advertising, Paramount Theatres, London, put over an international tieup in persuading the world's famous Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum to make a wax model of Marlene Dietrich. The overseas angle was tied in by a radio broadcast of the unveiling which was relayed over the NBC network in this country. Florence Desmond, famed movie impersonator, was guest of honor.

John also scored high in promoting the South African government to dress the Dietrich model in ostrich feather trimmed gowns as part of the campaign to increase the sales of ostrich feathers. This, of course, obtained a lot of free space in the papers, and further the famed Selfridge department store tied in by featuring these dress models and advertising them in conjunction with the wax unveiling.

Armstrong also sold British Paramount Newsreel on covering the wax bally, and as the pictures were shown in many theatres throughout the country, this made a splendid advance for the attraction.

These were the highlights of this British member's campaign which received endorsements of all those who were concerned in the exploitation. Each of the stunts was good for countrywide publicity and were reported to have boosted the English grosses on various showings of the Dietrich picture.

CO-WINNER OF MAY AWARD IS PROMOTED

Quigley Honors Win New Post for Ken Finlay; September Deadline, Saturday, Oct. 6

by A-MIKE VOGEL

As announced by J. J. Fitzgibbons, General Manager, Famous Players Canadian Theatres, Ken Finlay, co-winner with Gene Curtis of the Quigley Award for May, has been appointed to the post of manager of the newly opened de luxe Royal Theatre, Guelph, Ontario.

Finlay in cooperation with Curtis, has been a consistent winner of Firsts and Honorable Mentions since the first month, and these successes are reported to have had much to do with his selection for the new job.

The promotion of this Round Tabler marks the third Quigley winner to be stepped up, Gene Curtis, May co-winner, and former manager, Palace, Montreal is now publicity head of Famous Players Canadian, and March winner, Nevin McCord, some weeks ago was appointed to City Manager, Marcus Theatres, Twin Falls, Idaho.

September Judges Appointed

Sufficient time still remains to enter the competition for September. The deadline has been set at midnight, Saturday, October 6, and all campaigns received up to that time will be eligible for the Award. At this writing, entries are being received with every post. Many new names are entered.

Encouragement is coming from fresh sources. Howard Waugh, Warner Theatres, Southern Zone director, a long time member, forwards campaigns from managers in his sector, and joins the long list of Warnerites who are solidly behind the Quigley Awards. From now until the end of the year, it looks like a ding-dong battle.

The judges for the September competition are as follows: Messrs. P. D. Cochrane, Universal Pictures; C. C. Moskowitz, Loew Theatres, and Edward A. Finney, of Monogram Pictures. They will convene soon after deadline so that a winner may be announced in Oct. 13 issue.

For the benefit of those who do not clearly remember the rules of the Quigley competition, on page 59, issue September 1, all the necessary information was carried for guidance of those desiring to enter campaigns. There is nothing difficult in the rules, so send that entry now.

Ed. M. Hart Honored by Governor of New Jersey

The September Quigley Award was to be presented to Manager Ed M. Hart, Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., on Thursday, September 27, by Governor A. Harry Moore of New Jersey, according to word from the Arrangements Committee, as this department goes to press. Details and photo of presentation will be carried next week.

Crosby Aids Harry On "Loves Me" Date

To sum up Harry Botwick's newspaper coverage on his preview opening of "She Loves Me Not," this member's statement may be used in which he says that the date received more free lineage in the way of publicity, feature stories and photographs than on any other attraction in the past year.

The tear sheets that Harry sends on back him up amply, and include story on arrival of M. & P. publicity head Tod Browning and George Richardson to witness preview, story and cut of exhibitors, theatremen, city and state officials, Broadway stars who also attended. As arrangements were made to show a one-reel navy picture, Botwick had pictures made of reel being delivered to him by captain of U.S.S. Portland, which also broke the papers, as did a shot of Bing Crosby in Hollywood reading one of the local Portland papers (see photo).

Harry started his radio plugs three weeks ahead, on his program described in these pages a few weeks ago and obtained fine results from a giveaway of stills of the various stars in the picture. Auto parade of new cars led by sound truck playing song hits was promoted into G. A. R. convention parade and added excitement was stirred up by newsboys distributing the press book tabloid.

The entire resort section around Portland was heavily billed, trucks of local news company bannered, many prominent windows obtained and various other click stunts put across for the date on which Botwick reports the best opening day he has had in several months.

Inside carried cast and caricature of players, while back cover announced tickets would be given free to those holding lucky number printed in leaflet.

Special telegrams signed by the stars were sent out to patrons through tie-in with Western Union, imprinted balloons were released from airplane flying over city and lobby was dressed in party style with all the trimmings.

An additional newspaper break that Oscar landed came about when he arrived at theatre one morning and discovered the large Mickey Mouse compo cutout was missing. Papers carried stories to effect that "Mickey" was stolen and a reward was offered for his return.

Dezendorf Uses Villa's Swords for Lobby Display

Jim Dezendorf, Palace Theatre, Marfa, Texas, went to town on his "Viva Villa" campaign certainly having the proper setting, as Villa had often visited locally. Jim managed to secure some of the Mexican leader's personal effects (see photo) that were displayed in lobby. Heralds printed both in Spanish and English were delivered house to house.

Ten days prior cards were tacked on every post and fence throughout city and surrounding towns. Senor Lopez, counsel to the U. S. from Mexico, was present at opening and told of Villa and his manoeuvers. Serialization of the bandit's life ran in newspapers and all prior ads carried plug on coming attraction.

Rosy Opens Headquarters For Stage Attraction

That was a very complete campaign put on by Manager Morris Rosenthal, Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn., on the personal appearance of Duke Ellington and his band, Rosy covering a lot of different angles to bring attention to the date.

Outstanding in the campaign was an Ellington Headquarters, a vacant store prominently located on the main street, in the windows (see photo) and inside, stills of the band and interesting publicity material being arranged in the form of an exhibit. Autographed photos of the bandman were distributed, the gag being unusual enough to keep the spot filled with visitors.

A 30-foot banner hung on a prominent corner building, reported to have been the first time used for theatre advertising, was another profitable idea. Street parade by colored civic organizations on opening night to the theatre also helped.

Rosy reports the success of a special Saturday morning children's show, underwritten by a local newspaper which paid for the special stage acts and gave the event pages of free publicity. Theatre put on a special show consisting of Westerns and shorts, admission being ten cents.

Many Co-operative Ads In Rotsky's "Vanities" Campaign

Those Montreal Round Tablers evidently have the local merchants well sold on the advantages of advertising tieins, a further indication of which is George Rotsky's success on "Murder at the Vanities," the campaign put on while he was at the Capitol. George tied in a number of his merchants on hats, refrigerators, coiffures, hosiery, all of which netted him large display ads in the local press.

A parade of bannered automobiles was put on on opening day, cars carrying girls from various night clubs. Participating department store and night clubs plugged the bally via radio and after the parade the cars and girls were lined up in front of the theatre to be photographed, which of course attracted curious throngs.

Rotsky also put over a lucky number contest in advance with a prominent lunch counter chain in which coupons were given to all customers, drawings taking place at the end of the week. The chain distributed imprinted napkins and George paid for the coupons with a cigarette ad on reverse side.

Lykes Constructs New Flash Theatre Front

Jack Lykes, Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, has built a new flash front that he reports greatly enhances the appearance of his house (see photo). Two large columns built over the smaller corner frames were painted with cool colors; background light gray-blue trimmed in dark blue borders. Decorations are in silver wooden strips and orange cutout designs. Six eight by ten frames for stills are on either side of art posters, so constructed that they may be repainted for frequent use.

For "Paris Interlude" Jack tied up with a local artist for an art exhibit in lobby. Artist had two of his models pose while he sketched. Models distributed cards announcing artist's appearance and theatre plug.

"Rothschild" Second Run Put Over by Shepherd

On the subsequent run of the picture after its local road show engagement, Sonny Shepherd, of the Mayfair, Miami, put together a strong campaign on "House of Rothschild," topped by a newspaper contest sponsored by local realtors who contributed cash prizes and took full page co-op ads to announce the tieup, which was for the best answers to the question "Why Invest in Real Estate Now?"

Classified hookup was arranged in which paper printed and distributed plug cards, theatre giving tickets in return for paid-in-advance want ads. Daily also ran many large size display ads on the stunt. Radio dramatization, endorsement by rabbis, and merchant tieups were also reported to have brought returns.

Baby Contest Featured in Holland's "Baby" Campaign

From Sid Holland, City Manager Elkhart Amusement Co., Elkhart, Ind., an imposing campaign on "Baby, Take a Bow" indicates that much was done and much accomplished. Sid went strongly for lobby animation, promoting motor and hooked up cutout of Temple, having starlet bowing from waist, balloon tying in welcome copy Sidewalk stencil was used and street banner placed across intersection of prominent traffic streets. For a good gag, Sid revived the deaf man stunt, couple traveling street cars, busses, etc. Hotel lobbies, railroad ticket offices and chain stores were covered, and also helpful was house-to-house testimonial gag, in which residents signed names and addresses carried by girl solicitors. Girl in prominent window actually phoning residents was another clicker, phone company promoted for equipment.

Jeweler paid for heralds on a misspelled word contest, guest tickets as prizes which were also given on a photographer tieup to those writing the title of the picture the most times in a designated space on heralds distributed house-to-house. Another standout was Holland's "Miss Elkhart" baby contest put on a week ahead in which scores of children (see photo) filled stage for judging, local and outlying papers carrying loads of publicity on this, and according to Sid being one of the main reasons for the outstanding business done as a result of his campaign.

Hodges Treasure Hunt For "Treasure Island"

Jack Hodges, Florida Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., engineered a treasure hunt on his "Treasure Island" showing for which twelve leading merchants donated prizes. Each merchant was given window card upon which was printed one letter of title and typewritten clue to merchant next in line. Clue was not to be attached to card but placed in some other part of window. Night of hunt participants assembled in front of theatre at 8 o'clock and were given ruled sheet of paper with name of picture spelled down left hand side.

Next to each letter was space for name of firm in whose window clue cards were to be found, and space for class of merchandise displayed in window. First clue was read to participants and the fun began. so planned that they ended up at theatre.

Special Section Put Over For Beckerich Opening

Al Beckerich, long-time Round Tabler, who recently reopened the Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., with Harry Wilson, has managed to take a few minutes from his many duties to tell the membership about his opening campaign.

Al put over a four-page section in the local paper by selling the ads himself and writing most of the copy, the flash being distinguished with a series of streamer heads and congratulatory copy from the participating merchants. In addition, thousands of mailing pieces and heralds were put out and many prominent windows obtained. During the first three days, Al built up a lot of good will by entertaining children from local orphanages and newsboys.

As a result, an auspicious beginning was reported, and we are sure that the entire membership joins us in extending the very best to this Round Tabler no wenrolled in the ranks of the exhibitors.

ANOTHER RADIO VIEWPOINT

Texas Member Believes Future of Theatre-Air Advertising Depends Upon Commercial Sponsorships

by DON HOOBLER

Interstate Circuit, Dallas, Tex.

While I was in Paramount-Publix's advertising department in New York I had occasion to note a countless number of radio tie-ups and methods of using radio to the theatre's box office advantage. In general and particularly in those days, almost all of the tie-ups involved the lowest powered stations in each community—stations that would play ball with the theatres on a "no cost" basis. As to the kinds of programs, there were dozens, none in my opinion really the answer.

Since ours is such a perishable product and since the very nature of radio makes repetition necessary (national advertisers know that even with well established brand names which are here today and tomorrow and next year, repetition, week after week at known and established hours on class "A" stations is vital to merchandising success) then it seems that past procedures with theatre-radio advertising has been everything that it should not be, or rather it has not been any of the things it should be if national advertisers' ideas are correct. Our product—the titles of pictures, change as many as three or four times weekly. And if we get on the air one time in a minor station to which the percentage of listeners is negligibly small, then I think even if it only costs a few passes the effect is doubtful—so few people hear the message. It doesn't cost much and it isn't worth much.

True enough, every little bit helps—every announcement made probably hits a few, but how few?

Says Radio Has Definite Place

I think radio has a definite place in advertising. But not for theatres unwilling to go for the best station in the community. If that's an economic impossibility, then I say—stay off.

If circumstances are such that a theatre, on certain pictures, feels that it can afford concentrated sales programs presented more than one time on the air, on the station in the community to which the greatest number of people listen, I say radio has not only a place but a vital place in that theatre's advertising scheme.

Obviously, certain pictures are particularly adapted to radio advertising. Pictures with radio stars like Bing Crosby are radio "naturals." Any musical picture—the theme songs of which have been played a lot on the air, are exceptionally appropriate. They are not only appropriate because they lend themselves to the construction of an entertaining program, but they are appealing to the same people—the most likely prospects for tickets!

It stands to reason that a fan for Bing Crosby or Ben Bernie or Phil Baker or Jack Benny is No. 1 person to consider when we start out to sell theatre tickets on the attractions featuring these people. It's a mere matter of avoiding what agencies call "waste coverage" or something of the kind.

When we do have important attractions like "Dames" or "Belle of the Nineties" or "She Loves Me Not" it is my contention that an increase in advertising expenditure above normal should be in the direction of the medium best suited to the nature of the attraction. I think radio is preferable to any other medium for extra advertising on pictures of this type. BUT—

Advises Use of Ace Stations

When we do arrive at such conclusions and decide to make radio one of our major mediums in a campaign, let's treat radio like we would our newspaper advertising. We wouldn't depend on a weekly newspaper if we had a good daily paper in the community. Neither should we depend on a honky tonk radio station for an important sales job.

Those are my views. As you will see, they may seem a bit irregular—they are so because while I agree with Botwick that an established Hollywood chatter column at certain hours each day eventually gathers a following, I do not believe enough of them are made good enough to really gather a following.

Incidentally, I should perhaps clear up my meaning in the first paragraph of this page. As to constructing a program. If the station does not see its way clear to devoting talent to the use of these numbers on a basis which considers our product (songs in this case) entertaining enough to earn a better rate than commercial, then I urge the use of carefully prepared record or transcription programs. A simple plan, where the star has recorded the hit tunes from the picture is merely working in the theatre name and playdate identification any time during the day the station is using records—and this record in particular. This plan makes the building of a special 15 or 30 minute program unnecessary, and provides plenty of repetition in the announce ments.

Last year Time Magazine had a radio program, sponsored by Time. Then it was decided that there was entertainment enough in the program and that Time got enough advertising out of the "entertainment" that the hour could have another sponsor—"one advertiser within another."

Isn't our entertainment equally suitable? Can't we be getting advertising at the same time another advertiser's program is receiving sponsorship? I think that herein lies the future of radio-theatre advertising.

Solomon's Deck Swabbing Gag

Unusual Ideas Distinguish Solomon's "Navy" Campaign

Among the many excellent ideas put over by Manager Sig Solomon, on "Here Comes the Navy" at the Regent, a subsequent neighborhood house in Newark, N. J., the following two gags rate more than passing mention. The first was a mop and bucket idea in which 12 boys were promoted to clean the sidewalk in front of the theatre (see photo) in naval style. As a traffic stopper, this stunt is unique. The second was a tieup with neighborhood merchants in which many signed an agreement to stop for 60 seconds all store activity at the beginning of the first showing of the feature on the opening day.

The exact time was designated by the continuous blowing from the marquee of police sirens, which in addition to window cards posted in the stores of cooperating merchants brought curious crowds to the theatre and also served to fix the opening of the picture put on earlier than usual.

Also profitable was an outside trailer stunt in which by use of a portable machine, the picture trailer was projected across the street on a screen secured to the face of the building opposite. Microphone and loud speaker attachment made a public address setup.

Sig wisely stressed the feminine appeal by promoting a complete outfit of new clothes for the girl wearing the most becoming sailor outfit at any performance, winner being announced on the stage last day of show. Same store gave 12 girls a complete sailor outfit for a street parade.

Naval Reserve radiogram outfit was promoted for lobby to send short wave messages gratis to all parts of the world.

Morris' Lobby Toy Display

Showmen Still Scoring High on "Circus Clown"

In Baltimore, Md., Walter Morris, at the Stanley, made tieup with ball park and bathing beach, for "Clown" ad imprint on all popcorn packages. Fifty passes were planted in bags.

For his foyer display (see photo) Walter promoted toys depicting circus atmosphere from department store and set them up in sawdust, flanked by miniature billboards. Head of Joe Brown in clown make-up, placed in 40-inch circle, formed center of display.

Bally clown worked from third floor window of store in shopping district; second clown on opposite sidewalk attracted attention by signaling to man in window. As the curious collected, man in window unfurled banner with theatre plug.

Then to Hanover, Pa.—

Where Charlie Moyer at the State rigged up a trapeze on his marquee with animated cut-out of Joe Brown flying back and forth. Flood light played on display at night. His street bally (see photo) consisted of clown performing on trapeze attached to canopy in front of theatre.

Charlie promoted prizes from a department store and put over the kid yelling contest. Peanuts were distributed in imprinted paper bags. Several hours prior to opening boys wearing signs reading "Waiting to see Joe Brown, etc.," lined up at box office. Stenciled sidewalks, whiting signs on barber shop, beauty parlor, soda fountain and tap room mirrors, and an animated window display with cut-out of six sheet with Joe riding back of two rocking horses were other highlights of Charlie's campaign.

And in Dallas, Texas

Louie Charninsky at the Capitol had a specially built tent covering his entire lobby with marquee reading "Main Entrance." Down the sides of tent art work of circus freaks attracted attention and the box office was built to represent circus ticket wagon. Cashiers dressed as clowns. Side show tents consisted of Chaplin impersonator, clown dressed as Brown, Pop-Eye in person, gypsy fortune teller and a dog act. Peanuts, pop corn and pink lemonade were sold and Louie also used the clown on a "flying trapeze."

"Cellini" Dates Bring Smart Exploitation

In addition to newspaper tieups mentioned previously, other smart hookups were arranged on the New York engagement of "Affairs of Cellini" at the Rivoli, prominent among which were co-op Cellini coiffure and jewelry ads by swank Fifth Avenue shops. The background of one of the jewelry window tieins was a reproduction of Cellini's workshop with samples of his art work, and the reproduction idea was also carried out in a men's clothing window on Broadway, showing the styles of the time of the picture as compared with those of today.

In Syracuse, N. Y.—

Manager Ed McBride, of Loew's, tied in the key guessing stunt with leading department store. Heralds were distributed by store in advance, and large contest box on main floor was decorated with scene stills. Prizes were guest tickets, merchant also giving gag big plug in all ads.

Newspaper contacts were topped with "lettergram" contest, thousands of answers reported on this one. Leading shops carried art windows, and menu cards were distributed at druggists and fountains.

And in Providence, R. I.—

Manager H. H. Maloney, Loew's State, had sound truck parade streets ahead, and planted special color displays in leading windows. Menu cards were well distributed, and bookmarks used by library branches. Radio broadcasts dramatizing story proved helpful.

Lamm's Ice Cream Tiein

Louis Lamm, Capitol, Elyra, O., concentrated his "20 Million Sweethearts" exploitation on merchant tieins, outstanding being ice cream hookups wherein merchant paid for and placed stickers on all ice cream bricks and took paid ad on back page of Lamm's herald. Window displays also helped.

THE VALUE OF A SMILE

"It costs nothing but creates much. It enriches those who receive without impoverishing those who give. It happens in a flash and the memory of it sometimes lasts forever. None are so rich that they can get along without it and none so poor but are richer for its benefits. It creates happiness in the home and fosters good will in business. Yet it cannot be bought, begged, borrowed or stolen. It is something that is no earthly good to anybody till it is given away.

"If at some time you meet someone who fails to give you a smile, may I ask that you give one of your own? For nobody needs a smile so much as those who have none left to give."—Clipped from "HUMANE REVIEW" and forwarded by LEE GOLDBERG.

McWhorter Enters Winner In All-City Contest

When the local merchants of his community announced that they would have a 75c. day, Jerry McWhorter, assistant at the Shore Theatre, in the Windsor Park section of Chicago, decided it would be a fine bet to tie-in a beauty contest with merchant support, on "Tarzan and His Mate," and have the winner entered in the all-city contest at the Century of Progress.

Prizes were secured from merchants ranging from hats to beauty treatments in exchange for plug on stage night "Miss Windsor Park" was chosen. Trailer announcing contest ran ten days prior, sign shop prepared large lobby cutout with space for winner's picture and on opening day theatre promoted sound truck from contributing merchants for parade.

VALE JOHNSON!

SO it turns out that General Hugh Johnson, that noisy cracker-down of the NRA, is just an old softy after all. The General, resigning at last, in sequel to some especially ill-advised speeches, kissed himself goodbye in a flood of self-shed tears and a torrent of self-appreciations in an amazingly showmanlike performance on the rostrum of the Department of Commerce auditorium in Washington before a capacity audience of two thousand.

In his usual modest manner the General inferred that his resignation was a sacrifice in behalf of the New Deal comparable with the Crucifixion. He quoted from various classics, including a few lines from "Madame Butterfly" and Alan Seeger's "Flanders Fields." It is to be noted that he did not sing or dance.

The New York Times reported that General Johnson had intended to close his speech with the benediction from the Episcopal prayerbook, but was too overcome by his emotions. There are several other bits which the General overlooked, including the speech of Spartacus to the gladiators, the lament of Naturich in "The Squaw Man," Senator Vest's eulogy of the dog and "Uncle Tom's Cabin," all equally appropriate and in tempo. The General's farewell address may stand as the histrionic highlight of this administration.

After posing for the goodbye pictures, the General and "Robbie" returned to his office-with-kitchenette and lunched together under the spreading wings of a great Blue Eagle, so the press recorded in paragraphs of sunset sentimentality. It should have been shot in Technicolor.

OUR TWO ARTS

THE New York Daily News, which is so especially picture conscious, shouted its ecstasy over "One Night of Love" for the distance of its whole editorial column the other day, giving it rank alongside that other News favorite, "Smilin' Through," as the best "of all time." Last Sunday the News filled another column to get "Cavalcade" into the list of the best.

In concluding, the News observed: "The movies and steel construction architecture are the two great American arts—the only two truly American arts. In the pursuit of other arts we borrowed heavily from the old world, but we created the movies and modern architecture. . . ."

And it may be remarked that certain aspects of the depression era and the problems in sequel have convinced many that it would be just as well to keep those two arts quite well separated.

HIT AND RUN MORALITY

SOME of his Hollywood contemporaries will read with a special interest a contribution in which Mr. Samuel Goldwyn presents ten minutes and fifteen seconds of observations concerning motion pictures and their morals in Liberty of October 13. Says Mr. Goldwyn:

> Big sister may read a book that she'd rather not have her mother see. Brother may have his own sports and interests, beyond the understanding and sympathies of Ma and Pa. Ma may have her bridge matinees and Pa his golf.
> But when they go to the movies they go together. They are a family, with family decency, self-respect, pride of home, with a high barrier around them to exclude the things not worthy of the home. It is a sacred inner circle. It is being shown to the producers of Hollywood that pictures are being made for that circle. And it wasn't a bad reminder at that, for the family nourished and built up the motion picture as an institution, fashioned our programs, and created our stars.*

Mr. Goldwyn speaks of the policy of capitalizing on the shock quality of dirt as the work of "moral hit and run" drivers.

A NEW halftone screen laid in concentric circles, instead of the standard square dot pattern, is now available to engravers. We offer the customary 8 to 5 that one of these days Mr. J. J. McCarthy, advertising mentor of the Hays office, will be confronted with one centering on precisely the wrong spot.

The dollar watch is back with us again. One may wonder when the dollar will be back.

FORTUNE, the big bespangled prettybook of business, in a valiant endeavor to tell about color processes and the screen in an imposing special article, remarks: "Then—like the cowboy bursting into the cabin just as the heroine has thrown the last flower pot at the Mexican—came the three-color process to the rescue." Personally we prefer rescue by the marines. Also may we not inform Fortune that we do not have Mexican villains any more.

*Mr. Goldwyn did not illustrate his article with stills from "Nana."

THIS WEEK - - -

POLICE COOPERATION

By a resolution adopted at its Washington convention last week the International Association of Police Chiefs will seek the cooperation of the film industry in stamping out crime. The move replaced a side-tracked motion condemning the industry for a glorification of gangsters. A committee of two will confer with film executives as to ways and means, the message to be directed at the youth of the nation. . . .

COLLEGE-TRAINED

A need of the motion picture is the college-trained writer, in the opinion of Adolph Zukor, recorded in an interview with Dan Thomas, for the NEA Service last week. Urging schools to offer special courses in screen writing, he pointed out that there are a certain number of talented people who would receive a hearing if they had college recommendation. . . .

EXAGGERATION

A target of criticism last week in New Orleans was motion picture advertising, on the basis of exaggeration, which has created public skepticism, declared Theodore W. Bethea, better business bureau attorney. His report to the advertising club noted that untruthful advertising has been eliminated without recourse to formal filing of charges. . . .

UNIQUE RECORD

Unique is the record of "he-man" Jack Holt, who, in "The Defense Rests," Columbia film, has appeared in his 168th picture, for various companies since his first role years ago. Silent and the sound technique have found him equally at ease before the cameras. . . .

FIFTY YEARS

For years one of New York's best known theatre booking managers, and notably business manager for the late, great John Phillip Sousa, was Harry Askin, who last week, aged 67, died of heart disease. Fifty years in the theatre, starting as box office boy in Philadelphia, saw many famous names under the banner of Mr. Askin. . . .

ANNE SHIRLEY

Having used the name of her favorite fictional character, Anne Shirley, in her role in "Anne of Green Gables," RKO Radio picture, Dawn O'Day, 16-year-old player, has obtained court permission to be Anne Shirley permanently. . . .

IOWA VETERAN

In Neola, Iowa, last week, R. W. Brown, local exhibitor, celebrated his 25th year as a showman, with little contest to his claim of longest in the show business in his state.

NO "PREVIEWS"

Finding a clever "out" after having been barred from press screenings at the RKO Mainstreet and Publix Newman, Kansas City, for alleged damaging comment, Lowell Lawrence, Journal-Post film editor, has announced he will review films hereafter only following actual performance in the theatre, to which he will pay his own admission. Thus, said he, will his reviews be "more trustworthy." . . .

BUSINESS BONUSES

Happy were employees of Fox West Coast theatres, from district managers down, last week when Charles Skouras, trustee of the circuit, presented bonus checks aggregating $15,000 in connection with the 13-week business drive recently concluded. Nick Turner, northern California district manager, wore the broadest smile as the awards were made at Hollywood's Ambassador Hotel. . . .

OLD ORPHEUM

To Henry Rosenfeld, by purchase, has gone the old Orpheum theatre in San Francisco, parent house of the once powerful Orpheum Circuit. In good times the property was valued at more than a million. The price: $122,500, with $35,000 back taxes due. . . .

MICKEY'S BIRTHDAY

On Monday of this week, October 1, perennially young Mickey Mouse, noted performer of the screen, celebrated his sixth birthday. To his brain-father, also young Walt Disney, has gone academic, industry, and incidentally financial achievement by reason of the creation of the internationally known—and enjoyed rodent.

WARDROBE MISTRESS

Styles and the passing fashions of many years, as they are reflected in the contemporary theatre, have slipped through the fingers of Mrs. Lizzie A. Perret, who last week died in Orange, N. J., at the age of 63. For many a year Mrs. Perret was wardrobe mistress for Earl Carroll Productions, and Paramount Publix theatres. . . .

PARENT-TEACHERS

Despite their avowed sympathetic attitude toward the Memphis Better Films Council, 30 Parent-Teacher associations of the city must shortly vote on the question of withdrawing from the film council, as requested by the national organization of Parent-Teacher groups. Local officers acknowledge inability to understand the instructions received. . . .

RATING PROTEST

Protesting in unique fashion against the two and one-half stars with which The Daily News rated "The Count of Monte Cristo," the Rivoli theatre in New York, playing the picture, ran a full-page ad offering an admission refund to any patron considering the picture unworthy of higher rating. . . .

CHINESE PROBLEM

Differences in spoken dialect in south and north China are proving a worrisome problem to Chinese producers with studios in Shanghai. The Nanking government has ruled only the mandarin or "national" language be used in talking films, has banned a Cantonese dialect film. The trouble comes when south China film patrons demand a language they can understand. . . .

MILWAUKEE REOPENING

Brightened immeasurably this week will be Milwaukee's main theatre street, with the reopening of Fox's Palace and Warner's Strand. Presentations plus the film will feature the Palace policy, while the Strand has not yet determined its policy. . . .

AIR RATES CUT

General Air Express has placed in effect rate reduction up to 57½ per cent, with 119 major cities involved. The minimum rate now effective is 85 cents on a package weighing three-quarters of a pound to any city. Distributors are large users. . . .

MODIFIED MUSIC TAX NEAR AS RATE INCREASE STARTS

Mills Proposes 40 Cents a Seat Flat Rate; Compromise Somewhere Between 20 and 40 Expected at Conference Oct. 8

Increases of from 20 to 1,000 per cent in the licensee fees charged motion picture exhibitors by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers for the reproduction in theatres of copyrighted music of the Society's members, finally became effective at midnight Monday.

However—and of importance to every theatre owner—there appeared unexpectedly Wednesday the first indication of a possible readjustment of the new scale on a mutually satisfactory basis.

Subcommittee Meets Mills

A subcommittee of the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee—consisting of Edward Levy, counsel, and Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA; Leon D. Netter of Paramount Publix, Harry Timstein of RKO, Milton Wiseman, counsel of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York; Leo Friedman of Loew's and Walter Vincent—met Wednesday with E. C. Mills, general manager of the society, at his headquarters in New York, to discuss a modified schedule.

Both sides refused to divulge the nature of the proposals but it was learned that Mr. Mills suggested a flat rate of 40 cents per seat annually to take the place of the new graduated scale now in effect. One of the exhibitor delegates proposed on his own that 15 cents a seat would be more acceptable. In any event it is considered almost certain that the conferees will agree upon a rate somewhere between 20 and 40 cents, at a meeting Monday.

If such agreement is reached, the exhibitors will have gained ground. The new scale, which became effective October 1, levies on a typical first-run 2,000-seat theatre a license charge of $1,275, as against the old royalty of $200 paid on the flat rate of 10 cents a seat, whereas a compromise on, say, 30 cents a seat would cost the same theatre $600.

If the society accepts the proposal Monday, exhibitors will not give up any of their rights to testify against ASCAP in the Government's pending anti-trust action against the society.

"Very substantial progress was made at our conference Wednesday," Mr. Mills said.

Pending enactment of any modified schedule the higher scale will remain in force as of October 1.

Regardless of the advice volunteed by some exhibitor organization leaders to "sit tight," the Society on Wednesday warned that any owner—whether circuit or independent—whose license has expired and who continues publicly to perform such copyrighted music without having obtained a license under the new rates, will be prosecuted in the civil courts under the copyright laws, which provide for a minimum "fine" of $250, plus court costs, for each violation, payable to the Society.

After having spent eight weeks in organizing legal proceedings to prevent ASCAP from effecting the increase as originally announced, and then abandoning the procedure, the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee, headed by Walter Vincent and formed on August 1 to represent 8,000 theatres in the fight, had worked feverishly over the weekend and Tuesday to prepare the eleventh-hour proposal.

Turned to Government Suit

The Exhibitors' Emergency Committee after having started a "penny-a-seat" war chest with which to finance a legal protest, and after having retained George Z. Medalie, former United States attorney, to conduct the battle in the courts, suddenly abandoned the fight last week in the hope that the Government anti-trust suit pending against the Society seeking dissolution of the Society and nullification of its present licenses and agreements, will eventually bring relief. The complex procedure in the federal courts, however, could possibly delay final disposition of the Government's case for 18 months, the Society having warned that it will defend itself before the United States supreme court on an appeal, if necessary.

Both the MPTOA and Allied States have suggested to their exhibitor members that they pay the higher rate "under protest" in the hope of recovering if the federal suit is won. Mr. Mills, in answer, said that exhibitors could not retrieve the difference in any case because the final decision would have no bearing on previous royalties.

Will Not Cancel Licenses

ASCAP will not cancel any existing licenses. Exhibitors will continue to pay the old flat rate of 10 cents a seat until their present agreements expire. The Society said this week that it will serve notice of the existence of the new scale on each exhibitor 30 days before the expiration date of the old license. New licenses under the higher rates will be granted as the old ones expire after October 1.

The old flat rate of 10 cents a seat annually will not be raised for any theatre which seats 800 or less and charges 15 cents admission or less. Nor will the rate be changed for theatres giving less than seven performances weekly and operating more than three days a week. Rates are lowered from 10 cents to five cents a seat for all theatres giving less than seven performances weekly and operating three or less days a week. For all other theatres the new rate will be as follows (subject to whatever modifications are made by the Society under the new proposals of the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee which will be acted upon Monday):

30 Cents a Seat Would Cost 2,000-Seat First-Run Theatre One-Half of Increased Scale Made Effective This Week

I. The basic rate for annual license is an amount equal to one filled capacity house at the highest rate charged for seats at any performance. Example:

Capacity of Theatre at Highest Admission

Class	Number	Price	Total
Loge seats	150	$1.00	$150.00
Orchestra	1,200	.75	900.00
Balcony	750	.30	225.00
Total value of one full capacity			$1,275.00

II. If the theatre presents 20 or more performances per week, the rate for annual license is an amount equal to one full capacity per above example.

III. If less than 20 performances per week are presented the rate for annual license is:

Number of performances per week	Rate for Annual license
19	95% of basic rate
18	90% " " "
17	85% " " "
16	80% " " "
15	75% " " "
14	70% " " "
13	65% " " "
12	60% " " "
11	55% " " "
10	50% " " "
9	45% " " "
7	35% " " "
Less than 7 (operating more than 3 days per week)	10 cents per seat
Less than 7 (operating 3 or less days per week)	5 cents per seat

III. The minimum rate for annual license in any case is fixed at 10 cents per seat, except if theatre operates three or less days per week, in which case five cents per seat is the rate.

IV. For theatres which operate irregularly, or are operated for terms of less than a full year period, the rate is 1/12 of the above for each month or fraction thereof actually operated.

V. By theatres regularly operated the fee is payable quarterly (every three months) in advance. Irregularly operated theatres (road shows, etc.) monthly in advance.

VI. The above schedule of rates is effective on and after Oct. 1, 1934. They cover, and licenses issued by ASCAP relate to and authorize, the non-dramatic public performance of all musical compositions copyrighted by the members of ASCAP and of all foreign similar societies with which ASCAP has reciprocal relations. A list of members and affiliated societies will be sent by ASCAP on request.

VII. If for any reason any section of seats is closed off and sale of tickets thereto is discontinued, such seats may be deducted from the "capacity" of the theatre. If the price or performance policy of the theatre changes during the license year ASCAP should be promptly notified so that license fee rate may be accordingly readjusted.

KATZ JOINS EXECUTIVE STAFF AT MGM STUDIO

Enters Company's Production Division as "Added Arm of Management" to Mayer

Sam Katz contracted this week with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, Nicholas M. Schenck, president, to become a member of the executive production staff presided over by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president, at the Culver City studios in California.

Official explanation of the exact nature of Mr. Katz's duties—variously reported during the week as ranging from motion picture producer, to business manager of the studio, to executive assistant to Mr. Mayer—had been withheld pending the return of Mr. Mayer from Europe. The steamer Paris brought Mr. Mayer to New York late Wednesday afternoon, when he indicated Mr. Katz would be assistant to him and Edward Mannix, general studio manager.

From the home office came word, unofficially, that Mr. Katz had entered the employ of the Metro production division as an "added arm of management," and upon the specific request of both Mr. Mayer and Mr. Mannix.

In answering reports that negotiations with Mr. Katz had been conducted without the knowledge of studio executives, Metro said the fact was that Mr. Mayer had started the preliminary discussions before he had sailed for Europe some weeks ago, and that he had cabled his satisfaction of the consummation of the deal last Friday.

No Realignment Expected

In film circles it appeared then that there will be no realignment in the Culver City executive force, which, without giving effect to Mr. Katz's position, stands as follows, in the order of authority: Louis B. Mayer, Irving G. Thalberg, David O. Selznick, Edward J. Mannix, Harry Rapf, Hunt Stromberg.

Mr. Katz returned to New York Monday from a weekend spent in his native Chicago. He probably will travel to the studio with Mr. Mayer in about a week.

Sam Katz abruptly punctuated a rather spectacular career in exhibition at the crest of a rocket rise to power when, on November 1, 1932, he resigned as executive over all Paramount Publix theatre properties and as vice president of the corporation, in which capacity he also had participated prominently in production and distribution.

His resignation was written after John Hertz, Chicagoan of Yellow Cab fame, insisted, as chairman of the Paramount finance committee, that the corporation effect a direct reversal of its national policy and engage in complete decentralization of theatre control, taking the power of operation away from the home office and placing it in the hands of operators in the field. Mr. Katz had disagreed with such a policy.

Since that winter of 1932 little has been heard of the co-founder of the pioneering Balaban and Katz theatre circuit in Chicago. At first he turned an eye toward independent production, having conducted negotiations for his entrance into that branch with a Marx Brothers comedy. His idea did not develop, and subsequently he participated with Milton Feld and Dave Chatkin, former executive colleagues at Publix, in Monarch Theatres, a modest enterprise operating in Ohio and Indiana. At no time, however, did he hold office in Monarch.

Played Piano for Laemmle

Mr. Katz was born in Russia in 1892. He was 3 years old when the Katz family migrated to Chicago, where he was raised.

In 1905, when only 13, he got a job playing the piano in Carl Laemmle's first five-cent motion picture house in Chicago's Halsted Street, while continuing his school work. At age 16, he had his own theatre with 144 folding chairs, which he later increased to 275, and installed an orchestra. Next year he bought two more theatres. His main ambition was to become an attorney and he entered Northwestern University, where he attended night school while continuing his business activities. In 1914 he acquired a theatre seating 800 and soon afterwards formed Amalgamated Theatre Corporation.

About this time he met Barney Balaban, and the meeting bore fruit in erection of the Central Park theatre, the first really fine theatre in Chicago devoted exclusively to films. Their venture aroused the interest and backing of financial circles and, before long, the Riviera was built, which was followed by the circuit of deluxe houses which all Chicago now knows as Balaban & Katz. Impressed by the success of this firm, directors of Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation in 1925 prevailed upon the Chicago concern to take over management of its houses and Sam Katz took executive charge.

Mayer, Home, To Confer On British Situation

Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, arrived in New York late Wednesday on the SS Paris from Europe. He will go to the Coast after ten days in New York.

Several other film and theatrical personalities arrived on the same steamer, including Constance Bennett, with her husband, the Marquis Henry de la Falaise de Coudraye; Benita Hume, British star, who made the trip to attend the premiere of "Power" at Radio City Music Hall; Phil Reisman, RKO foreign department executive; Leon Garganoff, head of Lianofilm, Paris; Howard Strickland, MGM studio publicity head, end Edward V. Darling, producer.

Mr. Mayer said his company had no plans to produce in England but that he would confer immediately on the situation with the New York executives.

Mr. Reisman said his company will open five offices in Spain, and that it did not intend to produce overseas.

Supreme Court Acts In Tri-Ergon Proceeding

The United States supreme court in Washington on Tuesday refused an application of Columbia Pictures for leave as amicus curiae to file briefs in the pending appeal action of Paramount Publix, Altoona Publix Theatres, and Wilmer & Vincent against the American Tri-Ergon Corporation.

The case is an application for permission to file an appeal from a decision won by American Tri-Ergon in the circuit court of appeals in New York upholding the Tri-Ergon flywheel patents on reproducers.

TELEVISION NOT A COMPETITOR FOR YEARS, EXHIBITORS ASSURED

Facsimile Radio Broadcasting, Newer Development, Still in Laboratory Stages; Wide Frequency Channel Obstacle

By FRED AYER

Television—that enigma baffling radio engineers for a decade or more, and the oft-reputed nemesis of the motion picture and the legitimate theatre—is not, contrary to preponderant and often vacuous announcements of recent months, "just around the corner." Exhibitors need have no fear of television as a competitor, need not worry about having to change over their equipment to meet television's requirements, for many years to come.

Serious obstacles, economic and otherwise, still confront the commercialization of television for home use despite the many apparently successful operations of experimental systems. What was regarded a few years ago to be coming as a more or less natural adjunct of ordinary radio broadcasting today appears to be a problem which is a giant in proportions.

Much has been said of transmission of motion pictures into the home by television—a phase of its future operation which might seriously affect motion picture box office receipts. These motion pictures, according to the plans of the would-be television "producers," would be photographed in the ordinary manner and reproduced via the air-waves by television.

Only on Experimental Circuits

The fact remains, however, that at this time it is not considered practicable to transmit such motion pictures on other than experimental circuits over extremely short distances. Engineers still are more or less in the laboratory stages with facsimile radio broadcasting—a development currently being heralded simply as "the gateway to television."

Recent developments in the facsimile and television transmission fields which have been brought to the public's attention include:

1. A new type of cathode tube, termed an "electron multiplier," which differs from all previous tubes used in radio oscillator work in that it has no grid or filament.
2. Ability to obtain outdoor pictures.
3. Placement of synchronization on a sound basis.
4. Discovery of the micro-wave which permits of greater operating speed in facsimile transmission than heretofore.

One of the greatest obstacles to practical television is that for faithful reproduction each individual transmitter must use an exceptionally wide frequency channel. Today broadcasting stations are not allowed, by the Federal Communications Commission, which now applies the license laws of the defunct Radio Commission, to use a frequency range of more than 10 kilocycles and television transmission requires a much wider frequency range than does ordinary broadcasting. When wave lengths below 150 meters are used the energy radiated ceases to follow the curvature of the earth.

Size Another Problem

Another great obstacle is the projection of a picture which would equal the size of an image projected by regular equipment in a film theatre. At present an image about one foot square is the largest successfully received with adequate quality.

Sets, which would have sufficiently high frequency to transmit the thousands of light lines required to reproduce a picture, constitute another serious problem. Such sets have not yet been practically developed, nor has science yet been able to transmit a picture in its entirety as a single electrical impulse, according to engineers. It is, therefore, necessary that the subject for transmission be broken down into a succession of very small areas or picture elements or lines.

A fundamental and all-important requisite of television transmission and reception, according to John E. Morse, radio engineer of Boston, is that the detail of the image must in all respects be equal to that shown in a newspaper picture. Added to this is another obstacle: light at the receiving end must be of a type that it not tiring to the eye. At present, he says, the light is blurred and dim.

Of actual "televised" motion pictures Mr. Morse believes that such broadcasts, if received by the public over a greater part of the nation, would lose their value overnight, thus defeating their own purpose by being "box office value" for one night only. On the other hand, if the transmitting station cannot be received over a distance greater than the average metropolitan area—approximately 20 miles—via ultra-high frequencies, which according to today's radio laws are the only practical frequencies obtainable for this service, only a very limited area could be served. Thus, says Mr. Morse, whichever way transmission is accomplished, many persons are certain to be dissatisfied. This is based upon the presumption that sufficiently high electrical impulses to broadcast clear moving pictures in their entirety would be obtainable.

New Type Cathode Tube

Insofar as public announcement is concerned, the newest development in the television and facsimile field is the new type cathode tube, or electron multiplier. Invented by Philo T. Farnsworth, 28-year-old head of Television Laboratories, Ltd., the new tube is said to have been used successfully in tests of transmission from a laboratory in San Francisco to New York, Honolulu and Manila. Having no grid or filament, two plates at either end of a glass enclosure are coated with caesium, a photo-sensitive element. When light rays strike these plates, electrons are discharged, forming high frequency waves suitable for television broadcasting.

The new tube's potentiality is said to be 9,000 times greater in amplification power than any other type which has yet been developed.

The fundamental difference between television and facsimile broadcasting directly involves this scanning process, that difference being the element of time. In television, scanning must be accomplished in so short a space of time that the eye receives the impression—as with the projected motion picture in a theatre—that it sees the entire image at once. In other words it is not conscious of scanning. With facsimile, however, the picture forms in front of the eye through a series of lines, scanned necessarily over a considerably longer period of time.

Facsimile radio broadcasting—the sending of stationary images by means of infinitesimal impulses measured in inches from "crest-to-crest," a medium more commonly known as the micro-wave, generally is regarded by radio engineers as the direct forerunner of television. This wave is static-free and not influenced by fading.

At the present time it takes approximately 40 minutes to send a photograph between New York and Chicago by the normal short wave route. It is expected that the facsimile method of transmission

NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN TELEVISION FIELD

Recent developments in the television field include:

1. Tests of television car for transmission of sound film were demonstrated in Germany. Shots, taken by camera from roof of car, were shown by television 75 seconds later in nearby pavilion.
2. U. A. Sanabria demonstrated in Chicago new television service for home use—rental: $4 monthly, plus $50 installation—which transmits a 150-line image, full length figures, still, however, only one foot square.
3. Radio station WOR plans broadcasting of pictures along with regular programs, starting late this fall. This is not television, the station sending out only line drawings requiring three to four minutes' transmission. Those interested say the receiving equipment for this may be added to ordinary radio for $10.

TELEVISION REMOTE AS COMPETITOR

by means of the micro-wave will cut this time down appreciably.

The micro-wave seemingly is optical and man can "see" by and as a result of it. In this manner 20 pictures a second can be sent across the invisible channel at the speed of sunlight, but the many booster stations required—operated at terrific expense—will still be necessary to carry the pictures to their ultimate reception because these micro-waves disappear, under present usage, at the horizon.

The waves will, however, travel as far as a "theoretical horizon." Thus, if they are released from the top of a skyscraper like the Empire State building in New York they will travel as far as a person can see from this vantage point on a clear day.

Orrin E. Dunlap, Jr., radio editor of the New York Times, explained recently that despite this apparent limitation there is, "fortunately, a decided advantage in communication."

"There are no reflections, no shadows, no double images or 'ghosts' as in the case of the normal short waves, which go sky-high only to be reflected from the 'radio roof,' causing a variety of 'shadows,'" Mr. Dunlap said.

Sarnoff's "Faith in Facsimile"

"My faith in the future of radio science is geared to facsimile," said David Sarnoff, RCA president. "Since Morse invented the telegraph there has been no radical improvement in telegraphy. Morse, a poet as well as an inventor, created the Morse code of dots and dashes. His alphabet has been in international use ever since, but now we are on the threshold of the first great advance in the art of telegraphy. We are sending pictures and printed matter through the air and have found the key to speed the traffic.

"No longer must the message be broken down into hundreds of dots and dashes. It is reproduced by light 'brushes' that 'paint' it line for line. The next step is to flash the complete picture. That is a great step forward."

The first logical step, it has been explained by engineers, is the transmission of still pictures and print—the essence of facsimile radio. The next step will be to send moving pictures. This is television.

The micro-wave, however, had to be discovered before even facsimile transmission proved satisfactory, and this discovery is accredited to Guglielmo Marconi, the man who has done more for radio than any other living person.

Foresees Radioing of Mail

"I believe the day is not so far distant when radio will dip into the mail-bag," Mr. Sarnoff says. "If a letter is worth the time required for dictation, for the stenographer to write, for re-reading by the sender, then the stamp and, let us say, a month for arrival in Australia, then it is worth 50 cents or even a dollar to flash it across the world for quick delivery and an answer. I believe thousands of letters and messages will fly from city to city, from country to country by facsimile radio. That is a real advance from the telegraph's dots and dashes."

CWA TO CITY—THEATRE OPENS

The new 500-seat Park theatre, begun in Wautoma, Wis., as a CWA project and later taken over by the city, has opened finally with Bernard Lassack, operator of the Elite theatre, Milwaukee neighborhood house, as lessor of the theatre. George Lightner has been named manager of the Park, which is modernly equipped.

The domestic facsimile service now being extended on the normal short wave channels—between 15 and 100 meters—is utilizing new instruments designed greatly to improve the texture of the illustration. An explanation of the actual function of such transmission is provided by Mr. Dunlap, as follows:

"A pin-point beam of light is made to play through lenses on a photograph or printed matter wrapped around a slowly revolving cylinder. The light beam strikes the paper like a tiny star, each twinkle of which assists in 'painting' the picture being flashed from some far distant city. A photo-electric cell closely adjacent to the light beam is instantly affected by the gradations of light from pure white through grays to inky black reflected from the revolving picture. As the star moves across the face of the picture being transmitted the variations of light intensity picked up by the photo-electric cell are greatly strengthened by an amplifier and made to modulate the transmitting aerial. That puts the picture on the air.

Reversed at Receiving End

"At the receiving end," Mr. Dunlap explains, "the process is practically reversed. A small flickering pin-point beam of light plays across another slowly revolving drum upon which is wrapped either a piece of photographic bromide paper or a photographic film. As rapidly as the picture is completed it is passed through a hole in the wall of the operating room into a darkroom for development by standard photographic methods. It is then ready for delivery by messenger."

To date, no commercial vision—television — broadcasting station has been granted a license by the Federal Communications Commission, and the reason for this, according to R. V. Newcomb, technical engineer of Television Picture Productions, is that the commission feels that certain standards must be adopted first by the visual broadcasting industry.

It is believed, he says, that the very high frequencies make it possible to transmit a better quality picture and, therefore, equipment to broadcast the future commercial television program probably will transmit on a high frequency band at the rate of 24 pictures per second with 300-line scanning. At this time, Mr. Newcomb explains, the mechanical or scanning disc transmitter on an average has been scanning 40 to 80 lines at speeds of 20 to 15 pictures per second. The electrical, or cathode transmitter—considered by most engineers, he says, to be superior to the mechanical—on an average has been scanning 120 to 180 lines a second at speeds of 24 to 20 pictures a second.

Speed Not Limiting Factor

"In research work with the cathode-ray tube," says Mr. Newcomb, "it was found that the tiny beam of light could be bent or deflected by a magnetic force. Since a stream of electrons has very little inertia if considered from the standpoint of a material body, this beam of light can be moved or bent at a high rate of speed by changing the magnetic controlling forces. Speed, therefore, is not a limiting factor. Cathode-ray limitations concern sensitivity of the fluorescent material and length of life of the tube.

"Entertainment value, rather than mere novelty, will be required of television programs if the public is to become interested," Mr. Newcomb declares.

Late last spring, at the annual meeting of the Institute of Radio Engineers at Philadelphia, W. R. G. Baker, vice-president and general manager of RCA Victor Company, told the assembled technicians that home television on a commercial scale is at least five years distant. Dr. Baker's views were expressed directly in the face of the fact that RCA has developed a complete experimental television system. Invention of the "iconoscope," or electric eye, regarded as a fundamental feature of the system, was announced last year by Dr. Vladimir K. Zworykin of the RCA laboratories and hailed then as making television in the home practicable.

Huge Expense Cited

"Enormous expense is involved," said Dr. Baker at Philadelphia. "If 700,000 persons should spend $300 apiece to equip their homes with television apparatus that would require a total expenditure of $210,000,000. To serve that many persons about 80 transmitting stations would have to be provided at a cost of, say, $40,000,000, and another $40,000,000 would have to be spent to develop an interconnecting network. It would take $58,000,000 a year for costs of transmitter operation and for depreciation."

The longest television broadcast accomplished by RCA covers 90 miles—the distance from the top of the Empire State building to Camden, N. J.—and the program had to be picked up by a booster station about two-thirds of the distance between the two points.

In any case, the very fact that there still is a "gateway" to be passed through gives some indication of the remoteness of television as a practicable working method of entertainment or educational and social force. It is still, the engineers say, a problem whose possibilities are not completely digested, a problem which will not be ironed out for many years.

Although RKO=Radio is still receiving medals for last year's achievements we won't speak of them here. That's past. Today's accomplishments are so fine that they do not need the glamour of yesterday. With the new season but a month on its way, RKO=Radio has plenty of which to be proud. First, "The Fountain", an audience picture of electrifying power that brought to the screen a new reali=zation of Ann Harding's consummate artistry and terrific box=office magnetism. Then along came Miriam Hopkins in "The Richest Girl in the World", as delightful a piece of entertainment as ever commanded unlimited mass appeal and gladdened the hearts of showmen. Today it's the talk of the country, with critics tumbling over dictionaries to find suitable words of praise. From our studios came that glorious creation in New Technicolor, "La Cucaracha", a short feature that proved to be so great an attraction that it is being held over on bills, so insistent is the pub=lic's demand to see it again and again. In our new season announcements we said, "Great Properties Make Great Pictures." We prove it with Edith Wharton's world-loved, Pulitzer prize novel "The Age of Innocence", co-starring Irene Dunne and John Boles, re-united for the first time since "Back Street".

Ostrer Silent on Report B.I.P. Is Seeking Gaumont

Cable advices received in New York this week from London to the effect that British International Pictures had been reported moving for a purchase of control of Gaumont-British Pictures, Ltd., were dismissed late Wednesday by Mark Ostrer, chairman and joint managing director of Gaumont, who is now in New York conducting his company's invasion of the American market, with the remark that "we know nothing about financial dealings on the other side."

"I can say nothing about these reports," said Mr. Ostrer. "I cannot imagine where they started. All I am interested in right now is selling pictures here."

Last week cable reports from London had indicated that Gaumont was attempting to gain control of B.I.P., but Mr. Ostrer had nothing to say in regard to that matter.

This week's dispatch from London indicated that negotiations either have been concluded or are near conclusion between John Maxwell of B.I.P. and C. M. Woolf, representing the Ostrer interests in Gaumont, whereby Mr. Maxwell will purchase the Ostrer stock as well as the Fox shares in Gaumont, for about $17,500,000, embracing 75 per cent of the ordinary shares.

Sidney R. Kent's office in New York denied that phase of the report which tied in sale of the Fox shares in Gaumont British.

Should B.I.P. consummate such a purchase, the three Ostrers—Isadore, Mark and Maurice—would withdraw from Gaumont and the amalgamated companies, it was said in London. The chief remaining difficulty, it was said, is not so much a question of terms, which are reputed to have been arranged, but the cost of buying up directors' and personal service contracts.

Distribution Only For Gaumont Here

The position of Gaumont British in its invasion of the American market was definitely established last Friday afternoon when Michael Balcon, production head in London, arrived in New York with word that the corporation has no intention of producing here. On the steamship pier to meet Mr. Balcon was Mark Ostrer, chairman of the board of Gaumont in England who has been in New York conducting the expansion. He verified Mr. Balcon's declaration and added that neither will the company acquire theatres on its own in this country.

Arriving with Mr. Balcon, who is here to study motion picture trends, were Nova Pilbeam, young Gaumont star, and Jack Hulbert, both of whom will make personal appearances on Broadway in connection with the company's releases showing at the Roxy, Criterion and, possibly, the Music Hall.

While Mr. Balcon and Mr. Ostrer, together with Jeffrey Bernerd and Arthur Lee, were in executive session discussing product and the construction of a distribution structure in this country, George Weeks, general sales manager, was touring the eastern exchange centers and engaging field sales representatives. They will work out of the Fox branches, through which physical distribution will be handled.

Joe Vergesslich, who recently resigned as New York branch manager for Majestic, joined Gaumont as head of the New York exchange.

George Scully, former Fox salesman in New England, was selected sales manager for Boston and New Haven, with Ben Rogers and Myron Shellman on his staff.

Buffalo and Albany will be in charge of Tony Ryan, with James Sper and Lester Wolfe assisting, Mr. Sper stationed in Buffalo and Mr. Wolfe in Albany.

Herb Given, formerly with Paramount, was selected as Philadelphia sales maanger, and Joe Singer, salesman, for that district.

Abe Fischer arrived in Chicago from New York to take over that territory.

Mr. Weeks will appoint managers and salesmen on immediate visits to Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit, returning to New York over the weekend.

Further expansion of the publicity and advertising departments at the home office resulted in the appointment of Arnold Van Leer, Clara Weiss, Joe Fliesler and Leo Pillot. Mr. Van Leer had been associated variously with Morris Gest, Warners, Radio and Columbia.

The company arranged during the week for the showing of its product at a third Broadway theatre, having taken over the Criterion at Times Square for an engagement of Robert Flaherty's "Man of Aran," opening on October 19th. Booking arrangements are now in force with the Roxy and Music Hall theatres.

From England came word Monday that Gaumont British had declared a four per cent quarterly dividend on its common stock.

Independents Cooperate With Breen Administration

Hollywood's independent motion picture producers are cooperating in the Production Code Administration machinery for improving the standards of films, according to I. E. Chadwick, who represents the independents in their relations with the Administration, of which Joseph I. Breen is director.

All independent pictures submitted to date to Mr. Breen have received a certificate of approval, Mr. Chadwick told Will H. Hays, Gabriel L. Hess and Vincent Hart, at a meeting at MPPDA headquarters in New York on Tuesday. Some 20 features have been submitted by the independents since August 15, he added.

Mr. Chadwick will produce six features for 1934-35, one of which will be "In My Old Kentucky Home." He said that the independents are improving their standard of production.

Pickford Starts Radio Series

Mary Pickford made her initial radio broadcast for Standard Brands on Wednesday. The first program was an adaptation of "The Church Mouse," with Gale Gordon, Jeannette Nolan, Theodore Osborn, Crauford Kent and James Eagles in Miss Pickford's supporting cast.

Fox West Coast To Proceed with A Reorganization

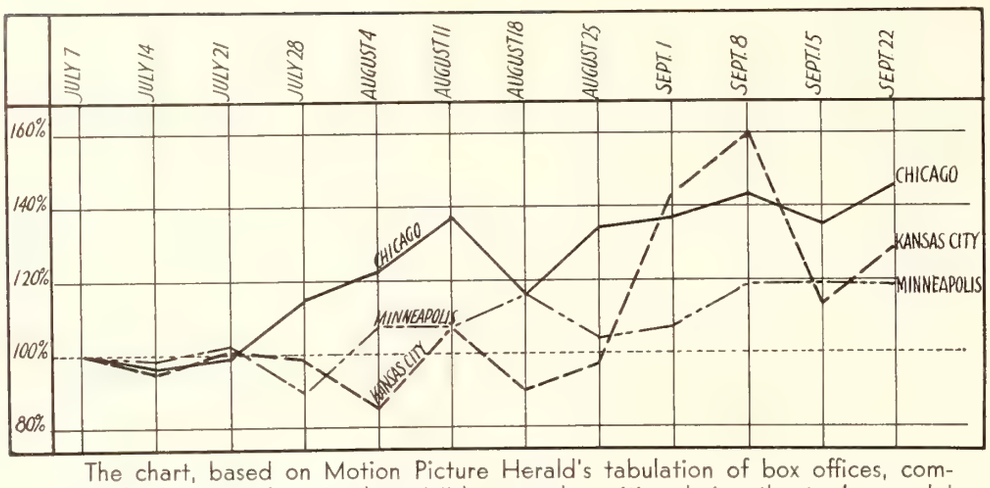
As a result of the refusal of the United States circuit court of appeals in New York on Tuesday to permit reopening of the agreement by which large Paramount Publix claims against Fox West Coast were settled, reorganization of FWC will get under way within the next two weeks. This reorganization has been held in abeyance pending the federal court's action on a petition to reopen the Paramount claims' settlement, which was brought in August by Samual Zirn, attorney for a small group of Paramount bondholders. The settlement plan had been approved earlier by the United States district court in New York.

Currently, plans are being made for a sale of FWC assets at foreclosure, and a new company, controlled by Chase National Bank and Fox Film—FWC's principal creditors—will bid in the assets at the foreclosure sale.

The reorganization plan itself, scheduled to go into effect immediately thereafter, will not interfere with the present Fox West Coast operating setup. The election of Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, to the FWC presidency, as provided in the plan, is regarded as one of its vital provisions.

The circuit court of appeals' refusal to entertain Mr. Zirn's petition on the settlement permits Paramount to proceed with its FWC agreement. The claims arose out of alleged defaults by FWC of 1930 leases on seven Pacific Coast theatres which it subleased from Paramount.

Kuykendall Sees Reopening Of Film Code as Necessary



Charging that "certain interests" which were involved in the writing of the motion picture code are not keeping faith, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, this week forecast an early reopening of the entire code. Such action, he said, will be necessary unless these certain interests have the vision "to accept and realize what is coming about, and play fair."

The MPTOA president charged that various persons and interests are using every possible method to evade issues which were accepted by them in Washington. "I cannot help but believe it will be necessary to reopen the entire code unless these interests swing along with the rest of the boys and play a fair game," he said.

London Reports Quota Requirements Will Stay

No increase in the amount of British film footage which exhibitors are required to show under the quota law is called for during the coming year under the exhibitors' quota schedule, according to reports from London this week.

The annual schedule expires each October, up to and including 1938. Under the quota law a minimum of 15 per cent of the total footage exhibited in British theatres last year was required to be of British origin. After September 30, 1935, this percentage increases to 20 and remains at that level until expiration of the Films Act in 1938.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box offices, compares the business done in three Midwestern key cities during the twelve weeks' period from July 7 to September 22, 1934. The gross for each city in the first week of the period is taken as 100 per cent for that city.

PLAQUE PRESENTED BY NEW JERSEY GOVERNOR

Quigley Award for Best Exploitation Presented at State House to Edward M. Hart

With high ranking members of New Jersey officialdom looking on, Governor A. Harry Moore last week presented the Martin Quigley Award to Edward M. Hart, manager of the Reade Theatres, Plainfield, N. J., for the best exploitation campaign made in August, in the opinion of the judges of the monthly nationwide competition sponsored by The Managers' Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald. Mr. Hart's campaign on First National's "The Circus Clown" prepared the way for the showing of that production at the Oxford theatre in Plainfield.

Presented in Woodrow Wilson Room

The award ceremonies took place in the historic reception room in the governor's suite at the State House where Woodrow Wilson at one time guided the destinies of New Jersey. A picture of the presentation appears in the Round Table department of this issue.

The executive, legislative and military branches of the state government were all represented in the group which assembled to honor Mr. Hart.

"I congratulate you upon winning this distinction," Governor Moore declared as he made the presentation to the Plainfield showman.

"You have been chosen to receive this recognition by the Managers' Round Table Club through its Committee of Judges," declared Mr. Moore. "The award comes to you from the Motion Picture Herald and you are the first theatre manager in New Jersey to be so honored."

State Officials Attend

A delegation of Mr. Hart's friends from Union County came down to Trenton to witness the ceremonies. They included State Senator Charles E. Loizeaux, Freeholder Richard Harrigan and Joseph G. Carty, who is active in civic affairs.

Others surrounding Mr. Hart when the honor was bestowed were Secretary of State Thomas A. Mathis, of Toms River; Quartermaster General and Mrs. Stephen H. Barlow, Trenton; Adjutant General William A. Higgins, Jersey City; Assemblyman James I. Bowers, of Somerset County, and Commander Thomas B. Mulroy, of Jersey City, naval aid to the Governor and executive clerk.

Zohbel Is Named Radio Comptroller

Herman Zohbel, former treasurer of RKO, has been transferred to Hollywood as Comptroller of the Radio studios. No successor has been named as yet for the RKO treasurer's post. Robert F. Sisk, former director of advertising and publicity for RKO, who was appointed recently as assistant to J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio, the motion picture subsidiary, arrived on the Coast Monday of this week to assume his new duties.

Mr. Zohbel, prior to his connection with Radio-Keith-Orpheum, was associated with Hiram S. Brown in operation of the United States Leather Corporation.

"Nell Gwyn" Sets Record in London

"Nell Gwyn," British & Dominions production, equaled a long standing week-end record in its gross at the Leicester Square theatre, London, during its recent run. The theatre seats 2,000 and during the first four days slightly in excess of 50,000 paid admissions were recorded at the box office. The picture is distributed throughout the world by United Artists, but has not yet been released in this country.

Warner Signs Max Reinhardt

Max Reinhardt, famed European stage director, has been signed by Warner Brothers to an exclusive long term contract as a director, with his first production to be Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," and utilizing Felix Mendelssohn's music as background. (Picture in Pictorial Section.)

Mr. Reinhardt is in Los Angeles, where he recently staged the Shakespearean play out of doors in the Hollywood Bowl. Production on the film version is expected to begin November 15.

Jack L. Warner, in charge of Warner production, expressed the belief that there is a definite place for Shakespeare on the screen. Professor Reinhardt, long a famous figure in Europe, first came to the United States in 1924 to stage "The Miracle" in association with Morris Gest. One of the most notable Reinhardt achievements in the European theatre was the establishment of the Festival Playhouse in Salzburg, Austria. He controlled seven theatres in Berlin and two in Vienna at one time.

Prominent men in exhibition circles, as well as motion picture newspaper editors over the country, were lavish in their praise of the signing of the great director.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, said, "His genius should bring outstanding appreciation from the countless millions who look to us continuously for higher quality entertainment."

The tenor of the reactions of motion picture editors is indicated by the statement of Henry Murdock, of the Philadelphia Ledger, who said, " . . . This is a definite sign that the cinema is accepting the full responsibility and dignity of a true dramatic and poetic medium. . . . " Ray Budwin, of the Spokane Chronicle, said, "The signing of Reinhardt is an important step forward in cinema production and one which will put the industry on the threshold of a new era in entertainment."

William Dieterle, Warner director, who was for nine years an actor for and an assistant to Mr. Reinhardt in Europe, will be assistant director on the filming of "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Extensive roadshow campaigns are planned for four "specials" which Jack Warner has ordered into immediate production, and for which a production budget of nearly $3,000,000 has been set aside. The four are "Gold Diggers of 1935," "Sweet Music," "Casino de Paree" and "Devil Dogs of the Air."

Montague Says Columbia Sales Are 25% Higher

Columbia Pictures' sales this year are running 25 per cent ahead of last year, it was said by Abe Montague, sales manager, in Kansas City last week, en route to New York. He was scheduled to stop over in Chicago to make ready for the opening of "One Night of Love," at the Chicago theatre, October 19.

He declared opposition to dual features seemed to be petering out on the Coast, and expressed the opinion that the Legion of Decency influence seemed to be strong in the Midwest but not on the Coast.

NEWSREEL SCENE CHANGES, WITH NEW COMPANIES AND NEW FACES

Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone Become Separate Entities, Add Commentators; Ford New Universal Editor

The motion picture newsreel underwent a reconstruction this week, with new policies and methods of operation adopted by some and changes in executive personnel effected by others, as follows:

1. The joint production arrangement between Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone was physically terminated and each became a separate identity, Movietone to be produced by Truman H. Talley and edited by Laurence Stallings; Metrotone to be edited by M. D. Clofine.

2. Movietone and Metrotone appeared for the first time with wellknown news commentators explaining the action, Lowell Thomas narrating for Movietone and Edwin C. Hill for Metrotone.

3. Allyn Butterfield resigned as editor of Universal Newsreel and was succeeded by Charles E. Ford. Mr. Butterfield immediately joined Hearst Metrotone in an "editorial advisory" capacity. Hearst also announced the complete personnel of its new and independent staff.

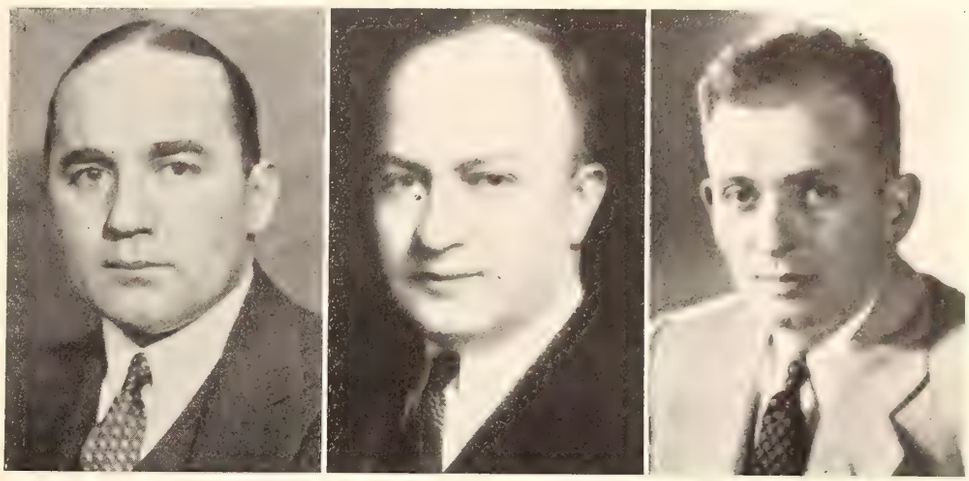
4. All the newsreel managements immediately set about to engage in spirited competition in "covering" the World's Series at Detroit and St. Louis.

5. Final stages of "improving the technique" of Time Magazine's "Dramatized Newsreel" have been reached at the laboratory, its sponsors said. It was confirmed that "major offers" for distribution had been made and that a decision would be announced within a week.

The Hearst reel had been produced by Fox Movietone since October 2, 1929, although it always had been physically distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. From now on Metrotone will be produced exclusively by a newly-created Hearst force stationed throughout the world.

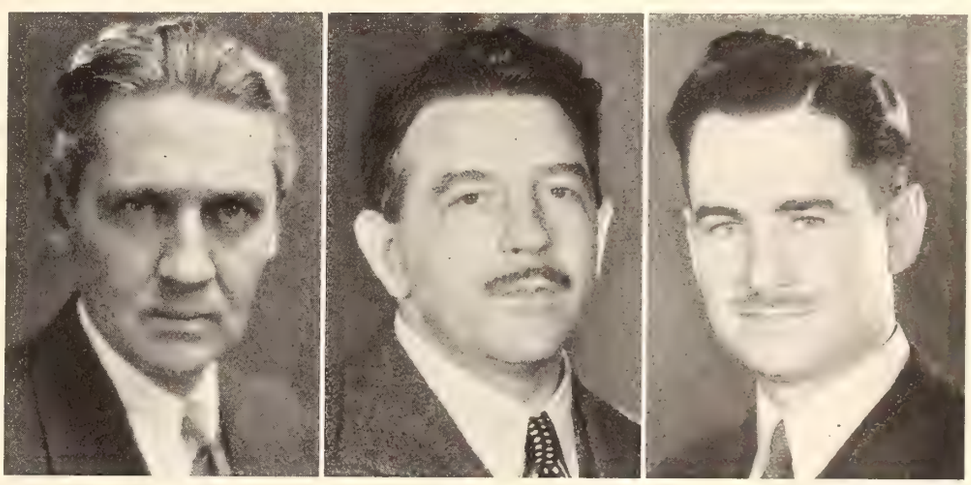
The new Hearst reel, featuring as commentator Edwin C. Hill, noted for his "Human Side of the News," made its initial appearance Tuesday simultaneously with the first issue of the reorganized Fox Movietone News, which employs an equally well-known commentator in the person of Lowell Thomas. Mr. Hill and Mr. Thomas, in addition to being newsreel competitors, also are radio competitors, Hill appearing over the Columbia network and Thomas on the National Broadcasting Company's hookup, nightly.

Thus, with two of the country's foremost newspapermen in their employ, Hearst and Fox Movietone have embarked upon one of the most aggressive merchandising campaigns engaged in by newsreel companies in many years. All the newsreels appear to have gone in for a program of heavy exploitation for their separate mediums, some selling their "box office commentators" and others relying upon quality of product.



Edgar B. Hatrick remains as general manager of Hearst Metrotone and M. D. "Mike" Clofine as editor. Mr. Butterfield, who will vacation for two weeks before taking up his Hearst duties, has not, according to Mr. Hatrick, been assigned any definite position in the executive or editorial structure. His relations with the organization will be of an editorial advisory nature.

Mr. Butterfield has been identified with the motion picture industry for many years. In 1915 he started as a Vitagraph actor, and in the succeeding eight years he was identified in production, editing features and serials for practically all the larger companies of the day. In 1923 he turned to the newsreel, joining International's editing staff. When Carl Laemmle started the Universal Newsreel again in 1929, Mr. Butterfield joined him as associate editor, later being given complete charge of the reel.



Charles E. Ford, the new Universal editor, was editor of the independent newsreel produced by The Chicago Daily News from 1925 to 1929. He became associated with Universal with the inception of the cooperative deal between Universal and the News in 1929. He came to New York last year in charge of the compilation of newsreel photographic material.

The induction of news and radio commentators such as Edwin C. Hill and Lowell Thomas into the newsreels took place in 1929, at which time Graham McNamee, well known radio sports announcer, became Universal's "Talking Reporter." Mr. McNamee has been with Universal ever since, and not until the Fox-Hearst split-up this week has any other newsreel employed a "big-name" commentator as a box office attraction.

There had been speculation over the possibility that the two remaining reels—Paramount and Pathe—might also employ a well-known commentator, but this was denied by both Paramount and Pathe.

The new Hearst organization has established offices in every principal territory in the world, with two in the Far East—Shanghai and Tokyo; five in Central Europe, one in England and main offices in New York, Washington, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Atlanta. In addition, Hearst has the usual complement of camera and sound men in every key locality.

In addition to Hatrick, Clofine, Hill and Butterfield, the staff of Hearst Metrotone consists of C. L. Mathieu, news editor; Walter Bredin, assistant news editor; Harbert Hancock, foreign editor; Ariel Varges, in charge of the Far East bureaus; Frank Shubert, Berlin; Umberto Romagnoli, Rome; Henri Cabiere, Paris, and Leslie Wynand, London.

Gaumont-Hearst Arrangement

Gaumont British News will produce the Hearst reel in England under an arrangement similar to the recent Fox-Hearst set-up.

In the United States, C. J. Hubbel will be in charge of west coast operations; Norman Alley, midwest manager, and J. C. Brown, Washington, D. C. The main office of Hearst Metrotone is at 1540 Broadway, New York, while its editorial office and laboratory are at 450 West 56th St., the same building in which Fox Movietone News is produced. Hearst, however, is merely renting space there, maintaining its own separate laboratory and editorial offices.

Among Hearst's "ace" cameramen are Joe Gibson, former Universal Newsreel man who was wounded during the insurrection in Cuba last winter while at his post; U. K. Whipple and John Bockhorst.

In addition to Lowell Thomas and Mr. Stallings, the Fox Movietone staff included Truman H. Talley, producer; E. I. Sponable, technical director; Edwin Harvey, make-up editor, and Edmund Reek, news editor. Members of Mr. Thomas' reporting staff include Louise Vance, reporter-announcer; Ed Thorgersen, sports editor and announcer; Vyvyan Donner, fashion editor; Jack Kuhne, aviation editor, and Low Lehr, reporter-announcer.

The five newsreels this week were preparing to engage in another spirited contest on coverage following the competition to cover the Morro Castle fire at sea and the Lindbergh case, with all available camera crews and quick transportation mediums centered on the World's Series baseball games at Detroit and St. Louis.

Universal established its own laboratories within a stone's throw of Nevin Field in Detroit. Universal's best camera and sound men were called in from their regular assignments to cover the series. Universal also hired Hal Totten, baseball expert of the National Broadcasting Company, to give a play-by-play description on the spot. Laboratory workers are developing the reels inning by inning while each game is in progress and those prints not needed in Detroit are flown by fast plane to key cities.

Fox Movietone sent its sports editor, Ed Thorgersen, to Detroit to do the narration on the ball games, in addition to two sound and two silent crews, and Pathe, Paramount and Hearst each sent three complete crews. All had fast express airplane facilities for delivery.

Union Disagreement Settled

In Chicago this week a union disagreement which for a time threatened to tie up all newsreel production in that city was settled at a meeting between George Browne, IATSE president, and Jack Connolly, E. Richards, and Edmund Reek, of Pathe, Paramount and Fox respectively. The dispute is reported to have arisen over employment by the news reels of sound men belonging to Local 666, a cameramen's union, which also includes sound engineers. Local 476, almost exclusively for sound men, said all newsreel men must belong to it. A compromise was reached whereby five sound men belonging to Local 666 also have joined Local 476.

Unemployed stagehands in Chicago this week were reported to be planning a coup whereby they could obtain jobs for themselves through elaboration of sound newsreel crews to include a stage hand as a member of each unit.

Newsreel men in New York, while refusing openly to discuss the report, pointed out that insofar as outdoor work is concerned, the crews need consist only of a cameraman and the sound man. Little equipment is required in most instances and stagehands would be an encumbrance rather than a help, they said. In the case of studio production work by the newsreels, stagehands are employed in all circumstances.

Securities Commission Refuses Saenger Listing

The Securities Exchange Commission at Washington, in one of its first moves in taking over supervision of stock exchanges, has refused registration and listing privileges to Saenger Theatres, Inc., certificates for deposit for first mortgage and collateral trust sinking fund 6 per cent gold bonds. The application is understood to have been in line with reorganization plans.

Refusal of the Washington commission to authorize registration of the Saenger stock will not affect the pending reorganization of those companies, according to counsel for Paramount Publix trustees who are factors in the reorganization.

Authority Must Decide Lease Case

The Code Authority this week was presented with a problem, the decision on which will determine whether or not theatre operations will continue in Jefferson City, Mo. The problem involved is the Code Authority's definition of what constitutes a member of the industry, in connection with the continued possession of a theatre.

This precedent-setting ruling expected from the Authority will determine a case certified to it by the Kansas City grievance board. The chief point is whether or not Harry Sodini, a former southern Illinois exhibitor, is engaged in the business because he leased the Jefferson and Miller theatres in Jefferson from W. H. Mueller before Dubinsky Brothers could conclude a purchase transaction with the owner, and then negotiated a deal with Dubinsky whereby the latter would either sell the unexpired lease or take over Sodini's.

At the original grievance hearing, Dubinsky charged Sodini was a "trader" and testimony brought out that Sodini offered Dubinsky $50,000 for the unexpired term of the current lease and, according to Dubinsky, offered to assign his future lease to the present operators at a bonus of $20,000 for the two houses.

It was brought out that Sodini had had no connection with the industry for 15 years prior to the time of the negotiations in question, but it was indicated that his Jefferson City activities and his dealings with Dubinsky in Kansas City might be construed as placing him in the business. The grievance board, in passing the case to the Code Authority, decided it was bound to find both Sodini and Mueller industry members and that their actions were deliberately designed to prevent consummation of the transaction between Dubinsky and Mueller.

A recommendation for removal of Article V, Section E, Part 6, dealing with interference with leases of theatres was made last week by the Code Authority's legal committee.

Hollywood independent producers Wednesday were lined up before the Code Authority in New York in a solid majority against reputed efforts of the Los Angeles clearance board to put into its schedule a direct prohibition of double features. I. E. Chadwick said the Los Angeles board had "camouflaged" the ban, but that it still is in the schedule, though the Code Authority has ordered all references to the practice withdrawn from all schedules.

An important decision was made during the week in Kansas City when it was ruled by the grievance board that seven changes weekly are too many for an exhibitor to use if his opposition is short of product.

Also of importance to exhibitors was the ruling this week of the Detroit grievance board that free exhibition of films within 25 miles of an established theatre is prohibited, thereby setting a national precedent.

The Code Authority this week issued a statement to all distributors in which it stated its attention had been brought to a practice on the part of certain film exchanges' managers "who have been thoughtlessly participating in violations of the code."

"Complaints filed by exhibitors alleging violations of Article V, Section E, Part 3 (1-b), that competitors 'fail at all times to maintain the minimum price of admission specified in any contract licensing the exhibition of any motion picture during the exhibition thereof,' have revealed that numerous respondents upon notice of a complaint filed against them, have obtained from distributors authorization to reduce admission prices subsequent to the filing of the complaint or subsequent to the order issued by the local grievance board," the statement said.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Press agentry or no, the Indiana papers made much of Guy Hammit's story about a carrier pigeon with a flair for the movies having wandered into his Strand theatre at Crawfordsville, the other evening. On the screen at the time was George Arliss' "House of Rothschild," in which the five sons of the famous old Mayer Rothschild employed carrier pigeons extensively to profit in their far-flung European banking chain. Probably Mr. Hammit's bird visitor desired to witness at first hand how his forebears carried on around the turn of the 18th century.

Two of the many unusual furnishings in the unusual Beverly Hills home of Warner-actor Edward G. Robinson, Rumanian-born son of Morris Goldenberg, are: (1) a pure white, thick-as-a-cushion carpet on the bedroom floor of Mrs. Robinson; and, (2) a solid gold tea set which once met the lips of Napoleon the Great. Mr. Robinson, a speaker of eight languages, including Hollywoodese, and an admirer of Napoleon, keeps his gold tea set carefully guarded in a cabinet which also was once a Napoleonic possession. There are many relics of Napoleon about the house.

"Little Caesar" Robinson delights in showing his Napoleonic treasures to visitors, but only on special occasions, and then he explains their fine points much in the same manner as the guides who conduct the inquisitive through the innards of the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor.

The Salvation Army in New York is pepping up its street shows with a modern musical combination: A small organ and two crooners. The crooners do harmonies—each using a megaphone. We heard 'em croon the other night under our 14th-floor editorial window overlooking Columbus Circle. They mix religion and crooning with the claim, "The devil was no musician—the only tune he ever wrote was the spittoon!"

Director Cecil Blount DeMille maintains that he has done as much for humanity as Louis Pasteur by glorifying the bathroom.

"For some reason or other," says Hollywood's "Knight of the Bath," the "subject was taboo. No one seemed to care about what happened to the bathroom. And so I decided to make it the most beautiful room in the house, since it really is the most useful.

"Forty years ago the bathroom was the summer resort for all the bugs in captivity. We had old tin tubs with permanent wooden foundations where the cockroaches held meetings for years. So, when I started making pictures I decided to make the world bathroom-conscious.

"Yes," mused the director, "bathtubs and I have been friends for a long time. I'm even on speaking terms with shower baths.

"Confidentially" (for publication), he added, "in my own home the bathrooms are in no way unusual, but they are big and spacious enough for comfortable occupancy."

Seventy-nine years ago this month P. T. Barnum started baby shows, in his lively New York museum of the "Wonders of the World." They still echo in every other sequence of the newsreels.

Back in '55 the usual giants, midgets and physical and mental monstrosities of the Barnum showplace gave way to a flock of howling youngsters of egotistical parents. It was the first "Great Baby Show." There were fat babies and lean babies, twin babies and triplets, babies in mothers' arms and babies in fathers' arms, tall babies, small babies and bald babies. The show was a sellout from the start and lasted until the contestants who had received none of the "upward of $1,000 in cash prizes" revolted and bundled their offspring homeward.

The Legion of Decency has had its effect. Mae West will finally come forth in "I'm a Lady," leaving behind her her "I'm No Angel," "She Done Him Wrong" and the like.

S. Bernard Joffee, who, at 25, holds a seven-year record as the youngest manager of a de luxe first-run theatre in these United States, believes that his patrons ought to hear only new stories and gags from the performers appearing on the stage of his Tower theatre in downtown Kansas City. He therefore has posted backstage a list of "don'ts" for vaudevillians. It contains some 200 chestnuts, sayings and quips that were brand new when Grant took Richmond, facetious song titles such as "Father Cut Your Toenails, You're Tearing All the Sheets," or "When It's Rhubarb Time in Russia, Will You Bolsheviki Me?", etc.

For every infraction of the index expurgatorius, Barney assesses a fine against the act. But, the trouble is, he says, that the identical list was originally hung in the old Globe, once an outstanding theatre in Kansas City, and is at least 20 years old. And since, by the inexorable workings of the repetitive cycle, old jokes eventually become new ones again, it is hard to collect the fines from performers who use the old gags that are new to the present generation of theatregoers. It looks as if Barney will have to depend on his box-office for receipts.

Only four of the presidents of the eight large motion picture corporations are listed in the New York telephone book. This is contrary to all the rules of motion picture press agentry.

The directory contains no Merlin Hall Aylesworth (RKO), Sidney R. Kent (Fox), Carl Laemmle (Universal) or Harry Morris Warner.

Listed are Jack Cohn (Columbia), Bryant 9-7900; Joseph M. Schenck (United Artists), Bryant 9-7300; Nicholas M. Schenck (M-G-M), brother of Joseph, Bryant 9-7800; Adolph Zukor (Paramount), Chickering 4-7050.

This is a hectic week for the townsfolk down New Orleans way, what with "The Return of the Terror" and its four murders holding forth at the St. Charles theatre; "Death on the Diamond" showing the usual number of take-offs at Loew's State; "Murder on the Blackboard" at the Liberty with more sudden journeys to places unknown; "The Man from Hell" established at the St. Maurice; six United States warships in the harbor and 2,500 sailors on the loose; 1,000 visiting druggists in convention; one dozen ministers preparing for a fresh onslaught on films; others fighting local vice from their pulpits; Huey Long and Mayor Walmsley making up (temporarily), and, last, but not least, the unfathomable decision of the Mayor to crack down on picture houses with a two per cent gross tax the while he declared football contests exempt because "they are educational."

Add to Hollywood's idiosyncrasies, Dan Thomas' story about Betty Furness, who, when under contract to RKO, was not considered by studio officials to have such great value as an actress. When her contract elapsed last spring, MGM signed her for a long term. But as yet she hasn't had a chance to make a picture for Metro, having been borrowed to appear in three outside productions—for RKO.

As Anna Sten sees it, a woman is better able to work when her clothes are not designed to attract attention to her figure. Men and women should work beside each other, but they should think only of their work, according to Mr. Goldwyn's Russian importation.

We could assume that the spicy cut of Anna's clothes in "Nana," her first characterization in this country, had some effect on the exploiteers.

50,000 Children March in Legion Parade in Chicago

The Legion of Decency in Chicago last week sent 50,000 school children parading down Michigan Avenue through the city's business districts in the first public demonstration of its kind in behalf of the Legion's campaign for better motion pictures.

Marching between thousands lining both curbs were students from all of the upper grades of Chicago's parochial schools, from the elementary and high schools, the six Chicago colleges and two universities under Catholic direction; nurses from all local Catholic hospitals, members of the Catholic Youth Organization and divisions of Boy Scouts of America affiliated with the various parishes.

They carried banners with inscriptions of which the following were typical:

"We Want Decent Movies."

"Wholesome Sport Makes Wholesome Men."

"The Legion of Decency — To Preserve Our Ideals."

"Our Campaign: For Decent Movies."

"Our Aim: To Reform — Not To Destroy — The Movies."

"Our Pledge: To Stay Away from Indecent Movies."

"Films We Must See, but Clean They Must Be."

"Decency, the Deathknell of Depravity."

"Chicago Youth Shall Boycott Evil Films."

Directed by the Most Reverend Bernard J. Shell, senior auxiliary bishop, the demonstration was reviewed by many Catholic prelates, among them the Most Reverend John Timothy McNicholas, Archbishop of Cincinnati, chairman of the bishops' committee in charge of the campaign. Others in the reviewing stand were state and city officials.

At the same time that Chicago's school children were parading, Bishop John C. Cantwell, of Los Angeles, was in Rome informing Pope Pius XI that for several weeks there has been a notable improvement seen in Hollywood motion pictures.

Movements in England and Spain

Cable advices in New York from London and Madrid indicated a movement to raise motion picture standards had been launched in England and Spain, with the Spanish government directing the drive especially against literature. In England it was said 250,000 pledges have been signed in a campaign with 1,000,000 as the goal.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, from headquarters in New York, sent to exhibitors a suggestion that "because many fine pictures now coming through are doing much to convince the public that the situation is being adjusted," they should adopt affirmative policies in merchandising and publicize the existence of the new standard.

Howard E. Jameyson, Fox Midwest district manager at Wichita, Kan., urged fairness in judging the screen before the annual Missouri conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Carthage, Mo.

Mr. Jameyson's plea "not to condemn the medium because of the derelictions of a few," was in rebuttal to a paper read by Mrs. A. E. Peterson, of Springfield, Mo., a delegate, in which she asserted "the majority of the pictures are nothing less than a menace to the future of our nation."

In New York, premature reports were heard that the Interfaith Committee, formed during the summer at the height of the church crusade, would find favorably for the industry in a review to be made next week of the efforts of Hollywood to improve pictures. The Right Reverend Monsignor Michael J. Lavelle, vicar general of the New York diocese, is chairman of the committee, which is composed of Protestant and Catholic clergymen.

The American Civil Liberties Union this week wrote to leaders in the Legion asking them to define their aims and the methods of attaining them. The letter was written, it was explained, to find out just how the Legion stood on the question of "bureaucratic censorship," which the union opposes. Legion spokesmen repeatedly have declared they do not favor censorship.

Women Extend Cooperation

Extension of cooperation between national women's groups and theatres became evident. The San Francisco County Federation of Women's Clubs advised its members to visit theatres showing pictures selected by the Federation. Mrs. Walter McGinn, Federation leader, asked San Francisco exhibitors to feature children's programs on Saturdays. She promised the support of her organization.

The California Congress of Parents and Teachers also decided to patronize selected films and ignore the others.

Mrs. Charles Holton, state chairman of motion pictures for the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, urged her groups to "make the public motion picture conscious; urge families to attend in groups; arrange weekend 'family' bookings and discourage children from attending in midweek."

National Coverage First Division Aim Thomas Tells Staff

The first annual convention of First Division Pictures got under way at the Park Central Hotel in New York on Saturday morning and executives and salesmen immediately set to work on the problem of future sales policies, new production plans and exchange expansion. Complete national coverage with First Division exchanges in every key center within the next few months, was the goal set by Harry Thomas, president, who opened the meeting.

At the opening session Mr. Thomas also introduced to the assembled branch managers, salesmen and bookers, Nicholas Ludington and William M. L. Fiske, 3rd, who entered the motion picture business together two weeks ago when they purchased a substantial block of First Division's outstanding stock. The entrance of Mr. Ludington and Mr. Fiske into the First Division setup is expected to hasten the expansion of the company's distribution facilities. In addition to such expansion, the company plans to enter active production, Mr. Thomas told the convention, with four feature pictures of Class A calibre for the 1934-35 season, these to supplement product already set.

Among those adressing the opening day's session, in addition to Mr. Thomas, were Mr. Ludington and Mr. Fiske, Charles Rosenzweig, Al Freidlander and Julius Chapman. Budd Rogers, general sales manager of Liberty Pictures, whose product First Division is releasing in a number of territories, spoke on the 12 pictures his company is producing this season. Louis Hyman, executive of Sol Lesser's company, spoke on "Return of Chandu."

On Saturday afternoon several Audio short subjects were screened. These inclued "Mexican Idyll" of the Musical Moods series, and "Old Faithful Speaks," of the Thrilling Journeys series. Features shown were "Schools for Girls," "The Curtain Falls" and "Return of Chandu."

The convention adjourned on Sunday after Mr. Thomas had delivered a final talk on the aims and ideals of the company. He stated that the four special features will be made with first class writers, casts and directors. About 60 branch managers, salesmen, bookers and home office representatives attended the sessions.

First Division has signed for International distribution of four Hoot Gibson and six Rex Bell westerns, to be produced respectively by Gibson and Alfred Mannon.

Al Friedlander will leave immediately to open exchanges on the Coast. Mike Howard was appointed division manager of New Orleans, Charlotte and Atlanta exchanges.

Alford, Sr., McComb, first vice-president; J. A. West, Louisville, second vice-president; W. E. Elkin, Aberdeen, secretary-treasurer.

Urges Cooperation By India Producers

The motion picture industry in India should strive to achieve the sort of co-operation which characterizes the business in the United States, Charles H. Christie, vice-president of the Mitchell Camera Corporation, told a meeting of film men in Bombay recently during a world tour. He discussed "Film Production in America and the Far East."

Mr. Christie pointed out the advantages that accrue to the entire industry in this country as a result of the operation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and suggested the value in duplication of that type of co-operation on the part of the production interests of India.

He indicated as his opinion that the film situation in India and Japan are similar, since both have a highly limited market because of language, and urged that Indian studios produce only for the home market. Variety of program, faster tempo in individual pictures and shorter length, were pointed out by Mr. Christie as needs of the moment.

Jayant Desai, director of Ranjit Film Company, Bombay, another speaker, also insisted that productions in India are far too long, that reduced length would add to the effectiveness of pictures in speeding action and relieving the monotony now a characteristic of the domestic product.

Warner Denies He Bought Theatres

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Bros., late Tuesday denied reports published in the news press that he personally had purchased four theatres in Philadelphia—central point of Warner theatre control—for the reputed sum of $1,645,000, from the estates of William Freihofer and Frederick G. Nixon-Nirdlinger. Said Mr. Warner:

"I wish to deny emphatically the dispatch from Philadelphia published in Tuesday's New York Times to the effect that I have purchased four theatres in Philadelphia. The statement in the dispatch and also, I understand, in Philadelphia newspapers, to the effect that 'it was said that Mr. Warner bought the theatres for himself rather than for Warner Bros., and that he would operate them independently of the Warner chain,' is utterly untrue," his statement said.

"Neither I, nor either of my brothers, nor any executive of our organization, has bought or will buy any theatre for personal operation independently of the theatre operations of Warner Bros. or its subsidiaries."

The theatres named are the Tower, at 69th st., Upper Darby; the Frankford and Roosevelt theatres, Frankford, and the Nixon theatre in West Philadelphia.

Declaring that Mr. Warner did not participate in any such deal in his personal interests, the Warner home office dismissed a query as to whether the Warner Brothers corporation had acquired the properties, with the explanation that "it would be foolish inasmuch as Paramount still has 16 years to run on its leases of all four theatres." However, Paramount theatre executives in New York said later that there had been discussion with Warner Bros. whereunder Warner Bros. would take over the properties as part of a deal which later was abandoned.

'SUPERBLY ENTERTAINING' FOR A FILM

Says DeCasseres of 20th Century-Al Woods' "Red Cat"; Sees Broadway Destined to Be Preview Alley

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

THE RED CAT

The raid of Hollywood on Broadway continues. In fact, it looks as if Broadway was destined to become Preview Alley.

The latest play to be presented jointly is "Red Cat," by Rudolph Lothar and Hans Adler. It was produced by Al Woods in conjunction with Twentieth Century Pictures, which is to film it.

It was whispered under the seats that Maurice Chevalier and Constance Bennett are billed for the screen version.

I can pleasurably visualize the charming Frenchman in the double role of Eugene Charlier, a famous mimic and impersonator of the Parisian cafés, and the Baron Fernand Cassini, a combination of Otto Kahn and Match King Kreuger, with a touch of the late Monsieur Stavisky.

But Constance Bennett as Mimi (a part taken in the stage version by the so-so Tamara Geva) does not jump instantly to my eye. Maybe I'm mistaken in this.

"The Red Cat," although a ticklishly amusing bit of hokum and refurbished claptrap, will make superbly entertaining screen diversion. It is modeled a little on "The Guardsman" and has reminders of "The Dark Tower" ("The Man with Two Faces").

The Red Cat is a famous and High Ritzy Parisian café-music hall. Here Eugene Charlier takes off, among others, the famous international financier and notorious Don Juan, the Baron Cassini.

Cassini and his handsome and infidelity-complacent wife view Charlier's impersonation from a box. The Count is delighted. Madame is fascinated. Romance between Charlier and Genevieve Cassini begins to burble.

Meanwhile financial clouds begin to gather over Cassini's head. The knees of all the big Bourse boys begin to quake. Cassini is the big question—and the answer.

He has got to raise billions of francs in two days. He flies to London to get it. But he must not (to quiet rumors) be absent for a moment from his bank and the Bourse.

So (now march on the high spots) Cassini's partners get Charlier to impersonate Cassini on the Bourse, in his bank, and even in his home, where he (the actor) receives the President of France, gets an enormous sum from the Finance Minister—and—well, there's a bedroom, naturally, and Genevieve.

Now, the fun is here: it is really Cassini (who has returned secretly from London) and not Charlier, his double, who "seduces" his own wife to test her.

There is some very clever labyrinthine comedy in the last act, good stunt stuff, which will require the fine manicure scissors of a wily scenarist to get over without offending the immortal souls of the Storm Troops of Purity.

Francis Lister did notably well in the double role—but it belongs to Chevalier by gift of nature.

COLLEGE SINNERS

"Chin up!" "Cherio!"—the scene this time being dear old Oxford, where, it seems, they have necking parties, gambling soirées and lisping epicenes who are as shy as a pound note in the Orkney Islands.

But with considerable cleansing and rinsing of some naughty spots and scabrous words, there's a picture in "College Sinners," a comedy by Terence Rattigan and Philip Heimann (the Shuberts producing).

Frankly, some of the male characters in this thing gave me a kind of nausea in the chest, especially some of the homosexual implications, which must, of course, be dissolved into "manly friendship" when (and if) this opus reaches the screen.

The authors also with bare English bravado pulled a line as their own that I first saw in the Saturday Evening Post more than twenty years ago. It is by Sam Blythe in his "Life from the Water-Wagon"—"Work is the curse of the drinking classes." (Ah! I have a memory as long as an elephant's.)

Open on the rooms of two Oxford chums, Tony Wodehouse and David Lister. Tony is jelly-weak. He is in debt to Dave. They can call one another off-color names with a smile. Dave is a cynic. Woman is his meat. Tony is sentimental—believes in love. Lots of clevah lines.

In blows Margot Gresham, famous actress, from London. She's going to do amateur theatricals with the boys. Margot is really a classy type and older than the Oxford epigram glass-blowers.

Tony falls in love with her. Here the theme comes out of the fog. David hates Margot—she is going to break up the bond between him and Tony.

Derby Day. The boys have staked all on a horse.

Tony skips to London with Margot. Returns rather disillusioned. Meanwhile Dave gets into a drunken escapade in an Oxford hotel with an ingénue fluzzy. Bedroom scene—funny in England, but heavy stuff here.

Final curtain: Tony and Dave still good friends. Women are out of their lives—temporarily.

ERRANT LADY

Nat Dorfman, publicity man-inextraordinary to the theatre, has taken to writing a play; and he swung an amusing (in spots) comedy in "Errant Lady" (H. A. Berg and David Lederman producing).

Now the versatile Nat had no other notion in this plan than to amuse the audience, which he did, here and there; but not as often as should be. And if he had his eye on a Hollywood customer, he will probably be in the money there, for "Errant Lady" is as sure a picture candidate as has come along the lane since the season opened, which, I regret to say, isn't saying much.

The place is up in Westchester. Clara Jessup runs the Jessup family on a code that the White House knows nothing about. She is Matriarch-Pulverizer, a mother and wife who moves swiftly in domestic matters and like the roar of many waters.

For twenty years she's been gradually reducing her husband to a cross between a petrified mollusc and an ossified jellyfish. He can't go duck-hunting. He can't smoke anywhere in the house, and as to golf, well, Clara allows him that—it's a little exercise in the jail courtyard.

There's Sylvia Jessup, the daughter, decently married to a likable but sedate fellow.

In blows a White Russian, poet, nobleman, or something. Sylvia and Vic Rachmanaov are soon As One. Looks like a divorce—Reno. Mater is against divorces, as she's agin everything.

There is a shindy in which Sylvia's husband threatens to shoot the Snow-White Russian with an empty revolver over the drinks. Just wanted to skeer him.

Clara gets slugged on the jaw in the course of the fracas. And to save the situation she announces to the son-in-law that the Rinso-Cleansed Russian is really in love with her. Lady Mussolini is weakening perceptibly.

This "revelation" sets the old man all a-twitter. Just what he wanted. He also toys with the idea of divorce, and meanwhile sneaks off to ping some ducks—at last!

Mamma has learned her lesson—literally on the chin. The young couple are reconciled. And all is well, as you suspected.

Joanna Powers was more than grand as Clara. In fact, all of them were good. The dialogue is snappy. The pace is fast. I can see Mary Boland and Roland Young, maybe, racing away with this.

THE MIKADO

With a $3.30 top in one of the largest theatres in New York, the Martin Beck, the house was not only sold out for all first three performances of "The Mikado" but the firemen ordered the cessation of the sale of standing-room-only tickets when the battling crowd threatened to carry away the box-office.

And you—and you—and you—tell me that this opera wouldn't make money in pictures—in colors, with action tricked in to illustrate the songs, with the choruses moving off into the sound strip and the singer moving into the action! Verily I say unto you, bah! and Pooh-bah!

The D'Oyly Carte "Mikado" is a new opera. You've never heard this masterpiece of lyrical chuckling and prancing frivolity until you've seen this production.

A scenarist and a director with a genius for the comic—they're all that are necessary.

Let the loud-mouths who are bawling about the "stench of the screen" dig down and produce "The Mikado." Put up or shut up!

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

78 MILLION WORDS A YEAR SENT SOMETHING NEW IN TRAILERS
CIVIC LEAGUE HEARS PETTIJOHN
13 FILMS START, FIVE FINISHED

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

HOOEY by the carload has, does and probably will continue to emanate from Hollywood. Nevertheless, the film capital merits its reputation as one of the three greatest sources of legitimate news interest on the continent. Only Washington and New York compare with it.

Here are a few bits of illuminating data, compiled by the analytically minded and statistically inclined Jack Lewis, who during the past three years with the enthusiastic cooperation of his boss, Joseph I. Breen, has devoted much time and effort to putting Hollywood's new Public Relations house in some semblance of order.

Daily, by wire and mail, 250 accredited correspondents release to 13,500 newspapers and hundreds of magazines the amazing total of 250,000 words. The importance which the three great wire services attach to Hollywood is seen in the following figures. Altogether they carry more than 10,500 words every day from Hollywood to every nook and corner of the land. Associated Press handles 5,000 words a day, United Press 3,000 and International News Service 2,500 to 2,700 from their own reporters.

Columnists and special writers add to this total, principally via air mail, an average of 33,000 words a day. Yet their combined figures are only a little more than half of the 80,000 that special representatives send to their publications.

This total of 123,500 words of daily spot news is still but half of the regular daily output. Every working day, contributors to publications, both related and unrelated to the motion picture industry, click off the astounding number of 126,500 words for fan magazines, Sunday supplements and special assignments.

The 250,000 words a day makes a million and a half words per six-day working week, or the astronomical total of 78,000,000 words a year accepted by editors, publishers and readers as legitimate and authentic Hollywood news. That the three wire services think so much of Hollywood as a news center as to load their wires with 3,650,000 words of spot news each year gives a graphic clue to the importance which the news reading public attaches to the picture industry.

Applauding Trailers

Applauding of trailers at the Los Angeles Loew's State theatre, said Manager Bob Smith, has been noted several times recently, the latest being when the trailer of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" was shown.

Further information was sought from MGM. Studios, used to all sorts of wild-eyed queries, evidenced their amazement that some one asked to be shown a group of trailers.

After much pleading, the advertising-publicity department got a projection room, rounded up a bunch of trailers, and showed several on pictures that already have been released, such as "Hide-Out," "The Thin Man," "Barretts," "Death on the Diamond" and "Student Tour."

But something new was shown—the regular and special trailer for "The Merry Widow." The regular trailer, to a symphonic accompaniment, concisely sells all drama, romance, comedy, spectacle, thrill and color of the show in production and personnel, even to introducing the director, Lubitsch.

The special trailer—really a short—held more than usual interest. Titled "Happy Days Are Here Again," with thematic music, there are shots from "Ben Hur," "The Big Parade," "Broadway Melody," "Grand Hotel," "Rasputin and the Empress," "Dinner at Eight" and "The Big House," with entertainment value described orally.

A plane zooms in the sky, the MGM plant is pictured and then nose-diving down, "The Merry Widow" is mentioned for the first time. There is shown the effort devoted to research in set architecture, costuming, etc. Then a camera crane and its crew are depicted photographing one of the colorful sequences. Follows a trip on a camera car and the manner of making long shots and close-ups revealed, next an explanation of the microphone and the sound-control room, and a seamstress working on the costumes and their modeling. Franz Lehar, writer of the music, is introduced and the stars and the elaborate spectacle are presented.

Nine minutes in running time, this special trailer is a genuine departure in entertainment and showmanship salesmanship.

Sponsored by local leaders of the leading women's club organizations, a general information bureau concerning classification of motion picture entertainment was established here at the Los Angeles main public library.

News Flashes . . .

Spencer Tracy again failed to show up for work on the starting date of Fox's "Helldorado" and continued A. W. O. L. the second day, necessitating the engaging of Richard Arlen to take his place. Tracy's salary has been suspended awaiting the return of Winfield Sheehan.

C. C. Pettijohn, counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, addresses delegates to the annual convention of the California Municipalities League in Pasadena. In his speech he defended block booking and upheld the moral standards of personnel of the industry in which he said: "Ninety-five per cent of the people in the film industry are decent and clean minded, the other five per cent do not belong."

To accommodate the company's most pretentious production schedule, J. L. Warner has authorized construction of four huge sound stages and additional studio operating buildings. Construction will begin at once giving employment to more than 2,000 additional workmen for the next four months.

New pictures in production took a big swing upward as 13 features were started in the past week. Warner with four, Radio and Columbia with three each, account for 10 pictures. Fox, MGM and Paramount contribute one apiece. The number of completed pictures totals only five. Three of these are Warner, the other two Fox and Columbia.

Most of the newly started product promises big picture class. Whether recently published statements indicating a surprising increase in theatre patronage is the reason or it is a desire to meet keener competition, production programs are being geared to have plenty of substantially good entertainment for any demand, with high standard story value, personalities and production assets.

The four new Warner productions graphically illustrate the trend. "Devil Dogs of the Air," again teaming James Cagney and Pat O'Brien, with Margaret Lindsay featured, has all the earmarks of being a worthy follow-up of "Here Comes the Navy." "Right to Live," dramatic romance, will present a cast headed by George Brent, Josephine Hutchinson, Colin Clive and Genevieve Tobin. In the newly started "White Cockatoo," Jean Muir, Ricardo Cortez, Gordon Westcott, Ruth Donnelly and John Eldredge will be seen. Last of the new four, "Racing Luck," an adventure romance, will feature Lyle Talbot.

Radio's new trio include a farcical comedy, a character drama romance and a topical dramatization of a widely-known current event. The comedy, "Lightning Strikes Twice," features Ben Lyon and Thelma Todd, supported by Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher, Chick Chandler, Laura Hope Crews and Gregory Ratoff. The second picture, "Portrait of Laura Bales," will feature May Robson, Hale Hamilton, Alan Hale, Edward Van Sloan and Mary Carlisle. "The Silver Streak" dramatizes the creation, construction and introduction of the Burlington railroad's motor-driven train, The Zephyr.

Columbia checks in three new features. First is "Fugitive Lady," romantic drama in which Neil Hamilton, Florence Rice, Donald Cook and Clara Blandick will be seen. "Stake Out," a semi-thriller, features Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen, Charles Sabin, Matthew Betz and Maidel Turner. "Burnt Ranch" is a western, starring Jack Holt, with Marion Shilling.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new feature, "Wicked Woman," introduces a new personality, Mady Christians.

At Fox Movietone, "Helldorado" was put before the cameras. Dick Arlen, borrowed from Paramount, is starred, with Madge Evans, Stepin Fetchit, James Gleason and Lionel Atwill in support.

Paramount's tentatively titled "One Hour Late" is a music-tinged comedy romance with Joe Morrison and Francis Drake in the leads.

Of the three completed Warner pictures, two look to be decidedly in the big picture class. "I Am a Thief" presents Ricardo Cortez, Mary Astor, Dudley Digges, Hobart Cavanaugh, Irving Pichel and Ferdinand Gottschalk. "Bordertown" stars Paul Muni in a unique drama.

The third Warner feature is "Maybe It's Love," a comedy romance for Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander, Helen Lowell and Joseph Cawthorn.

"Elinor Norton," completed Fox drama of a woman's romances, has Claire Trevor, Hugh Williams, Norman Foster and Henrietta Crosman.

Last of the completed pictures is Columbia's "Wolves of Catclaw," a western featuring Tim McCoy, Sheila Manners and Alden Chase.

Paramount Claims Are $154,047,735

Claims filed against the Paramount Publix Corporation on September 15 stood at $154,047,735, according to a statement issued this week by the trustees in bankruptcy. On June 18, the trustees had listed claims against the corporation as $50,600,000.

"The total claims filed in the Paramount bankruptcy proceeding and deemed filed under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy act and the new claims filed in the latter proceeding, exclusive of duplications, up to September 15, 1934, according to a recent calculation made by counsel for the Paramount trustees, is $154,047,735.82," the trustees' statement said. "This figure includes a large number of claims which have been filed in amounts believed to be considerably higher than those at which such claims will finally be liquidated."

No federal action on the Paramount Broadway reorganization plan is expected as a result of the scrutiny given the plan last week by the Congressional committee investigating protective committee set up to represent holders of defaulted mortgage bonds, it was indicated late last week.

A plan for formation of a subsidiary of Famous Theatres Corporation, to operate the Paramount theatres in Middletown and Hamilton, Ohio, was approved by Federal Judge Coxe in New York Monday.

Rosenblatt Will Address the AFL

Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt left Washington early Wednesday by airplane for San Francisco where, on Friday, he plans to address the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor.

Developments in the labor and union situation throughout the field during the week included a 20 per cent increase in pay for union operators in six second run Canton, Ohio, theatres, as of September 1.

In Cincinnati injunction suits charging violation of the code were filed against eight local theatres by Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 327, on the ground that operators are being paid less than the code's minimum scale.

In New York, Mrs. Elinore M. Herrick, vice-chairman of the Regional Labor Board, was named regional director.

Paper's Ad Rates Further Explained

Further explanation of the schedule of motion picture advertising rates charged by the Baltimore Sun was made this week by the publishers, following publication in Motion Picture Herald on September 22 of a national survey of newspaper charges for theatre and film advertising.

The Sun, which has not changed motion picture advertising rates for a number of years, has a rate of 50 cents per agate line for advertisements of all Baltimore theatres, whether they are motion picture theatres or houses with vaudeville or stage show policies. This rate is applicable to ads inserted in the amusement column, either in the morning or evening issues. If any out-of-town theatre, for instance a Washington, D. C., house, wishes to compete with Baltimore theatres by running an advertisement in the Sun's amusement columns, the rate to this out-of-town advertiser would be $1.25 per agate line, covering both morning and evening editions.

The Sun publishers said that run-of-paper advertising of film producers is billed at 50 pents per line on the 1,000-line basis, and not 65 cents. This rate covers insertion of ads in both morning and evening issues, and is the general ad rate.

The publishers of the Boston Post, another newspaper which has not increased rates for motion picture advertising, explained that the same rate—60 cents per agate line, and not 80 cents as stated in the Herald article—is in effect for general advertising, national motion picture and local theatre advertising.

A. H. Marchant, advertising director of the Boston Post, declared that the publication has a policy of not "socking the theatres" by charging them higher rates than those charged the general run of advertisers.

TAX BRINGS THREATS OF FILMLESS MEXICO

Proposed Levy Would Raise Several Distributors' Tax Payments Up to 3,000 Per Cent

By JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Now that all signs point to Mexico City becoming a world capital without a single playhouse, as theatre after theatre here is going cinema, there is also the probability that not only the Mexican metropolis but all Mexico as well may become a land without either stage or screen entertainment. Or perhaps, thespians who are crying so loudly about the cinema seizing their little all will dry those tears and rejoice at a sudden turn of fate they didn't expect.

The closure of practically every cinema in Mexico is in the offing, unless the national government changes its mind about putting into effect a new tax. That is what the National Association of Motion Picture Distributors threatens. The Association's members include the nine American and two European producers who are represented in this territory. The tax looks little, but it is plenty big, says the Association. It is a proposed levy of 10% of the gross price on every article that is rented in this land—radios, piano, and things like that. The Government wants the impost applied to motion picture film, discs and such that are distributed. And there rises the rub.

Urged Films Be Exempted

The Association urged the Government to lay off the levy as far as the motion picture business is concerned, asserting that the impost would raise its members' tax payments up to around 3,000 per cent. This, the petition said, would oblige every foreign country to quit this territory, and automatically shut nearly every picture house in the country, as Mexican cinemas get most of their programs from beyond the national borders. Mexican producers are not yet prepared regularly to supply the country's 750 film theatres.

It is learned in Mexico City's film row that these gentlemen have had their taxes elevated in the following proportions the last three years:

Discs, 1,200 per cent; duties on films, etc., 450 per cent; impost on sums they credit New York, 60 to 250 per cent; municipal levies, 150 per cent.

The Government instructed its ministry of finance to look into the matter. The ministry put a committee of experts to work to see whether films, discs and whatnot that are rented in the cinematographic industry can be left out of the statute's provisions.

American companies distributing here are Paramount, MGM, United Artists, Warner-First National, Universal, Fox, Pathe, Columbia and RKO. Ufa and Gamus are the two European houses represented here.

Metro's Leo is smiling expansively in Mexico City, now that he has triumphed over a whole row of obstacles that arose when production of "Viva Villa" began in this interesting land last autumn and popped up again even before the ink had dried on publicity announcing that the production was going to be shown in the Mexican capital.

Exhibitors were not surprised when they learned that the Union of Cinematographic Employees of the Federal District, which includes Mexico City, had decreed a boycott against "Viva Villa" on the ground that it makes fun of Mexico and slurs the Mexican revolution, the moving spirits of the great social revolution that began in 1910 with Pancho Villa very much a figure. But the exhibitors, and in fact the whole industry here, raised eyebrows when the Union decided not to act on its own accord in banning Metro's ace Mexican production, as it did in the case of "Thunder Over Mexico," but to put the matter up to the National Confederation of Workers and Peasants, a very strong labor organization.

The eyebrows went up further when the Confederation announced, in newspaper advertisements, that it had decided against backing the Union's boycott, inasmuch as both the picture and its exhibitions had been officially approved. The Confederation added that it is with the Union in what it says against the production but it prefers to leave responsibility for exhibits of the picture to the Government.

Own Congress Opposes Inquiry

"Viva Villa" is doing capacity business at the Cine Regis. Whether by design or mere chance, this cinema is directly under the balcony of the hotel that Lee Tracy made known far and wide last November, during filming of the first version of "Viva," getting himself shipped back to Hollywood at the expense of the Mexican Government. However, exhibitions of the picture have not been all smooth. During a full house attendance, two little bombs, about the size and caliber of those that were popular during oldtime Fourth of July celebrations, were exploded. A woman and a girl were slightly injured and many patrons hastened out of the cinema, though there was no panic. No arrests were made, but the police were seeking the bombers, who they believe are reds or folk with a curious sense of patriotism. The cinema was closely guarded by policemen and detectives.

Congress laughed down a suggestion by one of its members that an inquiry be made into the picture. Those overruling this proposal contended that it is up to Congress to attend to more weighty matters than going to see whether or not a moving picture offends national sensibilities and that it would be better to leave well enough alone, since the Government has found the production all right.

Mexico City press picture critics have high praise for "Viva Villa" and the Government's organ is according it much laudable publicity.

Mexican history and a certain displeasure with "Juarez Maximiliano" ("Juarez and Maximilian"), claimed to be most elaborate made-in-Mexico production, a Columbia release, has inspired organization of a cooperative society headed by Lawyer Alberto M. Saavedra, to make a series of outstanding episodes of this land's story from the conquest in 1520 to today.

This organization holds that "Juarez and Maximilian" is too sympathetic with government France imposed upon Mexico in 1867, and intends to produce pictures that will depict Mexican history from a purely Mexican viewpoint. The first picture, a talker, will be "El Cerro de las Campanas" ("The Hill of the Bells"), named for the place where Maximilian was executed.

Cameramen Restricted

Cameramen who desire to shoot motion pictures or stills in museums or archaeological and colonial monumental edifices that are controlled by the Mexican ministry of public education, find themselves confronted by the following new regulations:

No pictures of any kind can be taken of archaeological and colonial monumental works undergoing repairs, conservation, and so on. Special permits are necessary to use cameras in museums, and only objects therein that government photographers have not treated can be shot. Permits are also necessary to picture archaeological and colonial monumental edifices that are not being repaired. Makers of museum and monumental edifice pictures must pledge themselves not to damage this property, and this picturing is allowed only to publicize the museums and edifices or for scientific purposes.

Cameramen who desire to shoot these described subjects for commercial purposes are required to pay a fee fixed by the ministry. All must provide copies at cost price to the ministry whenever desired.

This camera activity is also regulated by the state department.

RIGID REGULATION OF AGENT-CLIENT RELATION ASKED IN REPORT TO NRA

Split Commissions, Gifts to Get Business of Producers and Entice Employees Are Prohibited in Proposed Rules

Rules governing the relations between producers and agents, writers, actors, directors and technicians are recommended in a report filed last week with the National Recovery Administration, on which a hearing will be held October 17, at the Willard hotel in Washington.

The relations between agent and client are to be rigidly regulated under the committee's 14 proposals, which are designed to eliminate "sharp" practices of which there has been much complaint. Split commissions would be barred.

A close check is to be kept upon agents, who will be required to file reports with the agency committee disclosing the identity of all owners and of all persons having a financial interest. Where a producer is shown to have any interest in an agency, the committee will be required to give "full publicity" to that fact.

A number of practices, such as the making of gifts to obtain the business of a producer, enticement of employees, are prohibited.

Producers are to be forbidden to transact any business with any agent not in good standing, and are prohibited from attempting to induce any person to employ or refrain from employing a particular agent. Signed contracts between agents and clients will be required for recognition of the former as a representative of the latter.

Full Publicity Required Where Producer Is Shown To Have Interest in Agency; Washington Hearing Set October 17

Text of Proposed Regulations Governing Agent-Client Relation

SCHEDULE "A"

Pursuant to Article V, Division B, Part 4, Section 4, the following rules governing relations between producers, agents, writers, actors, directors and technicians have been submitted by the Agency Committee of the Code Authority of the Motion Picture Industry.

ARTICLE FIRST

An agent shall be considered an agent in good standing when he is not suspended or disbarred as hereinafter provided.

ARTICLE SECOND

Every agent shall forthwith file with the Agency Committee a true and accurate statement setting forth the names and addresses of all persons connected with the agency as owners, partners, stockholders, or who have any financial interest in the agency, directly or indirectly. Whenever changes occur, or other persons become connected with or financially interested in the agency, a supplemental statement must be filed within five days after the occurrence of such change.

The Agency Committee shall give full publicity to the fact that a producer is interested in the agent's business, naming the agent and the producer.

ARTICLE THIRD

It shall be an unfair trade practice and a violation of this code for any agent (a) to give, offer, or promise to any employee of any producer any gift or gratuity to influence the action of such employee in relation to the business of such producer; (b) to alienate or entice, or to attempt to alienate or entice, any employee under written contract of employment, from such employment, or to induce or advise without justification any employee to do any act or thing in conflict with such employee's obligation to perform in good faith any contract of employment whether oral or written; (c) knowingly to make any materially false representation to any producer in negotiations with such producer for or affecting the employment or contemplated employment of any person represented by such agent; (d) to foment dissension, discord, or strife between any employee of any producer and his employer with the intent or effect of securing the employee's release of employment or a change in the terms of any contract under which the employee is engaged or of causing the employee to be or become dissatisfied with his subsisting contract; (e) to induce or advise without justification the breach by a client of a valid existing contract with another agent, or to alienate or entice, or to attempt to alienate or entice a client from another agent having a written contract with such client; (f) without justification to fail to take all reasonable means to transmit promptly to a client, in writing, any written communication from a producer to the client sent through the agent; (g) without justification to fail to take all reasonable means to transmit promptly to a producer, in writing, any written communication from a client to a producer, sent through the agent.

ARTICLE FOURTH

Every contract hereafter entered into between an agent and a client shall be void unless it contains the following provisions in substantially the following language and no subsequent or concurrent waivers or modifications thereof:

(1) The agent in his relation to the client acts as a fiduciary and is subject to all the duties of a fiduciary.

(2) One of the following persons (not more than four), and the following persons only (here insert names) shall at all reasonable times handle the client's business except as to secretarial, bookkeeping and publicity matters. No other person or persons shall handle the client's business unless the client gives his written consent to their so doing, and the failure of the persons so designated to give diligent attention to the client's business shall be a breach of contract by the agent, entitling the client to cancel the contract. Notwithstanding the foregoing, if an agent maintains a full-time responsible representative at any studio, such representative may handle the client's business with such studio. In case of unreasonable refusal of the client to agree to a substitution of another person for a person named in the contract to handle his business, such substitution may, nevertheless, be made with the approval of the NRA Agency Committee after notice and hearing under such rules as the NRA Agency Committee may from time to time prescribe. The decision of the Committee on such subject shall be conclusive and there shall be no right of appeal. Such rules shall be subject to approval by the Deputy Administrator of the NRA Motion Picture Code, and may delegate the power to a deputy or Board.

(3) Upon request by the client, one of the persons above specified shall confer with the client within 48 hours. Two violations of this clause by the agent shall be a breach entitling the client to cancellation of the contract, if the requests were in writing.

(4) In the event the client fails to obtain a bona fide offer of employment from a responsible employer during a period of time in excess of four (4) consecutive months, either the client or the agent shall have the right to terminate the contract, providing, however, that the client shall at all times during such period of four (4) consecutive months, or longer, be ready, willing, able and available to accept employment and to render the services required in connection with said employment. Notice of intention of either the agent or the client to terminate this agreement for the reasons specified in this paragraph must be given in writing to the other.

(5) In the event the client has not secured employment for at least four weeks during any six consecutive months, the client shall have the right to terminate the contract upon written notice; provided, however, that no such privilege of termination shall exist if, during such six (6) months' period the client has received and refused bona fide offer or offers of employment in good faith from a responsible employer or at least four weeks' work on fair terms and at fair compensation, and provided further, that the client shall, during said six consecutive months' period be available for employment.

Fair terms and fair compensation mean terms and compensation which are fair considering the following factors:

(a) The client's standing and previous experience;

(b) The client's previous compensation and terms in the motion picture industry;

(c) The general condition and standards of the motion picture industry at the time.

If a client is in the State of California, he shall be considered available for employment if he is able and willing to report for work within 48 hours of notification, and under no legal obligation which prevents his so doing. If a client is absent from the State of California, he shall be considered available if he is able and willing to report for work within ten days of notification, and under no legal obligation which prevents his so doing.

(6) If at any time while the client shall be unemployed the client shall, by notice in writing sent to the agent, request the agent to furnish the client written statements of the activity of the agent, the agent shall at least once during every two weeks of the client's unemployment, mail to the client a statement showing in reasonable detail the following activities of the agent to procure the client employment; (a) what efforts have been made to obtain employment for the client; (b) with what studios the agent has negotiated for such employment and (c) what offers, if any, for the client's employment have been received by the agent. A breach of the provisions of this paragraph of the contract shall entitle the client to cancel the contract.

(7) If the agent shall, in connection with the client's business or in connection with the business of other clients: (a) make a salary rebate or money payment of any sort to a motion picture producer, or anyone employed by a motion picture producer except the agent's client, in connection with employment or purchase of story material; (b) make any secret or collusive agreement or manipulation between agent and agent and/or agent and producer, the objective of which is to reduce or restrict the compensation of the client; (c) split commissions with or pay to anyone other than a recognized motion picture, theatrical, or literary agent any part of the compensation received from a client for procuring engagements or employment for such client, directly or indirectly; (d) be guilty of misrepresenting to a prospective client the clientele or connections of the agent to induce the client to employ or continue to employ the agent; (e) be guilty of any act of business dishonesty in connection with the agency business; the client shall within a reasonable time after discovery of said act, or acts, be entitled to cancel his contract by notice in writing to the agent.

(8) The agent shall promptly inform the client of all definite offers received from responsible employers for the client's services. If the client files a request in writing with the agent that such information shall be in writing, the agent shall comply therewith. The breach hereof shall entitle the client to cancel his contract.

(9) The agent shall use reasonable efforts to procure employment for the client. The breach hereof shall entitle the client to cancel his contract.

(10) The client shall have the right to demand the agent's representation of the client in all dealings with the client's employer, even after the client is under a term contract to the employer, and the agent shall diligently perform this service for the client as an essential part of his duties to the client, and the refusal to perform such duties shall entitle the client to cancel this contract.

(11) If an agent is disbarred under the National Recovery Act Agency Code, the client shall have the right to cancel this contract, but, in the event that the client has entered into a contract with a producer while his contract is in force, the client shall, nevertheless, pay to agent one-half and one-half only of the compensation specified in this contract in relation, and in relation only, to said contract with said producer, but in no event shall said compensation exceed the sum of five per cent of the compensation paid the client under said contract with the producer.

(12) If an agent is suspended under the National Recovery Act Agency Code, the client shall have the right to suspend this contract without extending the final expiration date thereof, but in the event that the client has entered into a contract with a producer while this contract is in force and unsuspended, during the period of the suspension, the client shall, nevertheless, pay to the agent one-half and one-half only of the compensation specified in this contract in relation, and in relation only, to said contract with said producer, but in no event shall said compensation exceed the sum of five per cent of the compensation paid to the client under said contract with the producer.

(13) The agent represents that no producer is interested in the business or commissions of the agent, directly, or indirectly, except (here insert names). If the foregoing representation is untrue, the client may cancel this contract and recover from the agent all money heretofore paid the agent by the client. The agent shall promptly notify the client in writing of any change in this respect; if the foregoing agreement is not performed, the client may cancel this contract and recover from the agent all money paid the agent by the client after the change. If any new producer becomes interested in the business of the agent, and the client is notified in writing, the client may cancel this contract within thirty days after receipt of such notice.

(14) Any dispute or controversy arising out of this contract or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof shall be submitted to arbitration, each of the parties to appoint an arbitrator, and the two to choose a third, and if they cannot agree the third arbitrator shall be appointed by the President of the Bar Association of the County in which this contract is made.

ALTERNATIVE ARTICLE FIFTH

Such temporary authorization shall absolutely expire after sixty days and shall not be renewable. If any such temporary authorization does not specify the commission, or compensation payable, the commission or compensation shall be deemed to be ten percent of all moneys received by the client either directly or indirectly on account of any contract entered into by said client during the period of such temporary authorization during the full term of said contract or options exercised thereunder, or upon any new contract entered into in substitution, or replacement of any such contract during the term of such original contract or options thereunder. All such temporary authorizations shall be deemed and construed to embody all provisions required by this Code to be incorporated on contracts between agents and their clients.

The announcement was made in the November issue of the publication, of which Kathryn Dougherty is publisher.

The film, also selected as the best film of 1933 by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, won the award by a large majority of the vote cast, it was said. The award was instituted by the late James Quirk, publisher of Photoplay, in 1920, when "Humoresque" was voted the best.

The court hearing on the application of Pathe Exchange for permission to hold an extraordinary stockholders' meeting to pass on reorganization plans was postponed from this week to next in supreme court, New York. The postponement was allowed for the filing of additional information.

'Man of Aran' Set For New York Run

Robert Flaherty, who will be remembered well for his unusual productions of "Nanook" (Pathe, 1922), "Moana" (Paramount, 1926) and "Tabu" (Paramount, 1931), has made another such picture, "Man of Aran," a Gaumont-British release, which will open at the Criterion theatre on Broadway on October 19, for a two-a-day run.

Mr. Flaherty went to the barren island of Aran, which rests 30 miles off Galway and the rocky coast of Ireland, to make his picture. A native cast, recruited from among the 2,000 inhabitants of the island, were his players.

The film, which has had a five-month engagement in London, was awarded the Mussolini Cup in Venice at the recent international film exposition. On his return to New York for the run here, Mr. Flaherty brought back three of the players, Michaeleen, the lad in the film; "Tiger" King, the "Man of Aran," and Maggie Dirriane.

British Admissions Were $192,156,000 During 1933

The total number of admissions was 958,000,000, or an average of 18,500,000 per week. The average admission price of 2,000 British theatres during the current year was approximately 20 cents. During 1933, 476 films were imported into Great Britain, of which 330 were registered by nine American-owned companies, American imports representing more than 90 per cent of the total imports.

Release date advanced to October 20th, so you can bring this big money-maker in without delay!

VARIETY | MOTION PICTURE HERALD | FILM DAILY

Happiness Ahead

Familiar in story, 'Happiness Ahead' becomes excellent entertainment through dialog and directorial treatment. Picture has speed and novelty, should land in the good grossers. Noteworthy is the cinematic debut of Josephine Hutchinson. Despite the lightness of her part, Miss Hutchinson gives evidence of becoming a stellar screen bet. With a quality similar to that of Helen Hayes, she will be a femme favorite.

As an heiress who is tired of the pomp of her surroundings and a domineering mother, Miss Hutchinson sneaks off, becomes acquainted with Dick Powell, a window-washer. She finds Powell and his friends genuine. In an effort to help him better himself, she borrows money from her indulgent father. Powell, not knowing she is weathy and believing the father to be her boy friend, gives her the air. Dad squares things in time to save her from marrying a man her mother has chosen.

Mervyn LeRoy has given the story a freshness that was necessary to lift it above commonplace. His fast direction keeps the yarn from dragging. Dialog is above par, giving all the characters a naturalness often missing.

Powell is himself as the window massager. He sings four numbers, none of them socks. 'Pop Goes [illegible] Heart' will get a good recep- [illegible] Window Panes,' [illegible] has ex-

Romance

This picture is composed of popular entertainment and showmanship elements. It's a love story, chockful of human interest. The Cinderella theme is novelly reversed; a rich girl falls in love with a regular fellow poor boy. A spirit of gay romantic adventure motivates. Yet supplementing that quality there's plenty of comedy in dialogue and situations. There's action enough to give the show a tinge of realism. Occasionally comes a pulse-quickening thrill. Logical is the touching tinge of contrasting drama, made more potent by smartly controlled suspense. Music, both in song and accompaniment, fulfills a different function than in previous Dick Powell pictures. While it is a feature by itself, its primary purpose is to accentuate the romantic quality of the theme.

In addition to its entertainment quality, it uncovers Dick Powell as a star not entirely dependent upon his singing ability. Also it introduces a new personality, Josephine Hutchinson, not an electric beauty but an actress of ability with the earmarks of potential popularity.

While it covers much that is colorful and interesting, the story is simple and natural. Wealthy Joan finds no interest in the sham and foible of high society. New Year Eve, on an adventurous quest, she lands in a Chinese restaurant. The people there thrill her; she is made one of a party, window-washers and shop girls. Romance comes, quick, clean and appealing, for her and Bob Lane. To shield her identity, she rents a walk-up flat.

All goes well until ambitious Dick, desiring to go into the window-washing game for himself, but not having the necessary dough, sees Joan get the money from her father. CLICKS STRONG WITH WHOLESOME HUMAN INTEREST DRAMA AND SWELL ROMANCE THAT WILL GET THE FEMMES.

Mervyn Le Roy comes through with a grand human interest document filled with delightful and natural touches that are bound to panic the femmes of high and low degree. But perhaps initial credit must be given to Harry Sauber for writing a down-to-earth original without any Hollywood hoke and plenty of the stuff that brings a catch in the throat and a smile to the lips at the same time. And that's a type of writing very scarce on the screen. Josephine Hutchinson comes through as a great bet with an extremely natural and charming personality that grows on you. And how that girl can troupe! A grand team—she and Dick Powell, the latter doing the best work of his career in this one. It is a Reverse Cinderella story—with the rich girl playing at being a poor girl so she can get some real happiness and romance out of life. And Powell sings a couple of songs—especially a sort of theme song throughout—that fits in perfectly to plot development and makes the lavish musicals look weak stacked against this production's swell human interest story.

THE TRUTH FROM FELLOW SHOWMEN

"Is this a private fight, or can anyone join in?" asks A. West Johnson, manager of the Heilig theatre at Eugene, Ore., in a letter to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department.

Volunteering to join the steadily growing corps of contributors, Mr. Johnson writes:

"For a long time I've watched the other fellows handing out praise and punishment, and I think I've missed a lot of fun by not being one of them.

"'What the Picture Did for Me' has been a valuable department for me in the past, aside from the pleasure I've had reading it. Many is the poor picture I have sidestepped, and many's the headache I've saved myself by listening to what the other fellow has had to say.

"Individual opinion shows a great deal of variation, of course, but taken by and large, the general opinion isn't far from the absolute truth. And I don't know anywhere else that one can get as good a glimpse of the truth as he can from his fellow showmen.

"So here goes! And may the bouquets and brickbats fall where they are deserved!"

Frankwyn Takes New Dietz Play

The play producing company of Frankwyn Productions, composed of Arch Selwyn and Harold B. Franklin, has acquired a new musical play, written by Arthur Schwartz and Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and titled "Revenge with Music." It is expected to open on Broadway at the New Amsterdam theatre in November.

Mr. Dietz and Mr. Schwartz, librettist and composer, respectively, are the authors of several musical successes in recent seasons, among them "Three's a Crowd," "The Band Wagon," "Flying Colors." Their latest, "Revenge with Music," is the first musical comedy drama they have written, it being rather a romantic play with music than a musical comedy. It is expected to be somewhat unique in form and treatment.

Libby Holman and Charles Winninger will be featured in the new play.

First Paramount Film Set for Music Hall

The premiere of the Paramount picture, "The Pursuit of Happiness," is scheduled for the Radio City Music Hall in New York, October 25, this being the first Paramount film to play the theatre. The film is an adaptation of the stage play of last season of the same title, with Francis Lederer and Joan Bennett in the leading roles.

BRITISH SEE RETURNS BY RECIPROCITY NOW

Instead of Films It's Talent; Financial Balance Predicted Earlier Than Expected

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Reciprocity is taking on a new meaning these days. There was a time when, as a theory, it postulated the exchange of so many American films for so many British. It remained a theory.

As a fact, it seems to amount to this: Hollywood sends us a star or director, or the promise of one at an average rate of one a day, and London sends back its executives in nearly the same numbers.

All Good for Business

It's all good for business, even though the visitors from your side are assured of good ready money, while the British visitors to New York are to a large extent still living on hope. The financial balance also may become an even one very much sooner than many persons imagine. It's a matter of some significance that the money which London will be sending to New York is likely to be the most important factor in bringing good American dollars back to London in due course.

Take the Toeplitz contract with Lubitsch. If there is a better directorial investment for a British company which wants to break into America while establishing itself at home, I would like to know of it.

There is a typical Toeplitz touch about the Lubitsch signing. The managing director of this company has the simplest possible production theory; he wants the best and he buys it. He can afford to, with a board of directors which includes as chairman Sir Harry Cassie Holden of the Midland Bank and such associates as Giuseppe Toeplitz, for 20 years managing director of the Banca Commerciale Italiana; Major Walter Williams, who represented Schroeder's in Paris for 15 years, and Richard Barrow Hirsch, the stockbroker and bank director.

Lubitsch To Make Third Film

Lubitsch will make the third film on the Toeplitz program. The second is to be directed by Kurt Bernhardt, the company's production manager, who made "The Last Company," a 1930 Ufa production with Conrad Veidt which at that time seemed to be the finest combination of sound and real pictorial values I had seen.

Also this week came the news that Alexander Korda had signed up John Barrymore, that Lupe Velez had put her name to a Twickenham contract and that Nils Asther had arrived for his B. I. P. part in "Abdul Hamid."

The ferry last week brought you Michael Balcon, the Gaumont production chief; Nova Pilbeam, star of "Little Friend," and the film itself. Nova is making a personal appearance at the American premiere. That's another big forward step, of course. Certainly no American film expert can say today that Englishmen are unwilling to learn; they are applying every piece of advice which has come from Hollywood for years past, including that most sage piece of advice that you must produce your stars.

The Overbuilding Problem

Mails these weeks seem to be made up in 50-50 proportions by news of more Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association action against overbuilding and by invitations to sumptuous openings of sumptuous new super-theatres. A resolution a day certainly doeesn't seem to keep the Odeons at bay.

Up at Sheffield the C. E. A. branch, in place of organizing individual opposition to new theatres, has come out officially against the grant of a license to the Paragon, which is practically completed and will certainly get its license. The branch's action can, in fact, be regarded as a declaration of policy rather than effective step in this case. What makes it significant is that the promoter of the Paragon is none other than Vice President McDonald of this very Sheffield branch.

Churchill as Film Editor

Alexander Korda has just issued particulars of another film enterprise which offers all sorts of interesting possibilities. He has signed a contract with Winston Churchill to edit what is best described as a series of educational topicals.

The titles already announced suggest that these films will consist of discussional and possibly controversial treatment of current problems in the form of a commentary, plus illustrated scenes. Just how far Mr. Churchill will be seen in them I am not quite sure, but I gather that the introduction at least will be spoken by him personally.

Following are the titles of topics already scheduled: "Will Monarchies Return?" "The Rise of Japan," "Marriage Laws and Customs," "Unemployment" and "Gold."

It will be curious if the educative powers of the screen are first demonstrated by films of this type, in the ordinary cinema rather than in the schools. If it can be done, it seems that Mr. Churchill is the forceful personality needed to attract the public, while Korda certainly can be relied upon to see that the film side realizes the author's ideas.

United Artists will handle these original releases in America, where I imagine they will create as much curiosity as over here.

Weil Heads Special Campaign

Joe Weil, assistant to Carl Laemmle, has been assigned by Mr. Laemmle to direct a special exploitation campaign for seven forthcoming Universal features: "Imitation of Life," "Great Expectations," "Night Life of the Gods," "The Great Ziegfeld," "Sutter's Gold," "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" and "Show Boat."

Fire Destroys Theatre

The Wolverine, 600-seat neighborhood theatre in Detroit, was destroyed by fire last week. A carelessly discarded cigarette was the cause. Edward Pascal, owner and operator, said he would rebuild immediately.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

WICKED WOMAN

MGM

The outstanding showmanship angle in this production is that in Mady Christians it presents a new star. In looks, ability and personality, she seems to have those elusive qualities that mark a person for immediate popular favor. Supplementing that asset is the story quality, a character drama of heroism, sacrifice, tragedy, happiness and fear, the kind of entertainment usually powerfully appealing to feminine theatre-goers.

For Mady Christians' American screen debut, knowing that she is one of the foremost Continental legitimate stage stars, MGM chose Ann Austin's widely read novel. The screen play is by Florence Ryerson, who did "This Side of Heaven," Maurice Watkins, collaborating scenarist on "Search for Beauty," and Zelda Sears, who worked with Miss Ryerson on "This Side of Heaven" and on her own is noted for many successful pictures, including "Tugboat Annie" and "Operator 13." The importance of emphasizing the woman appeal is made more evident by the participation of these woman writers in the screen play. Direction is by Charles Brabin, maker of the well-remembered "Driven," also "Secret of Madame Blanche," "Stage Mother" and "Day of Reckoning."

Principal supporting actors are Otto Kruger, Jean Parker, Paul Harvey, Betty Furness, Robert Taylor and Sterling Holloway. Others included are Zelda Sears, Jackie Searl, Betty Graham, Marilyn Harris and George Billings.

The story, with southern locale, is that of a woman who killed. Fleeing with her children, she raises them to maturity. Living under a shadow, she knows all the disappointments and tragedies—and some of the joys—that are every mother's. When the family is grown up she returns to the scene of her crime to confess her guilt. One of the children saves her by testifying she killed her husband in self-defense. Acquitted, true romance comes to her in the time of life when it is best understood and appreciated.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER

Paramount

Established by the title as an adventure drama, many features in this story recommend themselves to the mind inclined toward novel showmanship. Semi-modernly timed, the locale is India in the vicinity of the famous Khyber Pass, something different. The story is of the same quality. It concerns three British army officers, whose friendship in arms is of the "Three Musketeers" idea. Its vivid drama centers about two deep human interest features. One comrade, to shield another from cowardice, invades a tribesman stronghold and is killed. The survivor, knowing his own failures, heroizes his pal and himself by refusing to accept a medal that rightfully belongs to the other. As a gripping romance runs through the drama, the story captures the weird, dangerous and primitive color of northwest India and all its fact, fable and fiction.

Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone and Richard Cromwell are the three brothers in arms. In support are Kathleen Burke, the "Panther Woman"; Sir Guy Standing, C. Aubrey Smith, Colin Tapley, Monte Blue, Douglas Dumbrille, Lumsden Hare and J. Carrol Naish. Minor roles are assigned to Akim Tamiroff, Jameson Thomas, James Warwick, Rollo Lloyd, Charles Stevens and Noble Johnson.

The story is an original by Francis Yeats-Brown, the screen play by Waldemar Young, a collaborator on the recent "Cleopatra," and Achmed Abdullah. It was adapted by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt, who singly and as a team have contributed to many Paramount successes. Direction is by Henry Hathaway, maker of "Now and Forever" and remembered for "Come on, Marines" and "Witching Hour."

The production has much for unique showmanship.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS

Fox

As the title graphically indicates, this is a story of war and war aces. In making a serious effort to get away from the beaten track of such entertainment, it is a gripping story of imaginative and impressionable men, who to forget their ever-present fears turn to the thrill and danger of loving and being loved. Building to strong emotion stirring romance, it does not ignore the thrill of realism or forget contrasting comedy.

This picture is based on a play, "The Ace," which ran for many months in London. The screen play is by Byron Morgan, who has specialized in adventure-romance dramas, and Ted Parsons, himself a member of the LaFayette Escadrille, who in many combat sequences fictionizes the adventures that were actually his. Direction is by John Blystone, maker of "The Sky Hawk," "My Lips Betray" and "Change of Heart."

The cast teams Warner Baxter and Conchita Montenegro, recently in "Handy Andy," in the leads. Baxter's romantic rival is Russell Hardie, currently in "The Rear Car" and "Pursued." Comedy roles are handled by Andy Devine, Herbert Mundin and Vince Barnett. Supporting players include Ralph Morgan, remembered for "The Power and the Glory" and "She Was a Lady"; William Stack in such recent pictures as "Manhattan Melodrama," "Stamboul Quest" and "The Fountain"; J. Carrol Naish, William Stelling, Johnny Arthur, Arnold Frey, Rudolph Amendt and Vincent Carato.

On the surface it is indicated that this story is red blooded and adventurous romance and drama. Its showmanship is that which experience with previous similar pictures has proved effective, plus a knowledge of what will make audiences respond to an old but proved idea, presented in a different mood.

WEST OF THE PECOS

Radio

This is one of Zane Grey's most popular western stories. It returns Richard Dix to the type of character in which he has scored many of his best successes. An adventure story, its drama, romance, comedy, excitement and scenic spectacle are backgrounded against a period that has a definite historical interest. Similar to all Grey stories, it is an action picture, with cross-country wagon trek, encounters with Indians, bad men and cattle rustlers, and man-to-man melees.

Phil Rosen has the direction. Cliff Reid, who produced "The Lost Patrol," is credited as the producer. The screen play is by Milton Krims, who wrote "Western Code," and John Twist.

The cast supporting Dix features Martha Sleeper, Louis Mason, Louis Beevers, Fred Kohler, Maria Alba, Oscar Apfel and John Wray in the principal supporting roles. Minor parts are assigned to Adrian Morris, Sleep 'n' Eat, Adrian Morris, George Cooper, Pat Collins, Charles Stevens, Pedro Regas, Russell Simpson and Maurice Black.

Timed to the period following the close of the Civil War, the yarn deals with the pioneer people, good and bad, who settled the New West. It concerns the legendary character, Pecos Smith (Dix) and the part he played in the lives and destinies of the Lambeth family. Adventure throughout, it has the natural romantic twist, presented in a novel manner. While following the typical historical western formula, of danger from Indians and unfriendly and conspiring whites, it builds to heroic romance. Naturally there is a continuous comedy vein.

On the surface, the appearance of Richard Dix again in a fast moving adventure western appears to be the most logical interest stimulating element.

THE MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD

Universal

This story is close to an attack upon munitions makers, international bankers and diplomats who foster war under the guise of national security. That widely discussed subject both motivates the story's dramatic romance and serves as its background. As a play by Jean Bart, it was presented in New York recently with Claude Rains also in the leading role. This screen play is by the author, previously associated with light comedy romance such as "Let's Be Ritzy" and "They Just Had to Get Married."

Rains, Joan Bennett and Lionel Atwill are the leading players. They are principally supported by Wallace Ford, Lawrence Grant, William Davidson and Gilbert Emery. Other screen names include Purnell Pratt, Walter Walker, Crauford Kent, Edward Van Sloan and Montague Shaw.

CUTTING ROOM

Locale in Paris and the war front, time 1915 and the immediate preceding years, the story is the drama of a man and his participation in cataclysmic events. A poor man whose aspirations are those of the masses, under a pen name he writes anti-war and anti-political pamphlets which elevate his publisher to political prestige. War makers, fostering their business, capitalize on the Sarajevo tragedy. Torn from the love of wife and child, the man goes into the trenches. Meanwhile his publisher, reveling in wealth as a war-fury propagandist, makes love to the wife. Coming to Paris, a. w. o. l., during an air raid, Rains kills the man who has made his life a bloody thing. The story is told in retrospect as he tells it to the lawyer who will defend him in court.

First of the "munition-makers" pictures, this story opens the doors wide to a new and different kind of interest-creating exploitation.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE

Radio

What the title only barely suggests, the cast in this production graphically indicates. With Ben Lyon and Thelma Todd as the stars and Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher, Chick Chandler, Laura Hope Crews, Walter Catlett and Gregory Ratoff included in the support, the simplest deduction is that "Lightning Strikes Twice" is comedy. To be more explicit, it's comedy-mystery-melodrama.

The original story is by Marion Dix, who did "Sing and Like It," and Ben Holmes, author of "Melody Cruise," "So This Is Harris" and "Cockeyed Cavaliers." Holmes also is directing. The screen play is by John Grey and Joseph A. Fields.

The story is complicated mystery, quickly taking on a broad comedy flair moving in related sequence from grins to chills. Introduction of romance serving to heighten the motivating qualities further, the yarn calls for so much to happen that keeping track of the basic story will test any one's ingenuity. Always, however, comedy is the thing that counts.

While there are cast names of more than usual merit, the real showmanship is pegged on the story. As it unwinds, it suggests ideas for stunts and gags that have fallen into disuse. Tricky exploitation having for its purpose the arousing of curiosity in what the title means and what happens to the persons in the story, which goes to the point of almost absurdity, seems to be right in line.

75 STORIES AND PLAYS BOUGHT IN SEPTEMBER

Forty of Purchases to Round Out 1934-35 Schedules Are Best Sellers; Radio Leads, 15

Four independent producers and the eight large companies and their affiliates purchased in September 75 books, plays and original stories with which to round out uncompleted parts of 1934-35 schedules of feature releases.

Forty of the purchases, representing 53½ per cent of the total, were from the best seller class. Original stories, some written on assignment and others unpublished manuscripts, ranked second in the number of vehicles acquired, there being 28 in this group, as against only seven plays, or 37½ and 9 per cent, respectively.

September purchases indicated the continuance of the trend away from stage plays and toward published books as the predominating source of material.

Thirty-four properties were acquired in the first week of the month, and 16, 8 and 17 in the respective weeks that followed. A half dozen were magazine stories.

Radio Pictures led all in the month's purchases, making 15, as against 11 made by Warners, 10 by Metro and 10 by Paramount. September purchases were as follows:

New story and play acquisitions made by producers have a direct interest for exhibitors, representing as they do, in almost all cases, the basis of feature productions unnamed in 1934-35 product announcements which appeared during the first months of the sales season in the summer. All companies leave room in such product announcements for the purchase of books and plays as the season progresses, this in order to keep their programs abreast of the times and the trends in public tastes.

Vote Films Third As Leisure Pursuit

The motion picture as entertainment rates third place in the leisure time activity of a representative portion of persons in 29 cities throughout the country, according to a survey recently released by the National Recreation Association of New York. Although they are not far ahead of the motion picture the survey showed a distinct preference for reading magazines and newspapers and listening to the radio.

The most common type of leisure time activity, based upon replies to a questionnaire sent out by the Association, are for the most part home activities, inexpensive, indoor, individual, quiet or passive. Except for reading or swimming, the survey reveals, the influence of community recreation or educational agencies is not apparent. The ten activities in which the largest number of people take part, are also the ten in which frequent participation is recorded, although the rank order is not the same. Two items involving expense—the motion picture and swimming—drop in rank in the list of activities indulged in often.

Activities involving music, art and drama, and most games, sports and outing activities have a relatively low place in the list of 94 activities ranked in order of the number of people taking part in them.

"If it could be assumed that people are already doing the things they most enjoy doing," the survey states, "it might seem that the recreational facilities and leadership service provided by public and private agencies are of relatively small importance."

A special analysis was made by the Association of free time activities and interests of people in Boston and Newark on the basis of their employment status. Four groups were studied—persons employed full time, part time, occasionally or not at all during the last year. The relative numbers of these four groups were 60 per cent, 22 per cent, nine and eight per cent, respectively.

Little marked difference between the four groups in their total participation in home activities was reported, but in outside activities the part time and occasionally employed groups made the best showing and the unemployed again recorded the lowest participation.

Of 5,002 persons reporting, 3,977 preferred reading of newspapers and magazines, 3,955 listening to the radio, and 3,670 attending the motion picture theatre.

104 Millions Is U. S. Estimate Of 1933 Production Expenditure

Standing out in sharp contrast to practically every other industry, where reductions in employment between the deflationary period of 1931 and 1933 were almost the universal rule, the production division of the motion picture business last year had nearly one-third more employees on its payrolls than in 1931, despite the fact that a pronounced abandonment of activities by small enterprises reduced the number of establishments in production from 140 in 1931 to 92 last year.

There were 19,037 employed in production in 1933, as against 14,839 in 1931. However, salaries in the studios failed to keep pace with the advance in employment, the 19,037 workers receiving in wages some $71,343,941 in 1933, compared with $70,637,031 paid to 14,839 employees two years previous. Corporate officials were not included.

These observations, and others, were made by the United States Census Bureau in a nationwide survey of all industries, and were announced at Washington this week.

Production expenditures on completed product during the "off" year of 1933 totaled $104,762,409, considerably less than the $139,707,008 expended in 1931. Print and distribution costs would add another 25 to 45 per cent to the negative charges.

The report of the Census Bureau's investigation of the production structure of 1933 as it compares with costs and payrolls in 1931 follows:

	1933	1931
Number of Establishments Engaged in Production	92	140
Cost of All Completed Production	$104,762,409	$139,707,008
Cost of Feature Production	77,535,515	100,064,532
Cost of Short Subject Production	22,482,540	31,147,033
Cost of News and Advertising Film Production	4,576,421	8,085,946
Cost of Educational Film Production	167,933	409,497
Cost of Laboratory Work on Positives	7,624,761	12,556,231
Number of Employees, Not Including Corporation Officials (But Including Supervisors, Scenarists, Actors, Extras, Cameramen, Auditors, Clerical Staffs, Technicians)	19,037	14,839
Salaries of Employees as Specified Above (Not Including Corporation Officials)	71,343,941	70,637,031
Cost of Contract Construction Work	4,027,663	12,015,722
Cost of Studio Supplies, Raw Stock, Electricity, Fuel, etc.	26,153,298	32,222,404

Cincinnati Bank Asks Removal of Receiver

The Provident Bank and Trust Company, Cincinnati, as trustee for the bondholders, has filed a motion in the local United States district court, to set aside the appointment of Ben L. Heidingsfeld as receiver for the Shubert-Cox Theatres Company. The motion charges the receiver was appointed through misrepresentation, and that the bank had not been informed of the receivership action.

Mr. Heidingsfeld had been appointed in August by Judge Benson W. Hough, on application of the Trebuhs Realty Company, New York, as a creditor with claims totaling $13,065.44 on loans. The bank recently obtained judgment on a first mortgage trust indenture.

Jack Bellman of Hollywood Film Exchange has added to his staffs in Buffalo, Washington and Philadelphia. Frank Loftus, "Chief" Powell and Ray Smith have been assigned to John Golder at Philadelphia, and Bert Freese has gone to George H. Moeser's Buffalo organization.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 242.—(A) Is it possible almost to duplicate d.c. results in screen illumination with a.c. at the arc? (B) Suppose you were employed as projectionist for a large theatre under construction and the exhibitors sought your advice as to taking current from d.c., 110-volt lines through rheostats, or whether it would be best to install two motor-generater sets at a total cost of, say, $1,200 (current rate to the theatre, six cents; hours of daily operation, including Sunday, ten). Exhibitor asks for detailed reasons for your recommendation. There will be an 80-ampere projector arc, and a 75-ampere spot. The latter is used one hour and 40 minutes, average, daily. Tell us what your answer would be and why. (Part of money to build with borrowed at rate of six per cent.) (C) What advantages have motor-generators over mercury arc rectifiers?

Answer to Question No. 236

Bluebook School Question No. 236 was: (A) How would you add ½ and ¾? (B) How would you divide ¾ by ½? How would you multiply ⅝ by 7/16? (C) How would you add .65 and 7/16, or multiply them or divide one by the other? (D) How would you calculate drop in any copper circuit? (E) How would you calculate increase in resistance caused by a known increase in temperature?

Pretty stiff, that mess, for men who have been out of school quite a spell. I'll bet a lot of you had to dig. The following made the grade:

(A) Danielson says that ½ equals 2/4 and 2/4 plus ¾ is 5/4, or 1¼. Or ½ equals .50; ¾ equal .75; .50 plus .75 equals 1.25, or 1¼.

(B) Rau and Evans answer thus: "To divide ¾ by ½ it is necessary to invert the divisor which makes it 2/1, and then multiply both numerators and denominators together and have, as a result, 6/4, or 1½."

In other words, to divide two fractions the rule is to invert the divisor and multiply the numerators by numerators and denominators by denominators, thus forming a new fraction, which is the answer. To multiply ⅝ by 7/16 it is only necessary to multiply the numerators for a new numerator, and the denominators for a new denominator, thus $\frac{5 \times 7}{8 \times 16} = \frac{35}{128}$, which is the desired answer.

(C) G. E. Doe says, "To add a decimal and common fraction it is necessary either to reduce the common fraction to a decimal or the decimal to a common fraction. Usually the first named procedure is employed. In the case of the fractions cited in the question, the simpler method is: .65 is 65/100, and the least common denominator of 65/100 and 7/16, obtained by setting 100 and 16 down in a row and dividing them first by 2, and the result by 2 again, which gives as a final result, 25 and 4, which two cannot be divided by any number greater than 1; next multiply all the divisors and the two results, thus 2 x 2 x 25 x 4, which equals 400. Since 400 is four times as great as 100 it is evident our numerator must be multiplied by 4, which gives us the new fraction of $\frac{260}{400}$. By similar process we obtain for the second fraction $\frac{175}{400}$, whereupon adding the numerators together (260 + 175) we have 435, or $\frac{435}{400}$, which is equal to 1 35/400, or practically 1 5/57."

As a matter of fact, there were hardly six answers out of all the mass that agreed exactly. The final fraction in the answer ran all the way from 1/10 to 7/80. Evidently, however, everyone had made a real effort to get the thing right, and came pretty close to it, anyhow; so I gave you credit. Doe was the only one who explained all of the process, and that was what was really wanted. I might add that the final fraction was really 7/80, though 5/57 is very close indeed.

(D) T. Van Vaulkenburg answers thus: "Disregarding temperature, which must be considered if absolutely accurate results are required, to ascertain the voltage drop of a circuit I would first turn to page 73 of my Bluebook (which I have studied—it is no shelf ornament!) and by the application of the rule there found, ascertain the resistance of the circuit. The rule is : Multiply the circuit length by 21 and divide the result by the cross-section area of the wire in circular mils. Having ascertained the resistance, the voltage drop may be found by multiplying the amperage flowing by the resistance of the circuit in ohms."

Brother Danielson added, "Voltage drop, or I. R. drop, is equal to the amperes flowing in a circuit multiplied by the resistance of the circuit, if current be d.c.; or by the impedance if the current be a.c."

(E) Our old friends, Rau and Evans, say: "Increase in resistance caused by a known increase in temperature may be calculated by multiplying the temperature coefficient of the conducting material by the number of degrees change in temperature, and that product by the number of ohms resistance at normal temperature. The temperature co-efficient is the fraction of an ohm change in resistance of the material used for each degree of change in temperature."

I have been flooded by kicks, protests and what-not concerning the answer to Section A of Question No. 233, page 64, September 8 issue. Evans and Rau, for example, say, "If that is right, we are all haywire."

Well, it is not right. The resistance of the rheostats was taken as of rheostats intended to work on straight 110-volt current, instead of 110 less the arc voltage, and the queer part is that that fact was emphasized.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

NO. 73—ADMISSION PRICES, AND BANK NIGHTS UNDER CODE

QUESTION—I am opening a new theatre in a town in which a theatre is already operating, and it appears that the operator of the other house and myself cannot get together on admission price scales.

The prices of the other theatre range from 10 cents for children and 25 cents for adults on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, to two admissions for 35 cents on Tuesday and Wednesday and the whole family admitted for a single 35-cent admission on Thursday and Friday.

I am going to charge 10 cents and 25 cents on six nights a week, with the entire family admitted for 35 cents on the seventh night. Please let me know what the code will do in regards to this.

Also, I would like to know about "Bank Nights" in my town.—FLORIDA.

ANSWER—The Code Authority recently ruled that the copyrighted "Bank Nights" plan now in use as outlined in the contract agreement with the "Bank Nights" copyright owner is a lottery and as such is a violation of the code. The secretary of the Local Grievance Board in the exchange city in any territory will supply additional details on this matter.

Regarding admissions, the code does not compel any exhibitor to enter into any agreement on prices when requested to do so by a competing exhibitor.

However, there is a clause in the code which says that no exhibitor shall fail at all times to maintain the minimum admission price specified in any contract. Also, this clause specifically says: "This section shall not be deemed to prohibit exhibitors from reducing or increasing their admissions as they see fit, except as may be prohibited by exhibitors' contracts" which specify a minimum admission, and, as previously stated, in no case shall the admission be lowered below such minimum admission.

This means, then that the various scales described by the inquiring exhibitor are permissible under the code if they are not lower than the minimum admission specified in any contract.

The same would hold true for the family night arrangement when the entire family attends for the single admission of 35 cents. For example, if there is a specified contractual minimum admission of 10 cents, then no more than three and one-half individual admissions would be permissible under the code for the 35-cent family ticket. If more individual admissions are permitted by the exhibitor with the 35-cent "family" ticket, such individual admissions would obviously lower the 10-cent minimum specified in the contract, which is a code violation.

NO. 74—PREMATURE ADVERTISING; THE RIGHT TO SELL FILM

QUESTION—Will you please advise what protection the code offers an independent exhibitor pertaining to premature advertising?

Some of the major producers deliberately refuse to sell to the independent exhibitor, in order to protect the chain theatres. Protection of the code seems to be our only salvation. The results are that the big circuits simply flood the country with advertising matter, thereby getting the cream of the business. This places the independent in the category of a subsequent run house, yet we pay first run rental, in most cases being ten times more in proportion to the population than the chains pay.

ANSWER—The motion picture code says that no exhibitor licensed to exhibit a motion picture subsequent to its exhibition by another exhibitor, which latter exhibitor has the right to the prior run of such a picture, shall advertise such a picture by any means of advertising prior to or during its exhibition at the prior run theatre. However, in order to avoid working any hardships on the subsequent run exhibitor in this connection, the code says further:

"Notwithstanding anything herein contained, in the event any exhibitor shall make complaint that the restrictions embraced in this part (of the code) work an unfair hardship on him, the Local Grievance Board shall have the right to hear such complaint, and after determination of the facts presented, shall fix and specify the time limit within which such exhibitor may advertise such motion picture; provided, however, that should the subsequent-run exhibitor be granted permission to advertise before the completion of said prior run, he shall not advertise prior to the commencement of said prior run, nor shall he have the right to advertise in any way, shape, manner or form or issue any statement that the prices of admission are or will be less than the admission prices charged by the exhibitor having the first or prior run of such motion picture; provided further, however, that such subsequent-run exhibitor may be granted the right in cases where the run of such exhibitor follows the prior run in or within a period of seven days, to advertise upon the screen of the exhibitor or to distribute within the exhibitor's theatre a printed program or mail such printed program to a list of regular patrons, such programs to be limited to announcement of the motion pictures which will be there exhibited during the period of not more than seven days immediately following.

"Nothing herein contained (in the code) shall be deemed to prohibit any exhibitor from advertising generally all of the feature motion pictures licensed for exhibition by such exhibitor as a group, but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of such motion pictures at any time prior to its exhibition by any other exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof excepting as hereinabove provided."

Regarding the second phase of the inquiry, the motion picture code cannot compel a distributor to sell his product to any exhibitor—unless, of course, another theatre has overbought product for the purpose of depriving the complaining exhibitor of such product.

Otherwise the matter is entirely outside the limitations of the motion picture code. The United States Supreme Court has ruled that any distributor can refuse to sell his product to any exhibitor for any reason whatsoever—except when such distributor has made an agreement with another exhibitor or another distributor not to sell the distributor's product to the complaining exhibitor, and in such a case there might be grounds for a federal conspiracy suit.

NO. 76—CODE AUTHORITY'S DECISION REGARDING BANK NIGHTS

QUESTION—What is the Code Authority's decision relative to "Bank Nights" or a promotion where positively no purchase price is demanded and the participant is not required to be present in the theatre?—IOWA

ANSWER—The Code Authority has ruled basically that the copyrighted "Bank Nights" plan of promotion now in use as outlined in the contract agreement with the "Bank Nights" copyright owner is a lottery, and, therefore, is a violation of the code. A copy of the decision in full together with any other additional information that is desired may be obtained from the secretary of the Local Grievance Board located in the exchange city in any territory.

NO. 77—THE STATUS OF DIFFERENCES IN WAGES

QUESTION—If a case is decided in favor of an employee plaintiff, can he collect the difference between the code wage scale and the wages that had been received? If so, would the difference be decided on the basis of the amount of time actually worked or the maximum schedule of hours provided for in the code? Where is the Code Compliance Board located?—NEW YORK.

ANSWER—The NRA's Code Compliance or Regional Labor Board in making a decision in a complaint over hours or wages involving an exhibitor and his employees would at the same time as it rendered a decision specifically mention whether or not the employee should be reimbursed for back wages claimed due by the employee. Also, such Board would decide exactly how much in such back wages were due the employee, and it would then order the employer to make such payment to the employee.

There is a Code Compliance Board or Regional Labor Board located in every large city. Their addresses may be obtained from the National Recovery Administration at Washington.

Chaplin Set for Next Production

Charles Chaplin has begun to assemble cast and technical crew for the production of his next picture, which will be a United Artists release. A special musical score, novel sound effects, but again no dialogue is understood to be the plan. It will be his first picture in more than three years. Paulette Goddard will be his leading feminine player. Willy Pogany, noted artist, will be art director; C. Danny Hall in charge of the technical work; Rollie Totheroh, cameraman, and Alan Garcia, casting director. Chaplin will direct with Carter de Haven as assistant.

Lady By Choice

(Columbia)

Comedy

Rib-tickling comedy with a powerful heart interest is the entertainment and showmanship promise of "Lady by Choice" for audiences and exhibitors. Against those qualities, it tells a story that is warm with human interest. It mingles smiles and tears and oftimes induces an honest belly-laugh. It makes its drama a natural and stirring feature, and the comedy brought laugh after laugh from the preview audience. Hilarity is so well blended with seriousness that no one knows what to expect. It carries a thread of romance, subordinate yet effective in sustaining the motivating elements. It deals only in elements that have proved their merit as class and mass appeal. As such it is amusing but touching entertainment that can be offered any type audience, sophisticates or just plain folk, confident that they will understand and appreciate.

The story blends theatrical hokum with realistic humanness. Patsy, a genial old soak, a regular feature in night court, lands there for the steenth time when she busts up a saloon because a crooning waiter insists upon singing "Mother." Before Judge Daly's bench also is Alabam' Lee, arrested for whatever fan dancers are arrested for.

Through the Judge's kindness and the intercession of Johnny Mills, son of Patsy's old sweetheart, the old girl, despite vigorous protests, is paroled to an old ladies' home. Mother's Day rolls around and Alabam's press agent, O'Malley, conceives the idea of having her adopt a mother as a publicity stunt. At the home, Alabam, recognizing Patsy, picks her out.

Installed in her job with much fanfare, Patsy takes it seriously. Temperamental herself, Alabam' is just as much a tartar. However, they have a mutual respect for each other. The market for fan-dancing nose-dives. Patsy sets herself to make something of Alabam. Pretty good with the galloping dominoes, she gets enough of a stake to hire dramatic, vocal and dance instructors to teach her volatile "daughter." Trying to foster romance between Alabam' and Johnny, Patsy shows up manager Kendall as a chiseler. But instead of playing the game straight, Alabam' goes after the boy's money, refusing to marry when she learns that his mother will cut him off without a penny. She goes back to Kendall for her old job. But Patsy doesn't quit. Learning that she is going to do her fan-dance again, she has the cabaret pinched and Alabam' hauled before Judge Daly again. There's only one alternative, a year behind the bars, which sentence the judge suspended in the previous case, or marry Johnny. She'll marry him, and everybody is happy.

It's hardly to be doubted that "Lady by Choice" will be in the air long before it plays most theatres. However, that's no reason to get over-confident and trust that the show automatically will sell itself. The May Robson performance in "Lady for a Day" is going to be a helpful asset in this case. But they all should be told about it from the young moderns to the mature adults. The merriment-seekers, the drama lovers, highbrows and lowbrows, should know that it has all the comedy, the fun and laughter they want; that it has heart drama and romance they will enjoy.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Ready for Love

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

Comedy romance which tends towards farce is the outstanding showmanship and entertainment value of this picture. The fun-creating elements are emphasized in dialogue, action and situations, with a certain human interest. The yarn is semi-fantastic in premise and the manner in which it is presented. For its punch sequences, it liberally satirizes small town snootiness.

Because of the inherent exploitation possibilities, which even the lack of cast strength should not hinder, it is the kind of attraction that ingenious showmen can do much with. It is right in the lap of the average family trade audience.

Hopscotching around quite a bit, the yarn introduces its heroine, Marigold, making her exit from boarding school via a milk wagon. She lands in a tank town where her mother, Goldy Tate, still is valiantly carrying on the glamour of the old vaudeville trouper, and there follows one of those mother-daughter battles with the mother winning and Marigold shunted off to a little Connecticut town.

Her arrival there is simultaneous with that of a late Mr. Burke, whose demise has lifted an awful onus from the minds of his survivors. Mistaken by editor Julian Barlow of the local sheet as one of the companions in gayety of the defunct Mr. Burke, Marigold is headlined into locale fame immediately. His liberal use of printers' ink makes her the toast of all the men in town, the roast of all the women and the object of poetic and lovesick Joey's infatuation. Anyway, romance blossoms for Marigold and Julian, but when at a Puritanic costume party, Marigold gets herself into an embarrassing position with the willing-to-play Mr. Chester Burke, the stern visaged Mrs. Burke leads the women of the town in an assault on the supposed menace to their domestic firesides. Given the old fashioned "ducking stool" treatment, Marigold is headlined into national fame by the ambitious newspaper man Julian.

Then the wolves descend. Goldy sees in this avalanche of publicity a chance to be in the big money again. While mother and daughter battle it out, the promoters and publicity men patiently wait. But Arlen has the final word. He loves Marigold; he made her famous. Who should cash in on her success more than he? He has a New York job and marriage is all he needs to inspire him to future greatness.

Sold as good, wholesome fun, with plenty of laughs for everyone, using some of the clever dialogue for ad lines, "Ready for Love" should capture the interest of the ordinary everyday fans.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

By Your Leave

(Radio)

Comedy-Romance

Here's a picture with plenty of audience and showmanship value. Smart, clean and clever, full of comedy in dialogue, characterizations and situations, it's that kind of fun that seeps in slyly and, while it grows, holds its initial interest and builds to new. The story is simple, dealing with a familiar topic, but the manner in which it is acted and directed gives it a newness that fully justifies the use of the word "novel" in selling it. While mature persons are featured and do the interesting things in interesting ways that amuse the mature, there is also a spirit of youth about the show to capture the attention of the younger modernes and those above the juvenile stage.

The story has Henry Smith, near the dangerous age of the flaming forties, yearning for one more youthful fling. Rebuked by maid Whiffen, who in motherly fashion dominates the Smith household, and wondered at by his wife, Ellen, Henry finally makes a deal for a vacation. One little association with the flaming youth, Frances, kindles the vivid spark and he's off on a trail of hilarious experiences. His experiences with the drunken and enthusiastic college alumnus, Skeets, and that worthy's showgirl friends, are howls of glee. While this is going on, what's sauce for the gander is sauce for the goose, and demure Ellen finds herself the object of the mad infatuation of McKenzie, world explorer. Scared rabbit Henry, still ambitious, and on the advice of friend Anders, tries one more fling, this time with the professional hostess Andree. There's more intriguing fun before Henry decides he's had enough to sneak back home, only to find his wife not there. All the horrible thoughts that a

A Successful Failure

(Monogram)

Comedy-Drama

A direct, homespun down-to-earth story is the selling avenue for this production, from the novel by Michael Kane. It is a story that permits of varied copy along the lines of this poser: If your nagging family spends your pay raise before you get it, what would you do if, instead, you were fired? How William Collier, Sr., solves it, with the aid of a newspaper friend, brings the resultant action, when it breaks through the rather over-abundant dialogue.

Collier and Lucile Gleason head the cast. Russell Hopton, Gloria Shea and William Janney aso are quite familiar names, and George Breakston's work as the schoolboy son of Collier is worthy of mention.

Against the chattering impatience of Lucile Gleason as his wife, Gloria Shea, the daughter, and Janney, the son with radical leadings, Collier pegs away at his non-accepted column of homey wit, with the sympathy of Hopton, young reporter in love with Miss Shea, and the devotion of his youngest son. The new managing editor drops him from the proofreading desk and Hopton quits with him. Hopton gets him a radio spot with his Uncle Dudley comment and he's a hit, but he doesn't tell the family, because he knows they'll try to decide for him what to say. It comes out when his wife calls the newspaper, but before they can get to him he's knocked unconscious by a stone thrown by an agitator after he has broken up a red meeting which his son Janney has been addressing. In the hospital he begins the making over of his family, and Miss Shea, whom he tactfully steered away from a dubious affair with Jameson Thomas, decides to return Hopton's ring to the appropriate finger.

It's a simple story, filmed without flair, and essentially a story to be told in dialogue, yet slowed up somewhat by that dialogue. The menace phase is essentially in straightforward conversation, and there's so little of it that the story is for the family, though there's not as much action as the youngsters usually demand. —Rovelstad, New York.

One Exciting Adventure

(Universal)

Comedy Romance

In this picture, a comedy romance, the sustaining dramatic and human interest entertainment elements are loosely but effectively wrapped up in a veil of psychological mystery. Essentially it's the story of a woman Raffles, but one who stole for the thrill and pleasure of it and not for profit. The atmosphere is one of gayety and moving speedily it builds to several intriguing and surprising anti-climaxes.

The title together with several of the situations and developments, suggests some effective interest creating exploitation, for playing as a comedy, without promising more than pleasant entertainment.

While much, embracing the range of regular entertainment elements, goes on, the story is comparatively simple. Rina steals because she cannot help it. An exotic perfume, giving police a clue, leads to romance with Stone as detectives Fussli and Kleinsilber ask him to identify it. Simultaneously, menace, in the person of Lavassor, is introduced. In love, Stone tries both to cure and reform Rina. Much that is exciting and funny occurs, particularly Kleinsilber's search for the jewels and Fussli's musical duet with Rina. As Lavassor stands between Stone and love, they make a deal. If Rina will steal again, she goes to Lavassor. If not she is Stone's. Tempted, Rina sets the stage for Stone to reveal Lavassor as a much wanted crook, an incident that elevates the demure Fussli to triumph over his browbeating confrere, Kleinsilber and real romance follows.

Comedy appears to be the best selling angle for this picture. Despite the title tone, there's not much adventure as far as actual action is concerned. If the fact that Binnie Barnes sings a couple of numbers means anything, it should be used.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Embarrassing Moments

Comedy-Drama

A comedy-drama, in which the comedy is meant to predominate, this offers a mild and occasionally amusing sort of entertainment, concerned with the manner in which a practical joker is made the butt of a practical joke by way of retaliation and thereby almost learns his lesson—but not quite.

With the title and the theme as indicated there is no reason why the exhibitor should not be able to work up a certain amount of interest in the picture through the use of "gags" based in some way on the practical joker idea.

The cast names are fairly good marquee material, with Chester Morris and Marian Nixon in the leads and Walter Woolf, at one time featured in Broadway musical shows, as the third side of a triangular affair. Henry Armetta is a featured comedian. The picture is not to be taken too seriously by the exhibitor, who should pattern his selling after its mood. Comedy is the element to be stressed, that and the two top cast names for what they may be worth in the community.

The film moves at a lively pace, with some of the comedy descending occasionally to the level of burlesque, if not actually slapstick. The story dealing with a couple of hoax murders, the exhibitor should find no difficulty developing lively exploitation.

Morris, the perennial practical joker, is in love with Miss Nixon, who is also the object of the affection of Woolf, a radio tenor, with more hope in the radio direction than success. Incidental practical jokes which arouse the antagonism of Miss Nixon culminate in a hoax, with Woolf as the subject, when at a party Morris telephones Woolf, representing himself to be a broadcasting official, and forces Woolf to sing in most undignified posture.

When Morris comes to him next day to apologize for the exciting publicity which has been the result of the escapade, he finds Woolf despondent, remarking that he has lost reputation, sweetheart and career. He goes into the other room, Morris hears two shots, rushes in to find Woolf on the floor, a gun beside him. The valet accuses Morris, and Morris flees. It is quickly revealed to everyone except Morris that the whole thing is a hoax to cure him of his habit. Morris hides out, thinking the police are after him, and falls in with a gang of counterfeiters. Eventually, when he is arrested for another reason, he discovers the truth. Turning the tables when he believes Miss Nixon really loves Woolf, he feigns a suicide, and when Miss Nixon rushes to him, has his final joke.

The production contains nothing that is amiss for youngsters, but at the same time has little of definite interest for them.—Aaronson, New York.

Crimson Romance

(Mascot)

Drama

A strong drama of war, romance against a background of wholesale killing, and the misery bred of prejudice even in neutral nations, this independently-produced picture has the salable quality of a good story. Since it has its setting for the most part in the arena of the Great War, it is barely possible the patrons will not be particularly receptive, but that is something which the individual exhibitor, with his knowledge of his own patrons, will have to judge for himself.

There is comparatively little of the spectacle of large-scale death often found in such films, but there is sufficient excitement engendered by dog fights in the air, moving fleets of pursuit planes and aircrashes. Paper should inform patrons that the title does not indicate any torrid romance of the big city or the like, but a swift and active meeting of individuals in a triangular affair in the crimson of war. The further thematic element which finds an American joining his pal in enlistment in the German army from a sense of loyalty, and later shows both men in love with the same German girl ambulance driver, offers opportunity for copy lines of attention-attracting caliber. The film has both feminine and masculine appeal.

Cast names are not particularly strong for marquee purposes, the best names being those of Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza and Erich von Stroheim. The story, therefore, is the selling focus.

Lyon and James Bush, whose performance is worthy of mention, are buddies and mechanics in an airplane factory selling planes to the Allies. Bush falls under the shadow by reason of his German origin and name, and is fired. Lyon, incensed, quits with him, and the pair, because of Bush, are unable to obtain a position. Bush finally leaves for Germany, there to enlist as a pilot. Unexpectedly Lyon goes with him, the United States not yet in the war.

In the war zone, they come under the command of Stroheim, and meet Miss Maritza, ambulance driver. The serious minded and quiet Bush falls completely in love, for the first time. Lyon, a past-master in the art of intriguing women, does likewise, and Bush of course questions his motives. Lyon is under immediate suspicion by Stroheim because of his American origin. It is soon apparent that Miss Maritza is in love with Lyon rather than with Bush, and enmity springs up. When Lyon, with Miss Maritza, fails to respond to a call to take the air, he is flayed by Stroheim as a coward.

Then the United States joins the Allies. Lyon is subject to court-martial when he professes his allegiance to his own country, and is ordered taken prisoner by Bush. But Bush permits him to escape in a German plane, and Lyon leads an Allied bombing expedition to a munitions concentration. The German squadron gives battle. In order to save Lyon when his guns jam as he is attacked by Stroheim, Bush deliberately crashes with Stroheim and both are killed.

Back home after the war, Lyon and Miss Maritza try to take the place of Bush with his mother, who, a bit too calm, speaks a condemnation of war which is not particularly pertinent to the story.

Offering entertainment, the film is an adult attraction.—AARONSON, New York.

Thunderstorm

(Amkino)

Drama

This Russian picture is a typical example of the weighty and unrelieved drama of the motion picture production of the Soviet nation. That the film is strongl ydramatic, that its performances are for the most part equally convincing, there can be no question.

Its appeal, then, in this country, would be to those communities familiar with the Russian language, used in the film, or in those communities, again apt to be in the larger metropolitan centers, where a "class" audience might be interested in such a foreign production as this. Through the use of superimposed English translations of important passages in the dialogue, the person unfamiliar with the language should experience no difficulty in understanding the thread of the story.

The picture is an adaptation of a folk-drama by A. N. Ostrovsky, and is released by Amkino, distributing arm here of the Russian state-controlled industry. The players are all native.

Taking for its theme the manner in which the Russian of yesterday, in the realm of the Czar, were he in the peasant class, was forced to exist in what was something worse than serfdom, held in the thrall of an unintelligent religious fanaticism, stupidly hidebound conventionalities and a condition where the head of the household, man or woman, was absolute master of his domain. The story has no reflection of oppression from above, but rather an oppression from within the localized community.

Here we find a young girl, married to the not too clever son of a merchant woman whose iron will completely dominates her household. The girl is thoroughly miserable, and confides in her sister-in-law, who is carrying on a clandestine affair with a store clerk. The sister arranges that she should meet a young and handsome visitor to the town. Her husband leaves on a buying trip and for a few nights the girl finds some sort of happiness with her lover, although that happiness is bitterly tinged with an abject fear of the consequences of her infidelity, however justified it may have been, and an almost overpowering sense of shame.

She is in constant dread of the thunderstorms which frequently sweep without warning upon the community. During a service at church, as a storm comes up, the girl, under the ferociously condemning glare of her mother-in-law, breaks down and confesses. She is beaten by her husband, hears old women explaining complacently what should be her punishment, as they calmly sip their tea. Driven frantic, she goes to her lover, finds he is about to leave, and hears his refusal to take her with him. Utterly defeated she leaps into the Volga.

It is strong drama, well done of its type and origin, but definitely limited in appeal.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by Soyuzfilm. Distributed by Amkino Corporation. Directed by Vladimir Petrov. From the folk-drama by A. N. Ostrovsky. Photographed by V. Gardanov. Running time, 80 minutes. Release date, September 28, 1934.

The Curtain Falls

(Chesterfield)

Drama

Henrietta Crosman, decidedly able character actress, who has gained a certain popularity and prominence the past year or so, is dominantly the leading player in this independent picture, in which drama, romance and something of tragedy are elements of the story. It is virtually a one-woman picture, with Miss Crosman offering a strong performance in a role for which she is well suited.

The title and theme are in themselves open to selling copy for both men and women. An aging woman, once a great actress on the verge of complete poverty and living in the past, takes a last chance, grasps the bull by the horns, and gives the greatest performance of her career in straightening out the troubled affairs of a family on the edge of collapse. The curtain falls as she completes her impersonation, and tranquility is restored to the household.

Besides Miss Crosman are Dorothy Lee, Holmes Herbert, Natalie Moorehead, Jameson Thomas, all familiar names. The selling angle is the story and Miss Crosman in those situations where her's is a sufficiently strong name to have drawing power in itself. In any case, her performance cannot fail to be approved.

Miss Crosman, down-and-out, but not giving up, is forced to leave the hotel where she has spent much of her more or less penniless "retirement" through the kindness of an elderly manager who has a long memory. In a cheap boarding house, she hopes for an answer to a cable she sent to an old fellow-actress, now one of the wealthiest women in England. An answer reveals that the English woman has disappeared in Africa, and that her next of kin are a nephew and his family on Long Island. Grasping at straws, and at the end of her rope, she determines on a bold stroke.

She grandly arrives at the Long Island home, posing as the wealthy English woman, and storms through the household, dominating every one.

Miss Crosman soon discovers that Herbert is broke, that Miss Lee is meeting opposition from her mother, that Miss Moorehead is carrying on an affair with Thomas, that Darrow is in debt to a gambling club, and that the entire household is crumbling. Using her borrowed identity and its significance, she cows the bankers into extending credit to Herbert, settles Darrow's debt in an entertaining sequence at the gambling club. Then calling the entire group of principals together at a dinner party, she exposes them all to one another.

It is an entertaining, dramatic story, well performed, and in the category of adult material.—AARONSON, New York.

My Old Dutch

(Gaumont-British)

Drama

Genuine heart appeal, rich humor of detail and considerable pictorial "period" value as a record of the generation which saw the development of motoring and aviation—and survived the War—are the outstanding merits of this British film.

"My Old Dutch," in fact, offers almost all the values which the showman wants, if he has decided that its all-Cockney dialect is a surmountable difficulty.

Notable is an incident in a pre-War cinema theatre where the hero and heroine, and their little son, see the original silent version of "My Old Dutch," in which Flo. Turner, Albert Chevalier (singer of the famous song of the same title) and Henry Edwards, now a British director, were featured.

The big value of the film lies in the absolute fidelity of its picture of the life history of two very humble Londoners.

Sinclair Hill's direction is masterly. The atmosphere of London "low" life, and of the period, has never been so admirably screened, and the acting of Betty Balfour and Michael Hogan, with Gordon Harker as a Cockney is as good as anything achieved in this country.

The production has a wealth of incidental material. The cinema episode has been mentioned; another which can be sold is the vivid picture of London's half-scared, half-humorous, reaction to the Zeppelin raids.—ALLAN, London.

Produced by Gainsborough Pictures at Islington and distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Sinclair Hill. Associate producer, Ivor Montague. Story by Leslie Arliss and Bryan Wallace. Script by Marjorie Gaffney, Bryan Wallace and Mary Murillo. Dialogue, Michael Hogan. Photography, Leslie Rowson. Art direction, P. Proud.

The Spectacle Maker
(MGM)
Excellent

Fantasy, whimsical and often ironical, "The Spectacle Maker" is worthy of individual exploitation on its own merit. Directed by John Villiers Farrow from the story by Frank Harris, the story in Technicolor tells of Hans Schmidt, the spectacle maker, and his crippled grandson. A nobleman informs Hans his fortune will be made if he can invent a lens which will make everything beautiful to the eye. After a long search for beauty, Hans invents such a lens and fortune smiles upon him, but only for a while, for a Stranger seeks him out, tells him his lens makes for deceit and hypocrisy and advises Hans to make a lens which shows the truth. This accomplished, Hans suddenly finds himself accused of sorcery and Black Magic, for his lens of truth has revealed to the Grand Duke his own hypocrisy and greed. The Stranger returns in time to defend Hans, the little cripple is cured and Truth triumphs.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Hearst Metrotone News
(Hearst MGM)
Edwin Hill Commentates

The debut of the Hearst reel under its own production organization marks also the initial "appearance" of Edwin C. Hill, whose "Human Side of the News" has made him known to millions, as the Hearst "Globe Trotter." Mr. Hill provides all the running commentary. This first reel is highlighted by President Roosevelt's fireside radio talk last Sunday night; the opening of the football season, with the game between Navy and William and Mary; the British cruiser H. M. S. Norfolk off California saluting a remodeled British frigate being used in an MGM picture, and an appeal from Sing Sing prison by Warden Lawes for a plan for the nation's youth to help them from turning to crime. In this last sequence, aided by numerous process shots, Mr. Hill has an opportunity to demonstrate the colorful narration for which he is justly famous.

Gus Van and His Neighbors
(Universal)
Entertaining

Gus Van, well known comedy singer of the vaudeville stage, acts in the capacity of master of ceremonies in this group of vaudeville turns, produced by Mentone. It may be said that Van, in several of his character songs, provides the best entertainment, although the others are lively. Included are Armida, the Mexican dancer; Gine, DeQuincey and Lewis, comedy adagio team; Jean, Ruth and Gail, tap dancers, and Danny Dare's Dancing Darlings, in an attractive routine. It is a generally entertaining subject.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Switzerland the Beautiful
(MGM-FitzPatrick)
Good

In Technicolor, James A. FitzPatrick takes his audience to the peaceful climes of Switzerland. The film's pastoral beauty definitely is enhanced by the color employed. Throughout, the Alps stand out in bold relief against an azure sky as roaring mountain streams crash down the green and fertile valleys. Mr. FitzPatrick includes Interlaken, Lucerne and Geneva in this tour, interspersing scenes of typical village life.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Pro Football
(MGM-Pete Smith Oddity)
Excellent and Timely

The professional Chicago Bears are the actors in "Pro Football," and their appearance at this time provides seasonal material. Much of the action is in slow motion and is thereby explanatory of many of the intricacies of professional play, which in many respects is fundamentally different from the school and college game. Such stellar players as Red Grange, Bronko Nagurski, Carl Brombaugh and Ookie Miller should help to sell this subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Tailspin Tommy
Action Serial

There is plenty of action, thrill and appeal for the youngsters in this latest Universal serial, adapted from the cartoon strip of the same title by Hal Forrest, which has a considerably wide circulation over the country, and forms a definite selling point for the exhibitor. It is a yarn of the air mail and mail pilots, with a romance woven in and the usual and expected introduction of bandits of the air. The lengthy cast is headed by Maurice Murphy, Patricia Farr and Noah Beery, Jr., with such familiars as Grant Withers and William Desmond among the supporting players. The first three chapters of the 12 to be issued are titled "Death Flies the Mail," "The Mail Goes Through," "Sky Bandits," which indicates the type of action to be found in the film. In these chapters, Murphy, young garage mechanic and an aviation "bug," gets his chance at the airport, saves an airmail contract, rescues air circus spectators by crashing a runaway plane, and proceeds to fall in love with Miss Farr. There is considerable in the serial which should offer opportunity for active selling, directed, of course, chiefly at the juveniles among the patrons. The first three chapters run, respectively, 27, 21 and 20 minutes.

Tale of the Vienna Woods
(MGM-Harmon Ising)
Good

This Technicolor cartoon subject brings to the screen the old fairy tale of the deer and the pedestal satyr. The deer persuades the satyr to gambol with him. In the midst of their play they are chased by hunting dogs and, hiding in bushes and trees, escape. The satyr returns to his pedestal and the deer wanders off into the woods only to find the dogs lying in wait for him. Again he is chased and cornered on the edge of a cliff. He cries for help and the satyr rescues him.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Taking Care of Baby
(MGM)
For Mothers

Of unusual interest to mothers, this is just what the title indicates—an object lesson in the correct and incorrect ways to care for the baby. By means of comparison of the methods of an ignorant and scatter-brained mother and one who knows and understands, ideas and methods usually so difficult to understand when explained or read are made graphically clear and understandable. Essentially serious and instructive, it is not, however, devoid of humor. Running time, 8 minutes.—G. M.

In Far Mandalay
(Fox)
Excellent

Characterized, as are all of the Magic Carpet of Movietone series, by brilliant photography, this number takes the screen audience into Burma, the land of Kipling's famous Mandalay. Chinese junks plying the waters, strangely expert native jugglers, giraffe-necked women with necks wrapped in metal, natives chewing the inevitable beetle-nut, and beautiful temples, all are part of the interesting scene caught by the camera. A minumum of accompanying explanation, the use of a few subtitles, add to the effectiveness of the subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Strikes and Spares
(MGM)
Technique of Bowling

With Andy Variapa, world's champion, doing the work, and Pete Smith the talking, bowlers are shown the proper form and technique of bowling and for their entertainment a liberal assortment of trick shots is shown. The champion has a stooge to show how not to do it and then he himself shows the proper form to get strike results. Some of the trick shots are amazing—picking off single pins, combinations of hooks and back-ups, curving the ball from one side of the alley to the other and finally rolling a ball down one alley to pick off the one and ten pins and having the one pin fly over to another alley and pick a pin off there. Running time, 8 minutes.—G. M.

Goofy Movies No. 8
(MGM-Pete Smith)
Fair

Pete Smith tells all about the fashions of 1913 and then reveals to his listeners a "meller-drammer" of 1909 vintage. As usual, Pete's comments are to the point.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Nifty Nurses
Entertaining

An entertaining and amusing comedy of the musical variety, this is in the nature of a take-off on such things as "Men in White," and featuring Johnny Downs and Sally Sweet, with Billy Gilbert supplying most of the comedy lines as the German-accented chief surgeon at the hospital. The music is tuneful, the dance numbers, patterned after the title, are engaging, and the lines are often quite amusing. The number of things, lost by the several surgeons, which come out of a patient, provide amusement, as nurses and attendants cheer the operation from the gallery. It is entertaining burlesque.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Super-Stupid
Amusing

The title of this comedy being well exemplified by Vince Barnett, the result is not particularly brilliant, but nonetheless entertaining comedy. As Barnett, assistant and come-on man for Billy Gilbert, street peddler of panaceas, expertly succeeds in doing the wrong thing at the right time, the pair are continually in hot water, especially with a certain policeman. Eventually hired as an auctioneer, Gilbert mistakes the address and sells the furnishings of the policeman's new home. There are laughs.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Betty Boop's Little Pal
(Paramount)
Amusing

Here is a definitely entertaining and amusing number of this animated cartoon series, in which Betty's little dog gets mixed up in the picnic lunch, is sent home, and captured by a dog-catcher en route. He escapes and returns to Betty after she had given him up as lost. Betty "sings" a tuneful number in entertaining fashion.—Running time, 7 minutes.

A Night in a Night Club
(Universal)
Entertaining Potpourri

J. Harold Murray's pleasing barytone and bearing alone makes this Mentone production well worth while, and Buck and Bubbles have lost none of their comedy dance ability. There are also Martha Raye, singer, and Elaine Arden, Greek dialect comedian, all with Harry Rose as master of ceremonies and singing a bit himself.—Running time, 18 minutes.

THE Hollywood REPORTER

'LADY BY CHOICE' A HONEY!

Robson Scores in Splendid Picture

A picture that's just plain, ordinary swell! Humor, warmth, drama and audience appeal with capital letters . . . good taste and pace and all the ingredients that go towards making rave notices. Give yourself a treat by playing this up big. Without comparisons, it can be a tremendous successor to "Lady For A Day".

This is money in the bank...the picture is a triumph and combines sock drama, stirring comedy and unique romance. Another gem in Columbia's diadem. A worthy successor to "Lady For A Day". Motion Picture Daily

As a box office attraction it looks like a runner-up on "Lady For A Day"...shoots straight at the audience heart with emotional wallop. Picture has everything it takes for popular appeal. Variety

THEATRE OWNERS TAKE ACTION

ON

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Stirred to action by reports in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, MOTION PICTURE DAILY and BETTER THEATRES that the National Housing Act provides $33,000,000 in credit to motion picture theatres for repairs, replacements and improvements, hundreds of theatre owners have signified intention to borrow as quickly as possible to recondition their theatres.

The Government has presented an opportunity and a challenge that has awakened the interest of the whole motion picture industry. The theatre is the proving ground for all the costly efforts in production, and must add its share toward the final triumph of its presentations. It is necessary that motion pictures be shown in surroundings that are not only safe and sanitary but pleasing and comfortable. Theatre owners recognize that these attributes of their theatres contribute solidly to their rewards.

Although the National Housing Act was designed as a broad recovery measure for the 16,000,000 buildings in the country in need of repair, the Government has recognized the importance of the motion picture theatre in the prosperity and well-being of the nation and made definite provision for them. It remains for theatre owners to make immediate use of so rare an opportunity.

BETTER THEATRES will continue to report and assist the progress of theatre modernization and invites exhibitors to make free use of its services; questions relating to reconstruction, replacements and improvements will receive immediate attention and replies made available to all theatre owners by publication in forthcoming issues. On request, BETTER THEATRES will supply list of local financial institutions through which loans may be obtained.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Pocahontas, Iowa

DEAR HERALD:

At Wall Lake we were again pleased to meet our very good friend, Miss Richards, who helps her father operate the Strand theatre. To operate a theatre in Wall Lake and make it pay requires a lot of work and faith in the future, together with a disposition to forget the past, but this is just what Miss Richards and her father are doing, in spite of the fact that it is a small town. We hope they continue to succeed.

Our old friend, L. A. Miller of the Iowa theatre at Lake City, is still giving that community the best there is in entertainment, both in quality of service and the conveniences of a beautiful house. On one or two nights a week he has "Bank Night," but whether or not it is paying we don't know, and he won't know until he finally figures up the cost and the after effect. Boils are very disagreeable things to have, but they say that they purify the system. Maybe so.

L. J. Kingman, who operates the Empress at Rockwell City, was about to commit murder on a film salesman when we called. We finally persuaded both of them to have a glass of buttermilk, and after that they got along all right. L. J. looks and reminds us very much of Harry Day at Ida Grove, except that one is a little better looking than the other.

H. H. Thomas runs the De Lux theatre at Kingsley. Harry Day sent us over there to have him take the HERALD, and after we got there we found out that he was already taking it. We found out something else, too: he came from Nebraska. Left a darned good state to come over here among these cornhuskers. He used to help Art Record at Hebron, Nebraska, run his theatre. That accounts for the reason why Art can go to Florida one winter and California the next. And that is probably the reason why Art don't like 3.2.

Keeps Himself Posted

At Remsen we met Fred Koch and his wife. We don't want to say too much about Mrs. Koch because Fred might get sore about it, but listen, Oscar, if you ever go to Remsen be sure to call on Fred and tell him you want to see the embroidery work that his wife has done and you will see the finest pieces you ever saw. How that lady makes 'em is a wonder to us. Fred operates the theatre and tries to keep himself posted on the best service, that's why he is so strong for the HERALD.

Paulina would likely be just another Iowa town if it weren't for Mr. and Mrs. Johanson, who operate the Wonderland theatre. They tore us away from the hotel and made us go up to their home and stay with them, and we are mighty glad they did, because we had a most delightful time, and besides that we got to eat some more of Mrs. Johanson's cooking, and Mabel, when you eat her cooking you know you have eaten something. And besides that, here is something you fellows ought to know, and that is that Mr. Johanson is an expert mechanic in anything he undertakes, and if you want an excellent mechanic, electrical or otherwise, you couldn't do better than get in touch with him, but his services might come high, measured by his ability.

A Doctor of Theatres, Too

If you are ever sick, and you go through Newell, be sure to call on Dr. M. A. Armstrong, who has a reputation of curing suffering humanity as well as operating the Wonderland theatre as it should be operated. We had a delightful visit with the doctor and hope to meet him again some time. It is a pleasure to converse with men of knowledge and we hope to go back some time.

Storm Lake is fortunate in having two such theatre operators as Mr. Tracy and Mr. Newman. Lots of towns don't. We didn't get to see Mr. Tracy until his show had been closed, so we don't know what he was showing, but we called on Mr. and Mrs. Norman and they were showing Shirley Temple in "Now and Forever," and were showing to a packed house, which proves that the public wants good, clean entertainment, and that's what this picture is. Storm Lake is a good town but the lake is getting low, but that's because Tracy and Norman don't have anything to do with the lake.

E. Recknagel still tells the engineers on the Illinois Central R. R. when to stop and when to go, and they better stop and go when he tell 'em, too. He also runs the popular movie house in this town, and when he tell 'em he's got a good show he's got it; that's why his theatre has become so popular in this corn belt section. He's a strong advocate of the HERALD.

This town is Pocahontas. This isn't the place where Pocahontas made goo goo eyes at John Smith, but it is where the "tall corn grows," and where Jack Bauma runs the Rialto theatre, and that's why this town occupies a prominent position on the map. If Pocahontas and John Smith were here tonight we'd try and shake John and take her down to the Rialto to see Jack's show and give her a real treat. We have often wondered if we'd sooner kiss Pocahontas than Cleopatra. Jack says he wouldn't, but then Jack always did have a weak stomach and Ezra, if you never sat down to Mrs. Bauma's table you hain't never et nuthin yet. When we sat down to her table and remembered that the doctor instructed us to step lightly on the feed, we wished somebody would shoot him.

Real Town, Real Theatre

Didja ever hear the name "Humota" for a theatre? No you didn't until now. Well, that's the name of W. B. Frankie's house at Humboldt, and the Humota is a real theatre operated by a real fellow and Humboldt is a real town. Dakota City is a suburb of Humboldt and is separated from that town by the railroad. It is the county seat and is about the size of your thumbnail, and when the boys and girls want to see a real show they go over to Humboldt for two reasons, one being on account of Mr. Frankie and the other being because they have no theatre in Dakota City. When we called before, Mrs. Frankie was in a hospital and not expected to live, now she is rugged and hearty and looks like she could throw a male cow over the fence by a bull's tail. We were glad to find her looking so well.

W. F. Smith of the Colonial at Clarion is still there and has taught the public to understand that when he puts on a show it is a good one. That's why the Colonial is so wellknown throughout this territory. We met the junior Mr. Smith for the first time, and our impression is that he never stole anything but a few glances at some of the Clarion girls. Clarion is a good town, Mr. Smith is a swell fellow and we hope the Colonial succeeds.

We noted in a recent issue of the HERALD that a gentleman out in Oregon steps on us rather heavy because of our remarks regarding that "Timber Belt" idea to bring rain. We don't know much about it but we may answer it next week. We recall that a citizen of our country once declared he could bring rain by bombarding the Heavens with explosives. Our legislature appropriated $5,000 for him to try the experiment. He did and it didn't rain a drop for four months. If he were here today he would likely be advocating a "timber belt" to bring rain unless the teacher sent him back to the third grade. In the next issue we may tell you a whole lot of what we don't know about rain, but then rain don't have anything to do with the theatre business except if we don't get it.

Canada Uses Films For Loan Announcement

Through the cooperation of the motion picture industry in Canada, the federal government there is this week telling film audiences its purpose in launching the new $250,000,000 Dominion of Canada Refunding Loan. The loan brings the total of Canada's refunded wartime debt up over the billion mark and is one of Canada's most important recent financing efforts.

Theatres donated screen time, assistance which the premier and members of the government considered of major importance. The film, a brief sketch of trailer length, was made by Associated Screen News. Two hundred prints are being used to insure simultaneous release throughout the whole Dominion.

Radio Has College Short

RKO Radio has produced a two-reel short subject, called "Songs of the Colleges," and featuring instrumental and vocal renditions of the songs of 13 of the country's leading colleges. The musical material is said to form a background to shots depicting phases of college life, with emphasis on football.

LOVE

IS A WONDERFUL THING

Let us see what fine stories and inspired directon can do.

"THE SCARLET LETTER," an acknowledged classic, has a love story that has thrilled the world's readers for eighty years—also, hate, jealousy, revenge, comedy; marvelous atmosphere, a score of interesting elements and—Love.

"NIGHT ALARM" we believe to be the most spectacular fire thriller ever filmed. It has political intrigue, a fighting newspaper, little dialogue, much action, comedy sequences, and, defying death and disaster—the romance of two real youngsters—Love.

A story of a pretty girl on her own—moving swiftly to a shock climax—yet motivated by her relations with two admirers—"SHE HAD TO CHOOSE," a comedy drama with music, has the necessary element—Love.

Three fine entertainments — clean, wholesome, smart, classed as "major" production by all reviewers.

Any Majestic Exchange manager would "love" to screen them for you.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

GIRL IN DANGER: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—Average program action picture but it doesn't pretend to be anything more, so that's all right. Played it on the Friday-Saturday change. No squawks. No comment. Average business.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy, Lillian Bond—A very good program picture; one of the best Tim McCoy has made this season; plenty of action and thrills, and Lillian Bond is very attractive.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Virginia. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William, Guy Kibbee, Glenda Farrell, Ned Sparks, Jean Parker, Walter Connolly—Ran this rather late and to only fair business. Nice picture, but I can't see where all the "raves" came from.—E. C. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Small town-farming patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—A pleasing little musical that did a fair Sunday business. Played Sept. 2-3.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Good Saturday business on this western. Played Sept. 14-15.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Drew above the average for us on this western. Played Sept. 5-6.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Usual action western. A little comedy relief would improve Jones' behavior. Played Sept. 13-14.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray—A fair picture without much draw. Played Sept. 4-5.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Ralph Bellamy—A swell piece of entertainment with a miserable title. Second night better than first. Original story title would have been much better. Played Aug. 27-28.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—Well received by few who saw it. Good little programmer with no draw. Played Sept. 17-18-19.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—A good action picture. Fair Saturday business. Played Aug. 31.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SOCIAL REGISTER: Colleen Moore—A total waste of film and time. Played Aug. 20-21.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard—Terrible. The stars worked hard and did a good job with what material they had but it didn't help. First walkouts for a long time. Played Sept. 3-5.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

First National

BIG SHAKEDOWN, THE: Bette Davis, Charles Farrell—A good picture that brought average business Running time, 64 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

FEMALE: Ruth Chatterton—Very good comedy romance. Just a program picture but gave splendid satisfaction. Played Sept. 4-5-6.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Can't say much for this one. Just a mess of noise. Poor business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak, Helen Lowell—This is a good program picture that will please the average theatre-goer. It is a melodrama of the gangster type. The gangster theme is the only offensive part, but that is handled in such a manner that it is really not offensive. Barthelmess and Miss Dvorak play their roles superbly, but Helen Lowell stole the show from them. Played on late Saturday night show to good business. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Sept. 15, 10:45 show.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell—A very pleasing musical that did unusual midweek business. Played Sept. 11-12.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—Universal satisfaction. This clicked 100 per cent. Best business since "42d Street" on the Warner-First National product. Full of variety that made good entertainment. Running time, 89 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—Had good business to a good show. Lots of comment about liking Powell-Rogers team better than Powell and Keeler. Kinda agree with 'em. Rogers has a little less sugar coating. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Sept. 7-8.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—A dandy picture of the radio game, with good singing, good acting and a good story. Joe Cawthorn and Grant Mitchell almost stole the show. No chance for complaint from the Legion of Decency on this one. Had been shown in two surrounding towns, so box office was not so big as it should have been, but it pleased 100 per cent. It is a pleasure to exhibit this kind of show. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—About the poorest thing Brown has ever made. Only average attendance. Played Aug. 24-25.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Fox

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES: Hugh Williams, Helen Twelvetrees—To my opinion, the worst picture of the year. Not ten words of the whole mess could be understood clearly. Mona Barrie has no looks whatsoever, and cannot act. Poor business with a good title wasted on nothing.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Virginia. General patronage.

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES: Hugh Williams—Very poor. Story drags and Hugh Williams talks so fast he is hard to understand and on top of this he has an English accent. We had lots of walkouts. Business below average. Played Sept. 14-15.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Nice picture that pleased all. Shirley Temple takes the picture away from Dunn and Trevor. This picture out-grossed any Fox picture this season. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 2-3-4.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Missouri. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—A picture that will please everybody, young and old. Drew one of the biggest crowds of the year. The picture is good even without Shirley Temple and with her it is just about as good as any exhibitor could ask for. Played Sept. 22.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—No need to tell you this one is good. To our notion the best that this young lady has done and we played "Little Miss Marker," too. This one gives her a chance to do the stuff your folks and mine want to see her do. Just about a perfect "evening at the theatre" if you care for our opinion. Running time, eight reels. Played Sept. 3-4.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Pat Paterson—Good but we would class this as a program picture. It really didn't come up to expectations. Why all the shouting about Pat Paterson? She seemed very ordinary to us. Her singing is anything but good. Business poor. Played Sept. 2-3.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Very good picture for any night of the week. Did an extraordinary business on this one. Has appeal to all classes. Played Sept. 6-7-8.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—Fair picture; better than "Movie Crazy." Did not draw; business below average. Does not make enough pictures to have a fan following. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Sept. 16-17-18.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Missouri. Small town patronage.

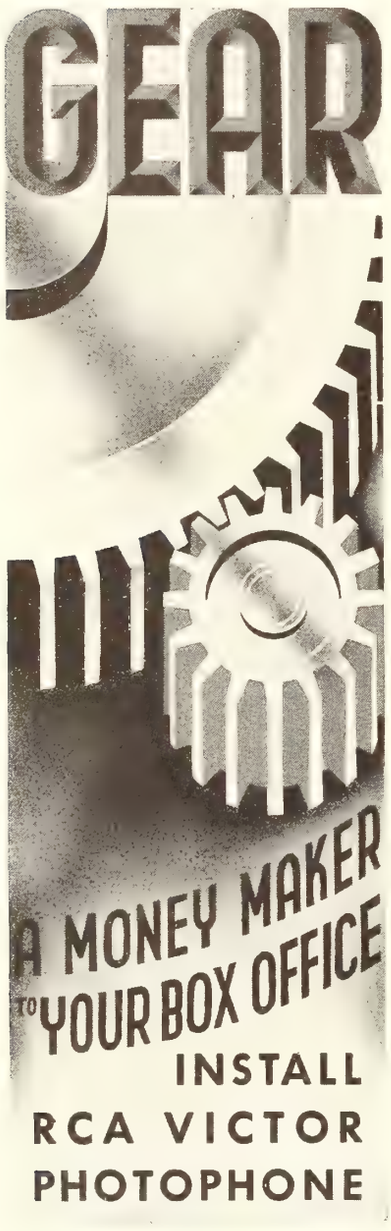
CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor—Janet Gaynor always a surefire drawing card at the Green Lantern. Brought out the best crowd for several months. Everybody seemed pleased with the picture and that's what we want. Played Sept. 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—With Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, plus James Dunn and Ginger Rogers, this should have been a great special, but owing to a weak story it is only a fair program picture. Good performance by the entire cast and it is clean and fairly entertaining, but it is not up to the Gaynor standard. Not in the same class with "Carolina." No complaints on this one, but not many compliments. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—This fine production deserves all the praise it has received. Many people told us they thought it the best show ever made. Played Aug. 5-6.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

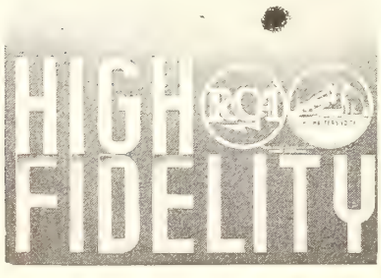
HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Good clean comedy; one of Rogers' best. Played three nights and Sunday matinee to above average business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10-11.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Missouri. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—Well received and did good business. Not up to some of his previous releases but who cares when it's Rogers. Played Aug. 29-30.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.



MURDER IN TRINIDAD: Heather Angel—Terrible. Another uninteresting and depressing picture. Lots of walkouts. Just a waste of time and money. Played Aug. 3-4.—Mrs. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—If ever there was a 100 per cent picture for the small town theatre, here it is. Just plain, solid entertainment, clean as can be; quite the best Gaynor vehicle in ever so long and everybody in it was hand picked for his or her job and delivered. Business not so hot on it here due to local conditions and an unusually large "revival" interest, but it's a corker of a picture and one that Fox and all concerned should be proud of. Running time, ten reels. Played Sept. 18-19-20.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.



SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Woods, Ralph Morgan—Fair program picture. Quite a bit in this one, but failed to draw any business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Missouri. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers—Good program picture. Zasu Pitts is better in this than in some other pictures. Played Aug. 17-18.—Mr. and WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—A picture of class appeal. Did a satisfactory business. Played September 2-3.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—Hard to report on. Excellent picture. Perhaps the story has been done too much, a combination of "Cavalcade" (without that picture, two British drawbacks) and "Rothschild" (without that picture, really great aspects). But it is enjoyable though apparently lacks in drawing power due largely to no star names. Miss Carroll is a most attractive new personality. Running time, ten reels. Played Sept. 16-17.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

MGM

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Ramon Novarro—Beautifully produced. Out of the ordinary. We would have been so proud of this picture but we received a very bad print, which ruined the whole show. Appeals especially to women. Average drawing power. Played Aug. 26-27.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow—Swell entertainment. A little spicy in spots but nothing objectionable. Had many favorable comments on the performance of Patsy Kelly. Business good. Played Sept. 15.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Laurel and Hardy, Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez—Just a mess of nothing. Laurel and Hardy and "Chocolate Soldier" spectacle was all there is to the picture. I can't figure out why they don't take Jimmy Durante out and shoot him. To say he is poor is putting it too mildly.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—Combination of star names, MGM photography and Dillinger publicity combined to make sweet moosic at the box office. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: William Powell, Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—Very good. The fact that this was Dillinger's last picture, I think helped business, which was slightly above average.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Hersholt, Elizabeth Allan, Otto Kruger—Grand picture. Gable and Loy excellent, but the palm for perfect work goes to Jean Hersholt. I could watch and listen to this sterling actor for hours. I'll bet he's a fine man and I'd sure like to shake his hand—Dr. Hochberg, I salute you! I repeat, "Men in White" is grand. Played Sept. 16.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles—Good program feature that gave general satisfaction. Fair business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Sept. 8.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—One of the best mysteries to date. Everyone like this. Holds interest to the end. Played Sept. 9-10.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Otto Kruger—Trite and inconsequential picture. There is nothing in either story, title or cast to draw business. Best thing to do with this is to canal it.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies, Onslow Stevens—Slow-moving and long, but a real nice picture. Well-liked. Played Aug. 17.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo—Very fine production but is no good for a small town. A few praised it highly but had lots of walkouts. Business just average. Payed Aug. 14-15-16.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Edward Arnold, Gene Raymond, Esther Ralston, Jean Dixon—This is the type of picture that keeps MGM out in front of the herd. Did a nice business anl pleased everyone. Crawford is certainly a consummate actress, but every time I see her, I wonder what makes her click so big. But as long as she does click, I should worry why.—E. C. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. General farming patronage.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy, Madge Evans—Can't give this much praise; disappointed my patrons. Played Aug. 24.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady, Maureen O'Sullivan, Franchot Tone, Phillips Holmes, Ted Healy—This went over fine with my audience. Alice Brady OK and Maureen O'Sullivan also very fine. Too much chatter. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Sept. 7.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan, Neil Hamilton—Swell film for the kids and those grown-ups that like Tarzan and similar fare. Metro did a good job on this one and it shows that it was carefully constructed, but any of you guys that run houses within a coupla miles of a hospital, lay off of this. It's the noisiest thing on record. All the mice in the building had their ears plugged with wax to keep Tarzan's call from bursting their ear drums. Running time, 106 minutes. Played Sept. 16-17-18.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—The most satisfactory picture for some time. It has everything for good entertainment. Liked by all—not one kicked. Running time, 93 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Most spectacular box office results in recent months for us. This one sneaked up from behind and showed us how business could be, if pictures were all as cleverly done as "The Thin Man." Laughs are so thick in this one that lots and lots of 'em stayed through two performances to see if they could hear on the second-run what they laughted at on the first. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—A fine picture. Pleased 100 per cent and it drew fair.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore—Very good. Will appeal to all classes as it is so true to life. Average drawing power. Played Aug. 19-20.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger—This is a great production based on the story by Stevenson. It is grand entertainment for the kids, but has little to offer the adults. Should draw a good business due to the fact that everyone had read the story. It is a story of adventure and is clean entertainment. The entire cast play their parts wonderfully. We played two days to much better business than expected. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Sept. 17-18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery, Leo Carrillo, Fay Wray, Stuart Erwin, Joseph Schildkraut, Katherine DeMille—This one has what it takes, and it takes plenty to drag 'em in during a hot spell in August in Oregon. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27-28.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson—One of the finest pictures ever made for a small town. May Robson is marvelous and lives her role. People who saw it liked it but business was below average. We just couldn't get people to see it. Played Aug. 7-8-9.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

Monogram

FIGHTING TEXANS: Rex Bell—Another picture which I have shelved and played to perfect advantage. This picture, with Rex Bell graduated from a haberdashery to Texas oil fields, has good sound and good light. The story is a little different. Everyone praised this one. Running time, 55 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

JANE EYRE: Colin Clive, Virginia Bruce—A very good picture from Monogram. The light and sound surprised me, as it equalled, if not bettered, the product of a good many of the majors. The picture followed the book about as consistently as possible, without making it appear too "heavy" for the audience. Business fair only. Running time, 65 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

JANE EYRE: Colin Clive, Virginia Bruce—Slow, and not the greatest entertainment in the world, but it pleased the average patron. Perfectly clean. Can be played on any except action change. Business good, better than expected.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

Paramount

BOLERO: George Raft—Good program picture. It can't compare with "The Trumpet Blows" for entertainment value for the small town. "Bolero" is slightly draggy but will appeal to women. Not much drawing power. Played Aug. 12-13.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen—A rowdy comedy drama that did fair Saturday business. Played Sept. 7-8.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM:—Jack Haley, Pa-

...icia Ellis, Neil Hamilton, Isabel Jewell—Just a twenty minutes comedy stretched to 64 minutes. Running time, 64 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dell—Cute show. Pretty fair business, but not what was expected. To give credit where it belongs, bum business probably due to carelessness in booking in midweek. Ho hum, live and learn, or somepin. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Sept. 11-12-13.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Good picture. Did very good business here. Played Sept. 12.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—This is absolutely the best musical since "We're Not Dressing." Drew well and pleased all. The Burns-Allen team drew the miners and all their families. Excellent business and came out crying for more. Good for a small town. Don't let it get by. Played Sept. 18.—Gene Michael, Freeburn Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—A darn good nonsensical show. Better than we expected after reading our reports in this box-office barometer as we do weekly, and then some. You know what to expect when the "Gracie" is in a picture, so why kick if it is a bit silly. We, and the folks out here, enjoyed the whole business and it's entertainment and that's what we're selling so I give this a bit of a hand against some of the knocks I've read. Running time, seven reels. Played Aug. 29-30.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross, Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Ann Sothern—Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland decided a few of 'em to take a chance. The photography was fine and the music pleasing; the picture deserved better business than developed. Ross can sing, but needs about ten bucks worth of Freddy March's "it." Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 21-22.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—Hot weather, holiday and lack of big name made this one do a beautiful flop for me, but the picture is quite a lot of all right. The women went for Brisson in a big way, and his next picture should bring better results. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3-4.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh—From the title you would expect a scandal. But it is a comedy of a super-crook by the name of Lang. Thin story, but this Michaels girl has something on the ball if given a better vehicle. It will get by on a popular priced night.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Sir Guy Standing—The Temple person gets bigger and bigger at the B. O. The starved small town people, sick of the introvert junk based on the decadent novels turned out by a generation of fifth rate writers who have lost the meaning of humanity, turn eagerly to the clever unselfconscious child who says something modern novelists lack genius to say. It's a straight clean mop-up. Had to have a little thief in it, however. We must have our crime or bust.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich—A good picture with especial appeal to Dietrich fans. Excellent sound effects. Played Sept. 9-10-11.—A. F. Affelt, Tosco Theatre, Osceola, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers—Very good program picture. There was only one objection on this picture and that was where a tiny baby was being frightened by a tiger and then was placed in an ice-box for safety by its mother. The house burns and it is so horrible thinking of the baby in the fire. Perhaps the producers thought this thrilling but it almost spoiled the show and was so unnecessary to the story. Outside of this, it gave excellent satisfaction and drew well. Played Aug. 21-22-23.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie—A very good picture. Ben Bernie with his "Yousah" and his "Fwogive Me" made a hit with those who dared the box office. Running time, 81 minues.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Clever little show, with lots of nize clothes for the ladies to envy, but business just fair, just fair. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—I've seen quite a few kicks on this one and if you played it on your alleged "best days," I can understand it. We played it on the weekend and it went over in good shape. It seems to satisfy the ones who want action thought it's a rather different setting of the bull ring and it gets the ones who usually lay off the ordinary western or program action picture. OK here. Running time, eight reels. Played Sept. 7-8.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

SEVEN MORE SHOWMEN JOIN CONTRIBUTORS

To the ranks of contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" come seven more showmen who find the reports of other exhibitors of practicable service to them and desire to do their share. The seven are:

Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich.

A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore.

A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich.

Gene Michael, Freeburn Theatre, Freeburn, Ky.

Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore.

Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, New Mexico.

W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—They certainly have a nerve using this title for this picture, for it has no connection whatever with Zane Grey's story. Slim Saturday business on this one. Played Aug. 24-25.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, George Burns, Gracie Allen, Ethel Merman, Leon Errol—Nice clean musical that pleased everyone. Did fair business with second night holding up better than first. Story rather crazy, but that didn't hurt the picture.—E. C. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

WHARF ANGEL: Victor McLaglen—Terrible. Very uninteresting. The whole atmosphere of the show is dull. Personally, I think that Alison Skipworth spoils almost any show she is in. Business very poor. Played Aug. 24-25.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—A trick title and what was supposed to be a successful stage production made into a picture. Don't mean a thing to the average patron. It is based on a murder with hypnotic suggestion. No one in the cast that meant a thing and the picture failed at the box-office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—Consistently fine performance by the entire cast made this an unusually fine drama to my personal taste, but hardly anyone else came to get a taste. Poorest business of the summer for me. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 23-24.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen—Good program picture. Very unusual type of story dealing with hypnotism. John Halliday turns in a fine performance. Business average but it is thrilling and gave satisfaction. Played Sept. 11-12-13.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—Another good Paramount. This picture drew well and pleased all. Our patrons would rather see W. C. Fields than eat their supper. Good business as usual with this comedian. Played Aug. 21.—Gene Michael, Freeburn Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, "Buster" Crabbe, Adrienne Ames—People went wild about this picture here. It is really funny. People were laughing from start to finish. Pleased 100 per cent. Best midweek business since last spring; second night almost as good as the first. Running time, 70 minutes.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

RKO

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Swell comedy of their usual type with the smut left out. Pleased above average crowd. Played Aug. 22-23.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR, THE: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley, Nils Asther, Judith Wood—Kruger goes [illegible] in my house, and this is no exception. His work is always fine. Several favorable comments on Karen Morley after long absence from our screen. Don't let 'em see the outcome of the picture first, if they enjoy figuring things out for themselves. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—A musical of millionaires gone broke. We are glad to see Sidney Fox back again. Heard some comments and some kicks on this one. Not so hot. Running time, 64 minutes.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE: Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins The characters read through their lines as if they were sleep-walking, instead of playing in a murder picture. Just a fair picture for footage if you want just so much film. The first day was average, but Max Baer's barnstorming trip cut the second to nothing.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—At their best. Can't see why anyone would run this down. My patrons ate it up. I had several comments on this one, which is pretty good coming from miners who wanted more, although they had never seen the combination before. A good Thursday show for me. Played Sept. 13.—Gene Michael, Freeburn Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—This is a very good picture that pleased the majority of my patrons. It is a romantic drama of the mother-love theme. If the tragic ending had been changed, this would have added much to the entertainment value of the entire picture. However, my patrons enjoyed it and that is the most important thing. Strictly adult entertainment. Played one day to good business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Sept. 20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding, John Boles—One of the rankest, rawest, most salacious, risque or what-have-you pictures that was ever shown in my theatre. I agree with the many worthy organizations who placed this picture on the condemned list; I have only contempt for that class who take a perverse attitude when attempts are made to rule such from the screen. For those of you who are tied up with your churches or organizations as I am, let me tell you that in this picture a married man who has no reason whatever to prove false to his wife, goes back to his first love and has a baby with her, a single woman. There is also a scarlet, wanton street runner in the picture who gets in wrong and must have $500 to get rid of her wrong, or what-have-you, Nellie. The man in the case is shot in cold blood, thereby giving an innocent, worthy young man an easy way to become a daddy. There are two cold blooded murders; also a highlight where the son is influenced to rob his father's safe and is plainly shown doing it. If you like that kind of a story for your class of patrons, run it; if not, then fight it. My attendance was pitiful; on the second night we had to wait about one hour past the opening time until several sauntered in. Paid a big rental for it and did not gross half on both nights. The acting was superb and none of those who saw it walked out. Personally, I thought it was a fine production but it certainly belongs on the condemned list and will not bring to the theatre that class of decent people which is necessary for success in any small town. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 17-18.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Boris Karloff—I was badly disappointed in this picture. My patrons likewise. The business was about the average, but would not have been this good but for the advertising. Sorry I played this.—Gene Michael, Freeburn Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Small town patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—A good program picture. —B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason, Bruce Cabot, Gertrude Michael, Regis Toomey, Jackie Searle—A worthy successor to the "Penguin Pool Murder," and it brought us pretty darn good business. Print we had was so dark that the characters spoke from a dark screen most of the time, with just a suggestion of movement, if you watched closely. That may be a new thought for some producer—seven or eight reels of dialogue, with very reasonably priced setting, one dark room. (We won't play it.). Running time, 71 minutes. Played September 14-15.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Somebody ought to give Bette Davis a medal for her work and bravery in playing her role. A truly fine picture for those who can think, but it leaves the average shop-girl cold. Opened to good Sunday business but fell off badly next two days. But I don't care; I'm proud to have run it.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—

Here's an old one. Picked up and traded with RKO for one of those new ones that don't mean a thing, yet this hokum western did better than average weekend business. We got a good print and, to our notion, it's worth a thought to any exhibitor who can use westerns and hasn't used these, to talk to RKO and work them in place of something you don't want. RKO in Dallas have been a fine bunch to do business with. We like them. Running time, six reels.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—This did a fair Sunday business. The boys in the gallery razzed it but the women were all for it. Played Sept. 23-24.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne—An effective blend of horse opera and grand opera. Did a fair Saturday business and pleased the majority. Played Sept. 21-22.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster, Wm. Gargan, Marian Nixon—Oy—and again—Oy. Dear Mr. RKO: Don' Never doo that. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 25.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

THIS MAN IS MINE: Irene Dunne, Ralph Bellamy—No good for small towns. No business and the picture wasn't entertaining. Just another magazine story of divorces and reunions, which does not even have a new slant. Played Sept. 20.—Gene Michael, Freeburn Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHERE SINNERS MEET: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—It's too bad when a producer completes a picture, sees that it is terrible, and still passes it on to exhibitors to fill the contract's quota. That's just the kind of business we enjoyed also. There are still many who believe that the exhibitor produces pictures and tell him what they think about his "latest." Running time, 72 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

United Artists

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss—Was afraid that this picture would not draw and was very much surprised. Business was above average. Many thought that it was the best picture that they had ever seen. Others didn't care for it at all. Even so, you couldn't keep from saying that it was a wonderful picture.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss—Truly a great picture but it is equally true that its appeal in the small town is restricted to your "class" patronage exclusively. One of those pictures that is well worth the while of the theatre to run but you don't get much in the way of cash for the running. Running time, ten reels. Played Sept. 9-11.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

I COVER THE WATERFRONT: Claudette Colbert—An excellent production. Business average.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

I COVER THE WATERFRONT: Claudette Colbert, Ben Lyon, Ernest Torrence—Good picture; played late to fair returns.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie—Our crowd liked this one. Played Sept. 8-9.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante—This was a riot. It pleased 100 per cent. Jimmy Durante actually does his stuff in a big way and they liked it.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SAMARANG: Native cast—Used this along with the "Dionne Quintiuplets" and had the largest crowd in weeks on our midweek bargain night. It was well received.—Marion F. Bodell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

AFFAIRS OF A GENTLEMAN: Paul Lukas, Leila Hyams—Used on double feature bill and it proved the weakest in three months. Poor story and too much dialogue. Just fair. Running time, 59 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—The usual good mystery with Karloff doing good work. This on a double program gave us average business. Running time, 74 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff—The only kick in this thriller is the feeling of relief when it's over. Planty of unfavorable comments. Played Sept. 6-7-8. Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff—Reports on this production was generally unfavorable so I did not expect much favorable reaction to it. However, it went over very well and was good enough for the average picture fan. Played Sept. 15.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—Unusual story angle, well sprinkled with comedy. Our audiences grinned all the way through it, and laughed at the right places, a good sign. Morris or Nixon is a better draw than I thought, because business was a little to the good side.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

GLAMOUR: Paul Lukas, Constance Cummings—Universal rates this a special but the only thing special about it was the rental. It's a well made picture with a poor title and no box-office draw. It did a slim midweek business.—Played Sept. 25-26.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HUMAN SIDE, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon—Good family picture with lots of audience appeal. Plenty of laughs and well told story. Our patrons liked it. Not much drawing power, unfortunately. Business just average.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—Where, oh, where has Universal been this past season. This is the only picture released by them this season which has clicked in this town. "Half A Sinner" is a perfect small town picture. Afraid of the title I shelved it. Then came the dawn. I played it on Friday and Saturday and early in the evening of Saturday the SRO flag was sailing at high mast. Running time, 78 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Roger Pryor, Gloria Stuart—Nice little comedy with music. Slim Sunday business. Played Aug. 26-27.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Tracy has slipped a bit for us, and Stuart still doesn't mean any wakeful moments to the local swains, so in spite of the fact that we considered it a pretty fair piece of work, we are glad it was played on our midnight show. Running time, 79 minutes.—Played September 15th.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

LET'S BE RITZY: Lew Ayres, Patricia Ellis—Pleasing little comedy drama. Did fair Sunday business. Played Sept. 16-17.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE CAPTIVE, THE: Nils Asther, Gloria Stuart—This is a good program picture that pleased our patrons. It is something different from the usual run of pictures. It is melodrama of the hypnotic variety, but is lacking in action and therefore should appeal to the ladies. The cast offers no outstanding names, but they play their parts very well. Played one day to only average business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played September 19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard—I don't like to knock a picture but here is one that was absolutely no good for our town. These English plays are poison for me. Played Sept. 15-16.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—Pleasing little picture that played to average business. Played Sept. 10-12.—Hollis Draw, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

S.O.S. ICEBERG: Rod LaRocque—There were only a few who liked this picture. Very poor business. Played Aug. 28-29.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNCERTAIN LADY: Genevieve Tobin, Edward Everett Horton—The plot is good, but sound on our print was away off. In order for one to really appreciate "Uncertain Lady," the picture should be seen at least twice. Business mediocre. Running time, 65 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

Warner

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell—Sure, I know it's old, but we missed it last year when it really fitted in, ran it way late and it still registers. If you want to play a regular goofy Hollywood football picture that they'll all like, well, here it is. I mean by the "goofy Holywood" crack that a football man will get his usual snicker up his sleeve on the production part of it, but oh boy, the movie fans can "take it" so it's still a good picture for your school kids. Running time, seven reels. Played Sept. 12-13.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

CAPTURED: Leslie Howard—Terrible. One of the most depressing pictures we have ever run. We had lots of walkouts and complaints on this one. Played Sept. 7-8.—Mr. & Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck, Pat O'Brien, Joel McCrea—Barbara Stanwyck's beauty, sincerity and attractiveness have caused us to count upon her pictures for good business, and so far we've never been disappointed. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 29-30.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Neighborhood patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy, Rochelle Hudson, Patricia Ellis, Guy Kibbee—A good musical comedy with a splendid cast, good music and a finale tap dance which is extraordinary. Should please most everybody.—J. C. Dart, Dante Theatre, Dante, Virginia. General patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Good. How that boy LeRoy can dance.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HEAT LIGHTNING: Aline MacMahon—A thoroughly unpleasant story with no likeable characters in it. Aline MacMahon is a capable actress but this thing doesn't give her a chance to earn star rating. The picture has some unnecessary hot spots in it. It did poor midweek business here. Played Sept. 18-19.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—A tuneful, rollicking story of the navy, with the ocean for a stage, the fleet for a setting and the Navy for a cast. Nothing but good clean comedy from start to finish. Education, for many from our Kansas Plains have never seen a ship. Just an all-round fine picture that pleased everyone. Was rained out Sunday night, but that was no fault of the picture. You can't advertise this one too highly. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—A very good comedy with an excellent cast of Warner comical players turning in excellent performances.—J. C. Dart, Dante Theatre, Dante, Virginia. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

HOLLYWOOD BABES: Scrappy Cartoon—Pleased the crowd, but was below standard. Running time, seven minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STABLE MATES: Broadway Comedies Series—More real belly laughs on this than any two-reeler for months. Running time, 20 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TEN BABY FINGERS: Broadway Brevities—Another good comedy from this old-time team. It's a treat to hear our audience laugh at a comedy for a change. Running time, 20 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Educational

GOING SPANISH: Leah Ray—This is a musical that didn't get around to the music. One short shot of somebody's Argentine band (I've forgotten whose it was) that should have been allowed to finish out the time so that there would be some entertainment in the thing. 'Twas the nertz. Running time, 20 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

LAST DOGIE, THE: Song Hit Stories—Put this on a weekend in a small town and they'll talk about it. Put it anywhere in a western town like ours and they'll do the same. Anybody using Fox and not using these is passing one up.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

MICE IN COUNCIL: Terry-Toons Series—Fair cartoon. Terry-Toons are much better than last year's efforts. Running time, 6 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

ROMANTIC JOURNEYS: Another single reel series from Fox that has been greatly appreciated in our town. Sorry they are cutting them out. Once or twice we had trouble with the cinemacolor prints, but if the print was good it was a pleasure to us and our audience to show them. Running time, 1 reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

TIME ON THEIR HANDS: Song Hit Stories—A bright spot in one reel production. Running time, one reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

Fox

ADVENTURES OF THE NEWSREEL CAMERAMAN: These subjects have been uniformly fine. Some of them are a bit too realistic for sensitive folks, but they are "on the spot" shots and fine stuff. Running time, 10 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

ADVENTURES OF NEWSREEL CAMERAMEN: I don't know of a single reel series that has topped this one for excellence, sustained high quality of production and audience interest. Those may be strong words, but, regardless of subject matter, these reels are audience pleasers anywhere you put them. Each and every one is fine. Running time, one reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

GEM OF THE SEA: Magic Carpet Series—Short showing life in the Emerald Isle like a travelogue and educational picture. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MARCHING WITH SCIENCE: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman Series—Very interesting short showing the latest inventions and developments of scientists. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

BENNY FROM PANAMA: Eddie Foy, Jr., Jeannette Loff—They laughed; that's all that's necessary, but I'm still wondering why. Running time, 20 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

BIG IDEA, THE: Musical Revue—Just two reels of wasted time and money. Running time, 18 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GLIMPSES OF ERIN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This is a very interesting one-reeler showing many scenes of interest in the city of Dublin. These one-reelers are very educational and should please all patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GLIMPSES OF ERIN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This series is well liked and as a whole very interesting.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MAID IN HOLLYWOOD: Todd-Kelly—A very good two-reel comedy. Got a lot of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

REDUCING CREME: Willie Whopper—A very good cartoon comedy and one of the best of this series. This series of cartoons is not as good as the Flip series of last year and is not as popular. Very good entertainment. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SOUP AND FISH: Todd-Kelly—This fairly good entertainment and about the usual from this team. It seems that Metro cannot make a good two-reel comedy this season. Too bad they have lost out on the shorts, but then they do have good features. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

FLYING BODIES: Grantland Rice Sportlights—This is a peach. Some slow motion shots that are poetry in motion. Tumbling and skiing and surf riding. Running time, 10 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

GOLD NUGGETS: Walter Catlett—This is one of the best two-reelers from Paramount this season. It is of the slapstick variety and will keep your patrons laughing throughout the entire running time. The public still likes slapstick comedies, so let's give them what they want. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 12—Interesting. Shows the Paramount reception to the exhibitors at the MPTOA meeting in Hollywood. Will interest the patrons as well as the exhibitors.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LET'S ALL SING LIKE BIRDIES SING: Screen Song Series—A very good one-reeler with a good cartoon comedy and some good music. Our audience liked this type of entertainment and they don't hesitate to let you know when they like something. Let's have more of this type of shorts. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LET'S YOU AND HIM FIGHT: Popeye the Sailor—The best short subject on the market. Has it over Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies. Running time, 9 minutes.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

MADHOUSE MOVIES NO. 1: Paramount Varieties—This was especially pleasing to our audience. Babe Ruth hitting the ball clear around the globe; Roy Atwell in a short broadcast; a Mae West scene; a very clever short subject. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa. Above average patronage.

MAKING THE ROUNDS: Pallette-Catlett—Fair comedy; not as good as some we have had from Paramount this year. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 1 (New Series)—A beautiful one-reel subject showing song makers of the nation; flowers of California; and what is called "The Windjammer." Running time, 10 minutes.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa. Above average patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 12—This is only fair entertainment and personally I like this type of one-reelers for a change, but my patrons walk out on them. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS No. 5—Shows oldtime stars, such as Ruth Roland. Lillian Gish, Jack Pickford and others, at their work on the screen in the good old silent days. The present Prince of Wales is also seen, but when he wore rompers. Very good. Running time, 9 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

SPRINGBOARD CHAMPIONS: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—Out patrons like this line of short subjects almost as well as the regular news issue. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa. Above average patronage.

SUPERSTITION OF THE BLACK CAT: Paramount Varieties—Not so hot, just a filler. Running time, 11 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

RKO

NO MORE WEST: Bert Lahr—Terrible. This chap from Broadway with his horselaugh or what it is called (it is hard to identify just what noise he makes) is very unfunny. They can bury him deep down and no one will miss him. Never have we had anything that approached it for general no-goodness.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ODOR IN THE COURT: Clark and McCullough—Court trial burlesqued. Clark and McCullough are better on Saturday or with anything but the class programs. Too rough and silly for women. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

OLD MAID'S MISTAKE, THE: Walter Catlett—Well, it's some one's mistake, all right, and if an old maid directed it, it is no doubt her mistake. I certainly made a big mistake when I booked. Just a waste of film. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 6: Except for the swimming and diving 200 feet at the end, this is the worst issue of Pathe Review I ever ran. Just old silent clips assembled and dull as possible. Running time, 11 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

PATHE NEWS NO. 13: A good news. An improvement in the Pathe News, every scene interesting.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SENTINEL LOUIE: King Cartoon—Don't book these cartoons as they are the poorest I have run in the cartoon line for some time. Nothing to them. Save your running time and leave them out. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

TRAILING ALONG: Gribbon-Kennedy—Tom Kennedy evidently trying to take over Edgar Kennedy's "Average Man" series with poor success. Not so hot. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

Universal

BORN APRIL FIRST: Sterling Holloway—Good comedy that kept the customers amused. Running time, 20 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CEILING WHACKS: Henry Armetta—Fair comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS: These things have the right title. Personally, I don't think anything of them. Running time, 10 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.

GOOD TIME HENRY: Henry Armetta—'S good. They laughed like the dickens. Running time, 20 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

HITS OF TODAY: Mentone No. 12—Dandy bunch of vaudefilm acts in two reels. Just what our people prefer instead of two-reel comedies. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

WHERE'S ELMER? Vincent Barnett—His comedies are too dumb and just a little too much slapstick. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

WOLF, WOLF: Oswald Cartoon—Very good cartoon. The old wolf story well done. Running time, eight minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

GULLIVER MICKEY: Mickey Mouse—Clever, but not quite up to par with the others. Running time, 8 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

Vitaphone

HOW DO I KNOW IT'S SUNDAY: Merrie Melodies Series—This is one of the best cartoons of the year. If all of the cartoons were as good as this one, there would be no kick about them. We received many comments on this, but we always do on any Vitaphone product. Let's have more of these, Vitaphone. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

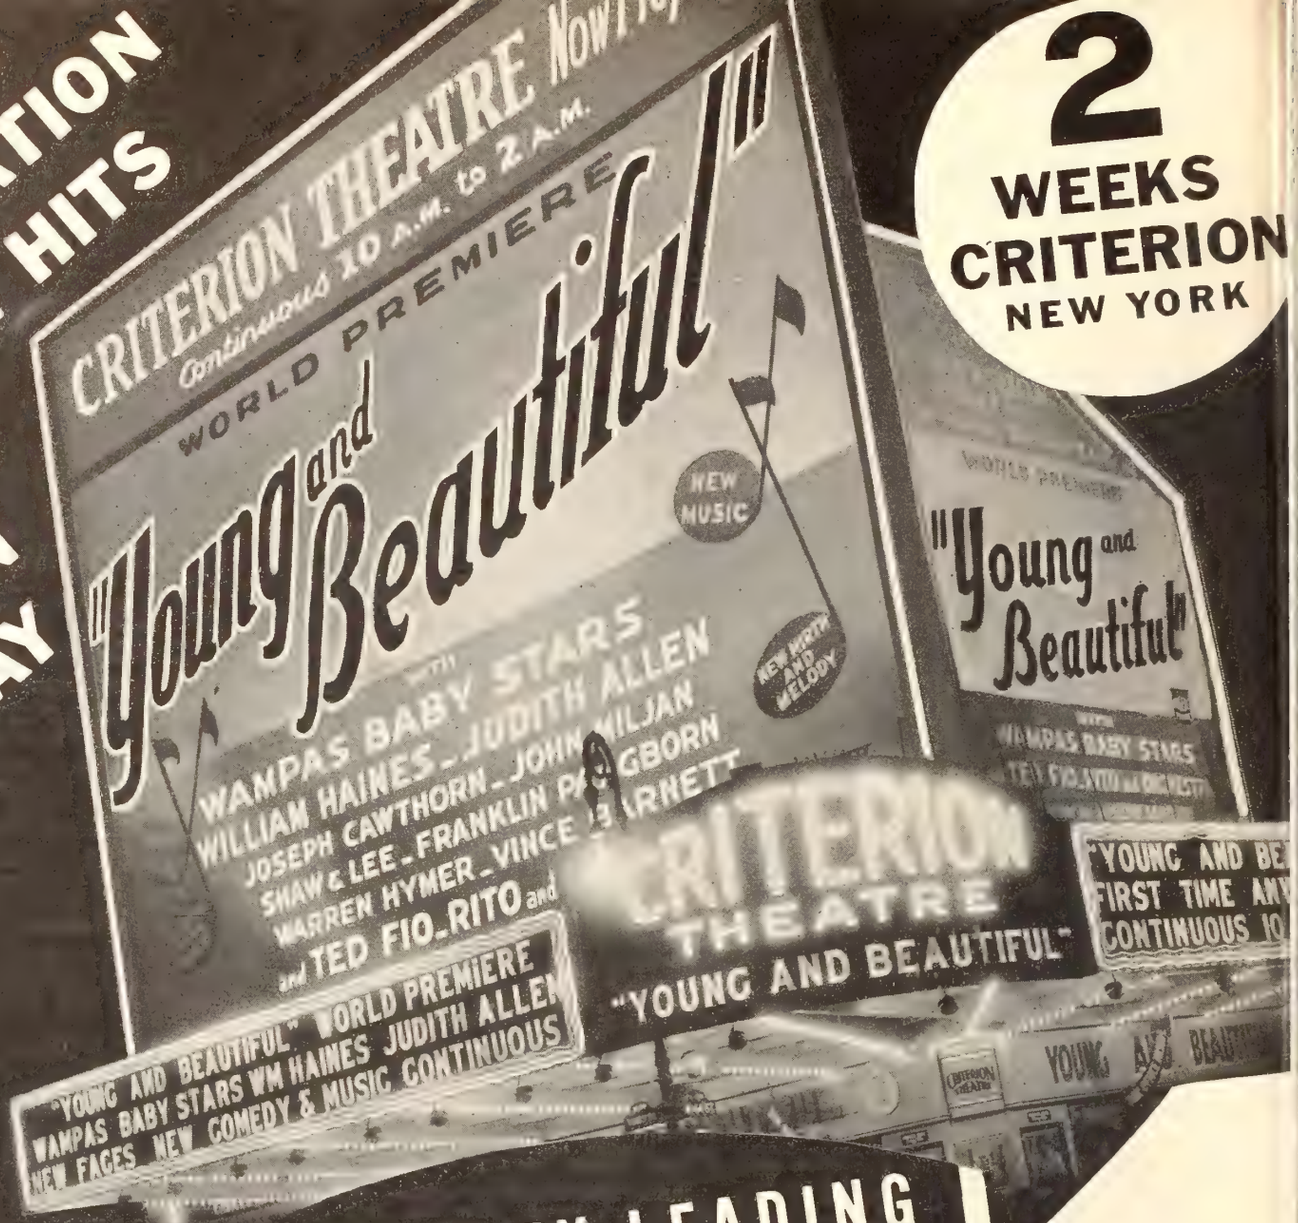
MASKS AND MEMORIES: Lillian Roth—This is one of the special three-reelers from Vitaphone and not as good as most of the two-reelers. However, it will please any audience. Plenty of music and Miss Roth sings a few songs, but the costumes do not go over well here. Running time, 30 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MOROCCO NIGHTS: Fuzzy Knight—One of the numerous less entertaining issues. Running time, 20 minutes.—Kent C. Hartung, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—Without a question, this is the best serial since the advent of sound. The kids ate it up, and I didn't see any adults leave the house.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich.



Universal

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—Unusually good western serial. Production is 'way above the average and the Buck Jones name means plenty, of course, out our way. Sound seems to be a bit haywire in some parts, but they like the serial and this one and "Vanishing Shadow" have both been worthwhile. Running time, two reels.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Tex. Small town patronage.

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslaw Stevens—Mystery serial with a few scientific scares but the mechanical man doesn't do anything except appear on the title till the last episode. Didn't draw for us like a Western serial will. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

WE TAKE EXCEPTION

Following the recent discussion of the fan magazine tieup between managers and publishers as suggested originally by Round Tabler Charley Bassin, the McFadden Publications requested and obtained permission to reproduce some of the opinions of the members published in these pages.

Immediately the publisher's promotion department burst forth with a brightly colored mailing piece to their distributors to which was attached copies of the reprints, but however only those favorable to the discussed cooperation. Referring to the "stuffers," the following copy was used:

> "The 'Motion Picture Herald' has run an open discussion about tieups with movie magazines. They urge the theatre owners to work with magazines like "....." Read the reprints, courtesy of the Motion Picture Herald, on the right—they're interesting and helpful."

Having been an advertising man "ourselves," we are in sympathy with the enthusiasm of the McFaddenites in spreading the word of our supposed endorsement. But we must caution the gentlemen against the practice of using phraseology conducive to misunderstanding.

For the information of our readers and, of course, the McFadden promotion department, we did not "urge" theatremen to work with that or any other publisher's magazines.

In fact, that for some weeks now they have been getting special attentions from the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, including restrictive control of still photographs in Hollywood, indicates there is evidence that the activities of the fan magazines as a whole are not entirely an unalloyed boon to the interests of the motion picture.

CODE REVISION NEEDED

So far as it concerns the manager, the motion picture code has made working conditions worse instead of better. Thus we are shedding few tears over the retirement of General Hugh Johnson from the job of NRA headman.

The code may have aided in correcting some of the industry's bad practices, but in providing for the manager's hours and wages, left that important figure sitting way out at the end of the limb. For this lack of consideration, the General as overseer of the motion picture code obviously is to blame.

Perhaps the new setup of the NRA means a fair shake for the manager, for as it now stands the code gives him little protection against employers who chisel and evade.

FOR BETTER JOBS

The Quigley Publications survey of the National Housing Act as applies to theatres reveals much more than the numerous ways in which the available millions may be utilized. Significant is the following, quoted from the survey's pages:

"Hundreds of theatres which were closed for lack of capital for alterations and repairs are presented with this opportunity of opening their doors again. . . ."

In short, this means that as the dark houses reopen, not only will unemployed managers and assistants be put back on payrolls but theatremen now working will have more opportunities for bigger and better jobs.

For this reason, if for no other, Round Tablers should bend every effort to convince their employers of the necessity for immediate action in taking advantage of this timely federal assistance.

According to testimony at a recent Federal Trade Commission in Washington, an ex-employe for one of the utilities companies in question revealed that those newspapers "commenting unfavorably" on the activities of the power companies were not given any advertising. Newspaper sentiment originally three-to-one against the utilities people, stated the witness, eventually switched to even money.

THE SCREEN'S FUNCTION

The possibilities of scholastic cooperation receive further recognition with the announcement of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's arrangement with the National Council of Teachers of English, whereby the latter organization is releasing among high school students a national study guide on "Treasure Island."

The desire to develop nationwide appreciation of motion pictures by means of these guides is a worthy one. Where local participation is thorough and sincere, the prestige of the screen must necessarily be enhanced.

However, the technical dissection of so glamorous a story should be undertaken with a great deal of care. To be kept in mind is that, after everything is said and done, the primary function of the motion picture is still to entertain.

McManus and Bernfield Plug "Monte Cristo"

That fast-stepping team of McManus and Bernfield, manager and U. A. publicist respectively at Loew's Midland Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., tied in with Standard Brands on "Count of Monte Cristo" for a plug on all Standard delivery trucks, distribution of window cards and, with every can of coffee, a booklet with theatre copy entitled "400 Famous Dates in History."

Exploit Buck Jones' Serial With Children's Parade

Tieup with local market which sponsored a Buck Jones Adventure Club and a parade of boys and girls to the theatre were among the angles put on by Manager M. D. Brazee and his assistant, J. J. Roche, to exploit the opening chapter of Universal's "Red Rider" serial at the Highland Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

Buck Jones "Red Rider" Paraders at Theatre

The marchers all wore the Buck Jones hat and mask accessories, supplied by the market in return for credit cards in lobby and publicity in house program. Weeks ahead heralds were distributed at theatres and market giving details of the parade in which large banners (see photo) were carried by the children. Duke Hickey, Universal exploiteer, assisted.

Shields Puts On Co-op Ad For "Treasure Island"

A cooperative page ad was put over by Jack Shields, Capitol Theatre, Ansonia, Conn., for his "Treasure Island" date whereby keys were given to each participating merchant for distribution with purchases made. Tag to which key was attached bore copy to effect that if it opened the treasure chest located in lobby, lucky persons would receive prizes contributed by merchants and passes to "Chained," the next attraction. In that way Jack got in a plug.

LARSON BETS TOWN ON WORLD SERIES

Before last year's World Series, Frank Larson, Paramount, Idaho Falls, Idaho, for an exploitation stunt, picked the Washington Senators to win, and bet the town a Free Midnite Show that he had made the right choice.

He lost, but the resultant publicity encourages Frank to pull the gag this year on some picture that will be playing right after the series ends. Sounds like a smart idea for a space-grabber, and is passed along for the consideration of series-minded members.

Japanese Showmen Promote Car Bally

Under the supervision of Siegfried F. Lindstrom, Far Eastern General Manager for RKO Export Corp., a campaign employing many modern American exploitation ideas was put on for the premiere of "Wild Cargo" at the Schochikuza theatre in Osaka, Japan.

Aided by his Japanese associates, Messrs. Ohuo, Nishimoto, Usuki, Takeshita and Moriyama, Lindstrom promoted a five car motor caravan carrying replicas of the various animals in the picture. The cars were decorated with jungle effects (see photo) and the itinerary included visits to neighboring cities ahead of the opening. The climax of the procession was the journey through the streets of Osaka to the theatre, crowds trailing the caravan throughout its trip. Lobby displays and decoration in the theatre were in keeping, an extensive billboard campaign put on throughout the entire area and tieups made with leading department stores were among the other ideas well planned and skilfully executed.

Toups and Bloch Effect Ace "Treasure" Campaign

To stimulate interest in a preview on "Treasure Island" held the night before the regular opening, Manager Rodney D. Toups and publicity head Moise Bloch, State, New Orleans, La., started their campaign ten days ahead. Local leaders were invited and, during the entire day before the preview, a decorated sound truck further plugged the event. Featured in the afternoon was a special radio program, all this preparation leading up to a fireworks display that took place just before the preview.

On opening day, a parade of magazine carriers was arranged the boys wearing pirate hats and carrying large banners. An orphans' party with busses contributed by a local transportation company was another publicity outstander, candy also being promoted for the event with the newspapers breaking three-column cuts and stories on the event.

Other exploitation that stood out was an atmospheric "treasure chest" lobby, distribution of imprinted menus and story book heralds, a tieup with 350 drug stores on the endorsement of the picture in Parents' magazine, giveaways on the streets of candy coins and pirate hats for children and a host of other click ideas which brought satisfactory returns.

Waring-Ford Tieup Aids Advance Drive

Vigorous and complete was the advance drive put on by Manager Frank Steffy and Publicist Don Alexander for the personal appearance of Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians at the State, Minneapolis, Minn. With the city under martial law due to the truck drivers' strike, the engagement through the efforts of these showmen nevertheless was reported to have established a new all-time record for grosses at that house, which was recorded by the daily papers in page one stories.

The publicity started two weeks ahead with advance cuts and stories breaking daily, leading up to the actual arrival of Waring and his band. Due to the strike, transportation was limited, thus allowing unusual opportunities for newspaper breaks showing the bandsmen and crew holding their own baggage and instruments.

Excellent cooperation was extended by the Ford agencies, local sponsors of the national Ford broadcast featuring the band. The dealers took a series of 1,000-line ads breaking the opening day, much of the space given over to the date at the theatre.

Auto Parade Features Welcome

Officials of the Ford branches and every dealer in both Minneapolis and St. Paul were at the station to meet the star escorting him to the hotel with a large parade of bannered new models headed by a sound truck (see photo) with a special roadster for Waring on the sides of which his name was lettered.

Railroad and bus excursion rates were also arranged, notices being carried in all stations within 250 miles. A further tiein with the auto dealers was the display in the orchestra pit of a new roadster painted in gold, the car being raised to stage level at each show, showing a goodlooking girl in the driver's seat, the wheels turning and color wheel playing upon this to create animation.

THE GOVERNOR PRESENTS

IN the presence of many high ranking New Jersey State officials, at the State House, Trenton, Governor A. Harry Moore, on Thursday, Sept. 27, presented the Quigley Award for August to Ed M. Hart, City Manager, Reade Theatres, Plainfield. Included among the guests were (left to right) Freeholder Harrigan, Senator Loizeaux, J. G. Carty, Mrs. Barlow, Commander Mulroy, the Governor, Assemblyman Bowers, Mr. Hart, General Higgins, Secretary of State Mathis and General Barlow. Complete story of presentation is carried in the news section of this issue on page 24.

Special Booklet Strip Plugs "Cristo" at Rivoli

The special booklet strips gotten out by United Artists on "Count of Monte Cristo" were used extensively for the campaign at the New York Rivoli. Through a tieup with the Board of Education, these were distributed in history and English classes in schools throughout the city and on a hookup with Postal Telegraph, the booklets were given out by messenger boys.

Radio cooperation was obtained from bandman Abe Lyman, who featured a 30-minute "Cristo" broadcast over a leading New York station a few days ahead. Special throwaways at the theatre brought attention to the air program.

Also helpful was the arrangement made with the French newspaper L'Amerique, which devoted a number of pages to a special Alexander Dumas section illustrated with scene cuts from the picture. Many book displays were arranged and co-op ads promoted from leading department stores and specialty shops.

The school tieup on this campaign is a further indication that a lot of attention is being paid this season to cooperation with local educators on those pictures lending themselves to student exploitation.

Orlove Promotes Programs And Merchant Co-op Page

For his "Tarzan and his Mate" date, Louie Orlove promoted a druggist in his town for several thousand three by six attractively colored programs. Druggists' ad on back page. Programs were distributed in exclusive suburb and entire cost to Louie was $3 for the "Tarzan" mat.

On "Stand Up and Cheer," Orlove promoted a co-op page of merchants' ads plugging improved conditions, better times, etc.

Lafayette Details Plans of Successful Animations

La Temple head is four feet and hand and arm on separate piece of compo are nailed to strip with bolt to allow swinging movement.

"River" Preview Arranged By Barutio and Goldberg

Steve Barutio, manager, and Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia zone and publicity manager, put on a special preview of "One More River" at the Boyd Theatre in Philadelphia for members of literary societies and public and private libraries. Following pressbook suggestion a letter was sent to the city's lawyers advising them the picture contained an excellent courtroom scene and one that shouldn't be missed. Cards were inserted in letter boxes, fan magazine tieup netted posting of special 14x 22 cars on newsstands, store windows and bannering of delivery trucks.

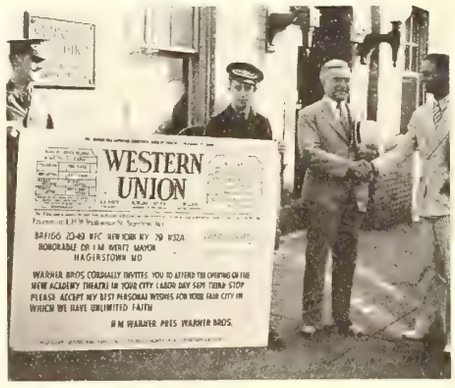
DeVilbiss Sponsors Peace Petition to President

Manager Temple DeVilbiss, Kiva, Greeley, Col., who landed the first prize in Columbia's recent exploitation contest on "No Greater Glory," based his campaign on an anti-war drive, attracting out of the ordinary attention by barring attendance to all under 16 years of age. DeVilbiss took large ads to explain this, stating that the moral of the picture would not be understandable to children.

A specially bound petition to President Roosevelt, asking for universal peace, was signed by many leading citizens and forwarded to Washington. Much publicity broke on this stunt, and at an assembly at a local college the petition and the film were discussed, the latter recommended by the college president.



The same idea was carried out to interest older high school students, and cooperation of local ministers was obtained who encouraged their congregations to sign the petition and also to attend the picture. All civic clubs, fraternal organizations, American Legion, etc., were enlisted in the drive.

Celebrates Anniversary With Old Time Movies

The Grand-Florissant Theatre in St. Louis, Mo., celebrated its fifteenth anniversary recently and Norval E. Packwood, manager, got out a sixteen-page souvenir program in cooperation with neighborhood merchants.

One of the highlights of his campaign was an old time movie show presented in all its glory. Slides reading "ladies remove your hats" and "just a moment while the operator monkeys with the film," etc., were used, and much merriment was caused by the showing of "The Great Train Robbery." Packwood reports the "old time" movies ran forty minutes and were very well received.

Pollock's Radio Contest Seeks Boy With Cooper Voice

Different slant on the usual radio dramatization was worked by Les Pollock, for the "Treasure Island" date at Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., whereby young lads who thought they had voices similar to Jackie Cooper's were invited to try out for the Cooper part in the broadcast of the picture put on by local cast.

Also in character was Pollock's town crier bally, man in costume with lantern and scroll stopping at various corners and making his pitch in the manner of the old time news announcer. Tiein with local German paper landed another contest on the number and name of all pictures in which young Cooper had appeared.

Baker made big cake in form of treasure chest, with pirate-costumed girls (see photo) in lobby sampling the confection. Baker trucks carried banners, and windows displayed cutouts of Beery and Cooper. Orphan Newsboys in costume distributing scare head tabs shouting "Pirates Invade Rochester," was another excitement-stirrer.

Harman Uses Sled Bally To Plug "Navy" Date

For the reopening of the Shubert-Rialto, St. Louis, Mo., with "Here Comes the Navy," Harry Harman used a sled on rollers (see photo) that toured towns ten days prior. Sled was bedecked with sleigh bells and sign reading "Take a street car, a bus or even a sleigh, but don't miss, etc." Driver dressed as sailor distributed lifesavers in imprinted paper envelopes.

Two battalions of naval reserves, with sled bally leading, paraded down to theatre with police escort, reserves attending show as guests. Harman also put over cigarette and telegraph tieups as well as others arranged on this picture.

Celebrates 20th Anniversary

A. S. Kolstad, Rialto Theatre, Hood River, Ore., recently celebrated his twentieth anniversary in show business at the same stand and to commemorate the occasion got out special heralds plugging his current and coming attractions. Center of herald showed sound truck with copy to effect that patrons didn't need one of those to find out where the best attractions were to be found.

Sowar Plants Cutout Train in Depot

Tying in with local railroad agent, Leonard Sowar, Strand Theatre, Muncie, Ind., for his "Murder in the Private Car" date planted a compo board train cutout with theatre copy in railway station. Agent also permitted placing circus heralds made up to imitate excursion bills in depot and bus stations.

To a selected group Western Union sent out what they call their "pink" messages, printed on pink paper and inserted in same colored envelopes. Telegrams bore personal messages from Ruggles and Merkel on picture. Another gag Sower used was to pick ten auto license numbers at random, placing them on a board under his marquee. Persons identifying their car numbers received house courtesies.

LET THESE SERVICES HELP YOU REMODEL

MAINTENANCE TABS: This is one of the most valued departments in Better Theatres, since it deals with those details of physical operation confronting the theatre owner and manager every day. Conducted as a service by J. T. Knight, Jr., in conjunction with his regular feature articles on broader aspects of maintenance and operation, Maintenance Tabs cheerfully offers expert counsel in all problems concerning the physical functions of the theatre, and these are inevitably involved in many remodeling plans—particularly those carried out with a Federal Housing loan. Are you going to improve the ventilation of your theatre? Add cooling equipment? Install new plumbing? Make rearrangements for new apparatus? Mr. Knight will be glad to help you in all such matters. Merely write Better Theatres, giving full details concerning conditions affecting your problem, and your inquiry will be turned over to Mr. Knight for his immediate attention and an early answer.

J. T. Knight, Jr., is acknowledged to be one of America's leading building maintenance and operating engineers, and nearly fifteen years of his experience has been in the motion picture theatre field. He is an accredited engineer in mechanics, electricity and air conditioning, and has been in charge of all types and classes of theatres in every phase of their physical operation. Earlier he was also a theatre manager.

PLANNING THE THEATRE: This is an architectural service which has been used by hundreds of exhibitors and contractors—even by architects—in many parts of the world. It has been conducted for a number of years as a department in Better Theatres for the sole purpose of giving reliable, honest professional advice to those planning to build or to remodel motion picture theatres. The architect in charge—Peter M. Hulsken—is a member of the American Institute of Architects and a specialist in designing and constructing theatres. He is particularly well fitted to understand the problems met in planning or remodeling a theatre at the lowest possible cost because of his extensive experience in small communities. Mr. Hulsken will be happy to help you plan the remodeling you wish to undertake with a Federal Housing loan. Merely write Better Theatres. Only your initials will be used to identify Mr. Hulsken's reply appearing in the following issue.

Peter M. Hulsken studied Architecture in Amsterdam and Paris. He has been practicing his profession in the United States, however, for many years, during which time he has been associated with leading architectural firms in New York and Chicago. Since 1909 he has maintained his own office. Although the architect of many structures of varied purposes, he has specialized in theatre design.

'WE ARE BELIEVERS IN RADIO BUT—'

—J. M. SCHOEPPEL, MANAGER, MIDWEST THEATRE, OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

SAYS AIR ADVERTISING IS SUPPLEMENTARY

We of the Midwest theatre are confirmed believers in radio advertising—but as a supplementary medium only. We cannot go as far as to agree with Round Tablers who give the ether medium full credit for exceptional box office grosses.

In my opinion, radio programs and announcements are merely one form of supplementary advertising, perhaps only secondary in relation to other items of a well planned campaign.

Let me clarify this statement by saying that from my experience in operating deluxe theatres, I would list newspaper display advertising as the cornerstone of every campaign; with trailers, lobby and front displays coming in for major consideration. Then—radio.

I readily agree that radio messages reach many, many persons who probably never see a newspaper, herald or screen trailer, but it is my opinion that a person in this state of isolation is really not a very likely theatre prospect.

However, radio can be and IS the strongest form of institutional and reminder advertising. And for that reason, I seldom entirely omit it from the weekly budget.

The chief objection to radio selling of theatre attractions is its visual shortcomings. For we all know that glamour, the mightiest come-on in show business, cannot be transmitted through a microphone as well as through any medium that might be observed by means of the eye.

For this reason I would rate an ordinary newspaper illustration above the appeal of any ordinary radio program when considered as a selling medium. And when colorful heralds, brilliant lobby displays and elaborate fronts are considered, there is very little to compare with them in actual money-getting power.

Favors Spot Announcements

But after taking all this space apparently to depreciate the use of radio, permit me to say in defense of it that I believe any campaign prepared without important consideration given air announcements should be the exception. Announcements, at the dinner hour, particularly sandwiched in between big chain features, naming the attraction, star and theatre, are of inestimable value as a reminder—on the presumption that the desire to witness the attraction has been previously instilled in the listener by the effective use of the other mediums.

So much for the announcements. The other methods—"Hollywood Reporters," electrical transcriptions of various natures, studio dramatizations, flesh talent appearances, etc., are great merely as institutional promotions. And they are even better when the expense has been saddled on some local business or commercial concern.

In short, radio, like any other form of advertising is good in its place and should be utilized by all first-run theatre managers where the budget permits. For, after all, we in straight picture-policy houses, particularly, are selling only a "shadow upon the screen," in contrast to the merchant whose goods may be inspected and handled.

The big job of the theatre manager today, as always, is to bring his message most forcefully, most consistently, most attractively, and at least expense to the greatest number of prospective customers. And radio, in its proper relation to the remainder of the campaign, can achieve that very thing.—J. M. SCHOEPPEL, MANAGER, MIDWEST, OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

THE MEMBERS RESPOND

In his recent article, Harry Botwick remarked to the effect that as long as radio was here to stay, showmen might as well get aboard and utilize the ether waves to advertise their shows. We queried some of the members and their opinions have been set down from time to time. The subject is carried further on this page.—MIKE.

DOES NOT FAVOR EVENING HOURS

If properly utilized, I believe the medium of radio advertising is important in selling your show. First, it is a fine medium for calendar advertising, that is, informing listeners about what you are showing.

The best time for the air plugs should be around lunch time or during the a. m. with the object of drawing from the women shoppers; then around dinner or supper time when you might draw from the families that are stepping out or undecided as to how to spend the evening.

Broadcasts between dinner time and 10:30 or 11 at night are wasted, to my mind. Very few theatres in the country can even come near some of the national chain broadcasts for air entertainment. Persons staying home to hear Vallee or Cantor are not coming out for a picture and they are least impressed and probably annoyed at hearing theatre plugs of superlatives around that time.

Contests on the air may prove beneficial to the theatre if watched closely from the professional chiseler or person who makes it a business to detect weaknesses in the promotion for his own gain.

I don't believe that Hollywood gossip on the air from key city stations means a great deal because the element of person interested in it is a fan magazine reader and thereby obtains much more concrete information from the mags and syndicated columns that are written up in studio publicity sheets.—ARTHUR ABLESON, MANAGER, WORLD, OMAHA, NEB.

"MOVIE MOMENTS" FOUND PROFITABLE

In my opinion, radio today cannot be beat as far as I can see. We, in Duluth, work with our local station WEBC in broadcasting our programs known as "Movie Moments" every day in the week. In our broadcasts enough of the story is given over the air to arouse curiosity and interest which I think is very good for this reason:

A housewife at home preparing supper has no time to read. Friend husband hogs the paper, too tired to go out. Wife in all day wants to get out. All of a sudden from the radio comes a roar of a bugle, then a pleasant voice says, "Where to go tonight" and then "now playing at the Granada so and so." Friend wife says, "Oh listen to that, that should be interesting, let's go." Husband tries to make wifie happy and goes to the show. Now that might be the case, I can't say that it is, but it's possible.

Puts on Special Broadcasts

Occasionally we shoot through special broadcasts on certain pictures which are given over the air morning, noon and night which contact not only the housewives, maids and stay-at-homes but office workers, shoppers, clerks, etc. In Duluth radios are going at all hours broadcasting out on the streets, in stores and everywhere. People passing by, all possible patrons, undoubtedly some of them drop in due to our efforts.

Everyone knows that the radio is here to stay, so we have to take advantage of it.

I believe a showman can convert the radio as far as selling his shows are concerned so that it plays an important part in his compaigns. It is getting a personal talk to them right in their own home with your listeners at the controls. Now if you make it an interesting talk and short, they will be there at the finish.

Also in places where the newspaper rates are so exorbitant, I frankly believe this modern method of advertising is very effective and as long as they keep the cost at a minimum, should be utilized as much as possible.—ROY O. PRYTZ, MANAGER, GRANADA, DULUTH, MINN.

Toups Distributes Poll Ballots on "Cristo"

Taking advantage of the primary elections, Rodney Toups, manager and Moise Bloch, publicity director, Loew's State Theatre, New Orleans, La., distributed ballots at polls reading "vote for the best entertainment ticket," this being tied into the "Count of Monte Cristo's" plug.

Tieup with beauty parlor resulted in an Elissa Landi coiffure ad, plus display in beautician's windows and shop. Bannered sound truck cruised streets, particularly in neighborhood of schools, where book marks and coloring contest heralds were distributed.

FIGHT BALLY. Manager Hendrickson, Capitol, Oakland, Cal., tied in with owner of above trailer to plug Baer-Carnera fight pictures. Orchestra traveled with outfit and two boys demonstrated winning blows.

Memphis and Chicago Report "Cristo" Campaigns

Francis Deering worked two newspaper stunts on "Count of Monte Cristo" at the State, Memphis, Tenn., one paper running the Elissa Landi wardrobe contest and the other a classified hookup.

In cooperation with the public school divisions of Better Film Council, announcements were made in all schools, and special screenings for executives of various women clubs also helped spread word-of-mouth. Bookmarks distributed at public libraries assisted as did tieup cards in all local taxis.

The Better Films tieup is an effective one, especially at this time.

In Chicago, Ill.—

Ed Levin featured a railroad tieup on the date at the United Artists, in which special excursion rates were arranged with both the Baltimore and Ohio and Pennsylvania. The roads put out cards in all stations within a 300-mile radius and called further attention to the tiein with mention on the excursion throwaways.

Through cooperation of local news distributor, books displays were arranged in all sections of the city, delivery trucks also carrying announcement of the date. Imprinted blotters were given away at all branches of public library and miniature message blanks in outgoing telegrams were contributed by Postal Telegraph.

"Costless" Organist

"Doc" Westfall, recently transferred from the Palace, Jamestown, N. Y., to the Haven, Olean, started off the new assignment with an idea he credits to Freddie Winberg, of the Family, in Batavia, N. Y. In return for newspaper, screen and lobby advertising, Doc promoted local radio store to pay salary of theatre organist, an angle that has possibilities in spots where local conditions make this practical.

"British Agent" Page Ad

Newspaper rates being what they are, it is quite unusual these days to see a full-page ad on a single attraction. This space was taken by J. J. Parker, of Portland, Ore., for the western premiere of "British Agent" at the Broadway, the ad tied into the Greater Show Season put on at Parker Theatres.

Imprinted Paper Plates Used for "Housewife"

C. J. Kremer, Rialto Theatre, Stanton, Neb., devised a novelty throwaway for his showing of "Housewife," distributing gayly colored paper plates imprinted as follows: "It isn't a picnic. It takes more than food to hold a man when he starts to slip. The modern wife can handle the modern bachelor girl if she knows how. For full particulars see 'Housewife' at the ——," etc., etc.

Well Rounded Campaigns Put On for "Dames"

Tying in a fashion show to his regular trailer on "Dames" was the bright thought of Manager Larry Conley, Bay, Green Bay, Wis., local store furnishing eight models and late fashions, show announced through house P. A. system. Presentation was put on first, dialogue and action arranged so that it tied in naturally to the trailer that followed.

Advance inside flash that brought returns was the use of square columns at rear of orchestra (see photo) made by covering frame with yellow cloth, masked in with silver flittered cardboard, black letters streaked with silver flitter. Lighting was furnished by 100 watt lamp placed at base of each column in hoods, flasher buttons used for alternating effect.

Conley's front was in keeping, and a "living billboard" stunt atop the marquee proved a traffic stopper. Eight girls from local dancing school posed against letters of title, after which they did a presentation number accompanied by house orchestra.

Larry also placed a float in American Legion parade and on local appearance of President Roosevelt a few days ahead of opening, had sound truck working and also planted banners near speaker's stand.

In Washington, Pa.—

Manager Charles K. Eagle, State Theatre, thoroughly stenciled sidewalks, stamped outgoing telegraph messages and envelopes of theatre mail and also arranged to stamp page one of his local paper. Gave passes in free cooking school sponsored by Sears Roebuck in return for mention in ad, and distributed imprinted napkins.

In Newark, N. J.—

Harry A. Vesel, of the Warner Newark publicity office, handled the details of a beauty contest at the Branford in which for seven nights two girls were selected from group of 12 or more, each night being named in honor of participating merchants who contributed prizes. Screen tests and bit parts were awarded to the winners.

Different groups of competing girls were used on street float and also worked in lobby presentation wearing costumes from the various stores.

And In Milwaukee—

Dave Weshner, Warner zone manager, supervised the campaign and thoroughly exploited the music angle. All the music shops and department stores were tied in with elaborate displays and name bands played the hit tune on the air and during regular shows. Cooperative ads were also promoted.

(Right) "DEVIL TIGER" at the Alhambra Theatre, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, received a great sendoff by the showmen of that theatre. Not only were immense displays used across the face of the building, but the decorated motor float seen in front of the theatre did a lot to stop traffic whenever it halted.

THE dependability of Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative is not based entirely upon its well-known uniformity. It is the original, inherent quality of the emulsion...its constant ability to help producers and cameramen make the most of every picture...that completes its dependability...that seals the acceptance which this famous film enjoys. This prepared proclamation to be issued by the Mayor explains why a Happiness Week will be a timely and beneficial event.

A PROCLAMATION

To the Citizens of the City of (.....)
Greetings:

The year 1934, now nearing its close, has been fraught with many momentous changes for this community, in common with every other community in the United States.

A new feeling of hopefulness is everywhere evident, following four years of uncertainty, apathy and fear.

While poverty still exists in our city and there is still far too much economic distress, the hungry are being fed and the homeless sheltered.

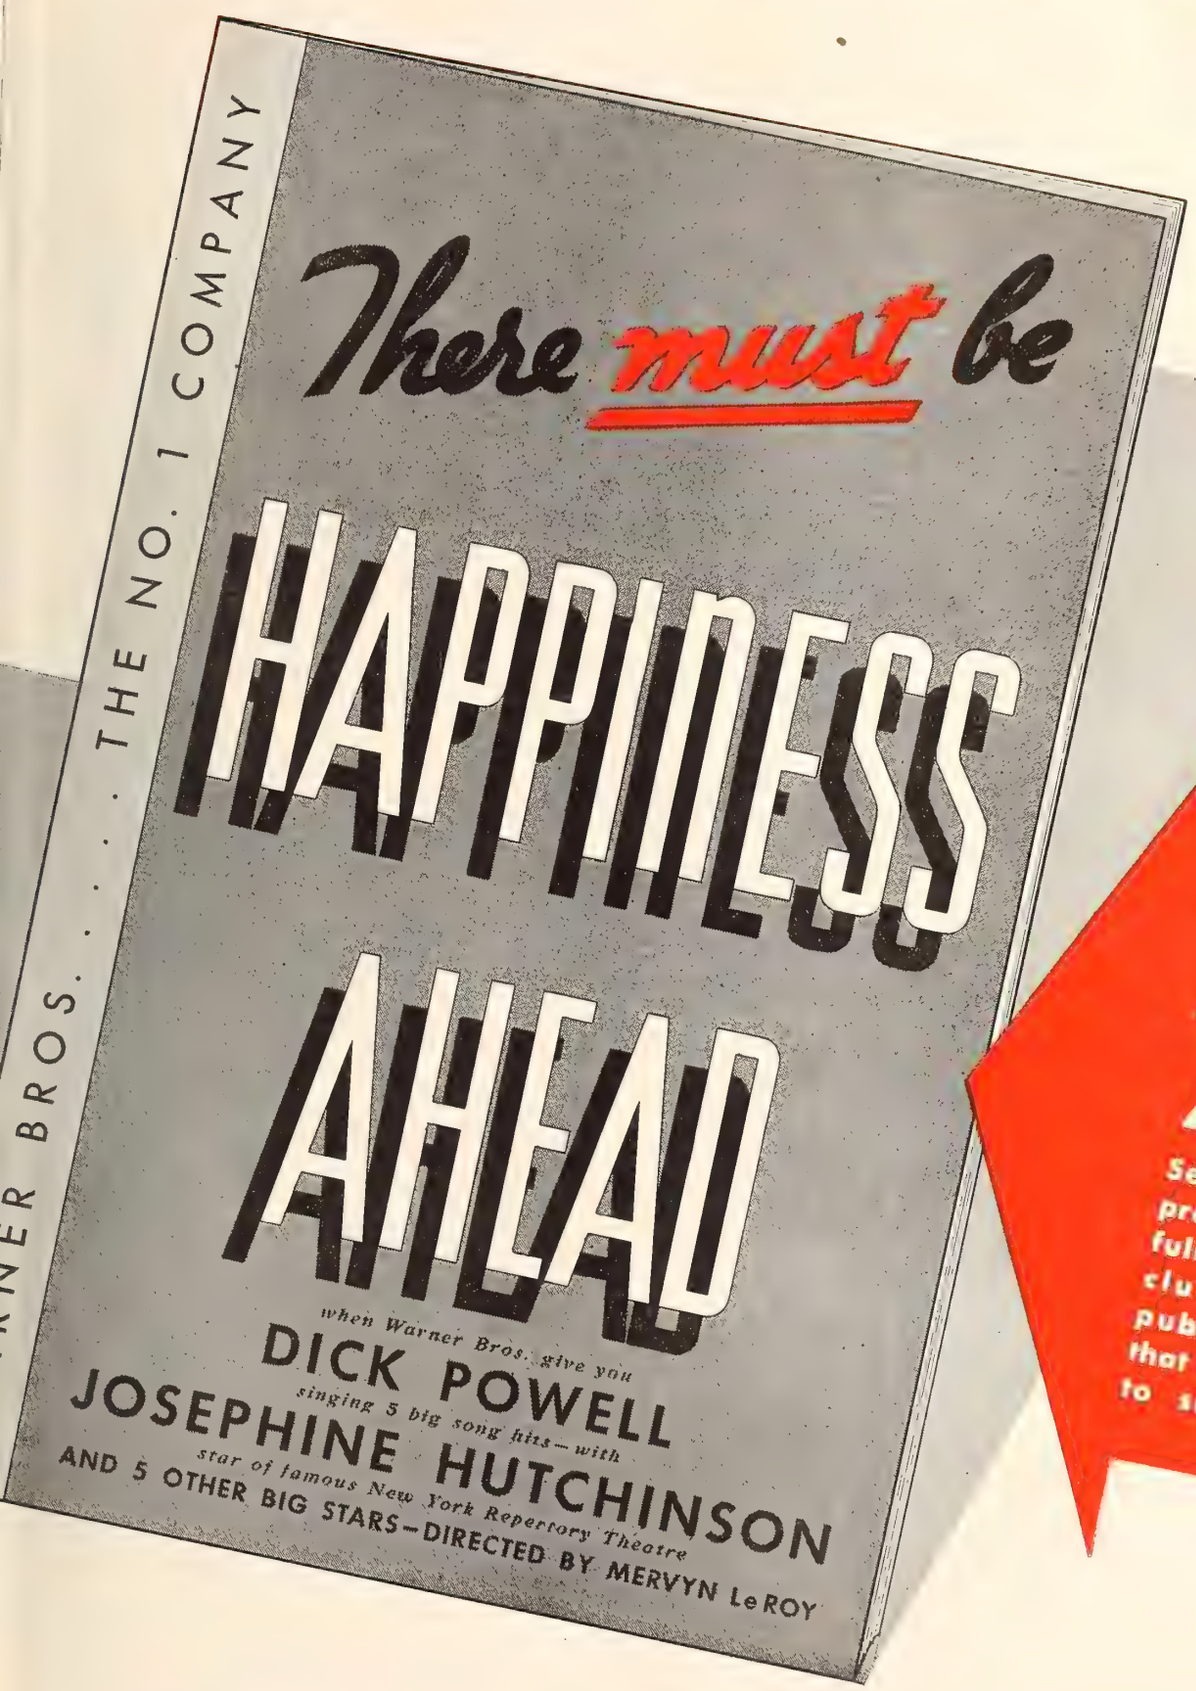
The business life of the city has been revived; there is less unemployment, less crime, less suffering among our residents.

Signs of business revival are present everywhere; confidence in our national leadership and our financial institutions has been restored; industrial strife is yielding to arbitration in a spirit of cooperation. Our schools are open, our teachers and our municipal employees are being paid.

To borrow a phrase from a current motion picture, there is "Happiness Ahead."

Consequently I, as Mayor of the City of (name of City) designate the week beginning (date here), as "Happiness Week," and I ask the citizens of this community to join in a movement that has for its purpose their own happiness and that of their neighbors.

Merchants, professional men, amusement houses and every line of industry will offer unprecedented values to shoppers during that time. Let it be a week of reconciliation among the unfriendly — of reunion among friends.



There IS HAPPINESS AHEAD. Let (name of City) lead the way along the road to Happiness—let us consecrate a week to cheerfulness, to mutual understanding and to burying deep the memories of the bitterness, the strife, the discouragement that have so long cast a shadow over all our homes.

In seeking happiness we realize that it lies within ourselves. Let us look forward to Happiness Ahead.

NUANCES OF SPINACH

A DELIGHTFUL and delicate coloration of unconscious humor pervades the current efforts of an array of educators, including a national organization of teachers of English, in the conduct of various courses of study addressed at "appreciation of the photoplay."

One need not take serious issue with the movement since it cannot but serve to increase attention for the amusement wares of the screen, and it is almost certain to bring some benefits by the education of educators in the capacities of the medium of the motion picture.

However, since the motion picture is a direct address to the primary senses and the simpler emotions and mental process, it represents precisely a short-cut through the intricacies of the cultural fabric with which education is concerned. It is the very fact that the motion picture has required no educational background for its appreciation that it has been able to attain its position as the world's dominant amusement medium.

A series of courses on "the understanding of ham-and-eggs" or "the appreciation of the nuances of spinach," would be of even greater service.

When motion pictures get to the point that they require the training in analysis and appreciation afforded by an academic course, an elegant opportunity will be afforded for the profitable production of some that can make themselves understood.

One must view with a certain sympathy the problems of modern education which is having such an obviously difficult time trying to get into step with life, but the spectacle of the academicians trying to break into the theatre is not reassuring.

The motion picture is the prayer wheel of the wish, succeeding as it serves human yearnings and impulses without the involvement of effort.

The motion picture can purvey emotional satisfactions through vicarious attainments, it can now and then convey fact, but the sit-and-take-it process enjoyed by the audience has nothing in common with the mental disciplines which constitute education.

And again, may we not urge that what the school and theatre may have in common is accidental and may best be left that way.

MR. ROBERT EDMOND JONES, able Radio designer, says that platinum blondes do not photograph satisfactorily in color. This got to be quite an industry in the days when blondes were all gold.

EVEN DUMBER

CATCHING up with our summer's reading, we discover a pleasant passage in the recorded remarks of Dr. F. Dean McClusky, discussing visual education before a National Board of Review session, in which he said:

> "Mankind has had a hard struggle to become intelligent. Dr. Shotwell, historian at Columbia University, says it took man 50,000 years to learn to use his thumb in using hand implements. A recent book on the foolishness of some of our great minds illustrates this point. In this book it is related how Franklin cut a hole in a porch door so that the mother cat could get in and out and then cut a smaller hole for the kittens. To assume that the discipline of schooling may be turned into a picnic (via the screen) is just as foolish. . . . "

Everybody has missed the point. It was even dumber of Franklin to care where the cat was, inside or out.

MR. ROCKEFELLER OWNS IT

THE RKO lease having expired, it seems that considerable "conversations" are being had as to the future conduct of the world's greatest theatre, the Music Hall. It is to be observed that what was once considerably heralded as "Radio City" is now apparently entirely "Rockefeller Center"; also that for some months now all the saying at the Music Hall has been said by Mr. W. G. Van Schmus, who came into the picture quietly as "an observer" for the Rockefeller interests when the Roxy regime's debacle afforded so large an opportunity for observing. It seems likely that the Music Hall will continue to be operated as a Rockefeller project and that it is most unlikely that that very considerable job will be delegated to outside authority.

THIS WEEK - - -

FRENCH QUOTA

On November 1, France plans abandonment of its import quota system, following six months' study of its operation. It is expected a generally higher schedule of tariffs will become effective with dropping of the import quota. It is uncertain at the moment whether films will be affected. . . .

QUITTNER SUIT

In negotiation is possible settlement of the long drawn monopoly suit of Edward Quittner, exhibitor, against Paramount Publix, the MPPDA and member firms, for $5,000,000 triple damages. Dismissed by the court on trial in 1933, appeal on the suit is pending before the U. S. district court of appeals, and may be heard this fall if the settlement does not materialize.

MEXICAN TAX

Optimistic now are distributors, including American firm representatives in Mexico City, that the film industry may yet be exempted from a drastic proposed 10 per cent rental tax. Americans, in conference with President Rodriguez, also asked a reduction in the present levy. The President promised early and thorough study of the matter. . . .

COLUMBIA ABROAD

Columbia will distribute about 30 of its 1934-35 features in Europe and the entire list in England, but will not produce abroad, last week declared foreign department chief Joseph Seidelman, just returned to New York. In England, on the Continent, business is showing improvement, in his opinion. . . .

SUBSEQUENT PRICES

Urged on Kansas City exhibitors last week by S. A. Moross, assistant to Code Authority secretary John Flinn, were admission increases at subsequents. Purpose: stabilization of prices. He discovered a "trick price system" in effect in Kansas City, similar to none other encountered in his tour.

MPTO CONVENTION

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington state will hold its annual convention on October 24 in Seattle. Tentatively indicated as the bright spot of the evening is a Bowery Ball. Idaho exhibitors will participate. . . .

STAFF INCREASE

Staff increases of Paramount International Corporation find a total employed of 3,447, of which 1,149 are in England, 465 in the French office, 40 in the New York home office . . .

LABORATORY

Planned by Alexander Korda, competent production head of London Films, whose product United Artists releases, is a legitimate producing company, L. F. Play Productions, to sponsor stageplays as a laboratory for his motion picture production, along the lines of Darryl Zanuck's 20th Century arrangement here. To the United States Mr. Korda will come shortly, to study American studio construction, in anticipation of his firm's planned studio. . . .

NO FILM FLARE

Strangely differing from the youth of the rest of the world is that of Russia, indicated when but 350 of a Moscow population of 4,000,000 responded to a large film studio's advertisement for young people willing to study motion picture technique, with free tuition and a stipend offered. Perhaps the fact that in Russia a player's salary is no more than that of a skilled worker had something to do with the result. . . .

WANGER PLAN

Planned by Walter Wanger, producing independently for Paramount release, is an all-star stock company, for which Peggy Conklin, New York stage, and Charles Boyer, French stage and screen, have been signed. The aim: all-star films. The method: a nucleus of recognized stage names, supplemented with screen names. . . .

GIVEAWAYS

Coming to a head is the Denver situation anent giveaways in theatres, on which the city council last week removed a prohibitory ordinance. The local code board, sustained on appeal, previously had ordered the policy banned. If the mayor signs the bill, court action is expected to determine the code's authority to interfere in the practice. . . .

PROTECTIVE MOVE

Formed by the GFTA, southern independent exhibitors' group, is a $25,000 Independent Theatres' Investment Corporation, as an auxiliary, to acquire theatre properties in the southwest. N. H. Walters, Birmingham, was named president; Willis Davis, Atlanta, secretary-treasurer. Capital has been pledged or paid. Purpose: protection of independents in Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, from circuits.

STAGE SHOWS

On the increase in the Milwaukee area are stage attractions, with Saxe Amusement booking shows weekly for four neighborhood theatres, other houses in towns close to Milwaukee, and the Avalon likewise for Sundays. . . .

NEW INTRODUCTION

An innovation in introducing the credit lines to the screen audience has been adopted by Fox in its latest Will Rogers film, "Judge Priest." Instead of the usual music, titles, credits, cast, John Ford, director, opens the film with Rogers, at the judicial bench, rapping the audience to order, then fades into the credit sequence.

NEW CENSOR

Automatically becoming Massachusetts film censor, Paul G. Kirk last week assumed his post at Boston as commissioner of public safety, succeeding Daniel Needham . . .

SAFE LIFTERS

With the apprehension last week by Tampa, Fla., police of five men, it is believed the gang which some time ago "lifted" a two-ton safe from the Casino Amusement Company's office in the Ritz theatre, cleaned it of $2,000 cash, $3,000 jewelry, has been rounded up. Wild parties, wilder spending, brought capture. . . .

DOWLING RESIGNS

The duties of Ambrose S. "Bo" Dowling, who has resigned as RKO Export's European representative, will be consolidated with those of Phil Reisman, company vice-president, making appointment of a Dowling successor unnecessary. In London Mr. Dowling is convalescing from illness. . . .

30 KINDS OF TAXES PAID BY THE THEATRE OWNERS

And Burden Promises to Grow Even More Onerous with Government, States and Cities Seeking Means of Filling Depleted Treasuries

The staggering burden of taxation devised by the country's legislators—federal, state and municipal — and imposed upon the exhibition branch of the industry will be even heavier, if present indications become actuality, by the time Congress and the various state legislatures have mapped out their revenue-making programs for 1935. Already the tax load on exhibitor shoulders has climbed into many millions—in many situations exhibitors and theatre companies are paying from 17 to 30 separate taxes—and that this burden may be considerably amplified is borne out by a Herald survey of tax conditions.

U. S., STATES AND CITIES NEED MORE INCOME

At the present time the United States Treasury is engaged in mapping a program which will call for $500,000,000 in additional taxes during the coming year. This, with other plans for raising revenue, will be presented to Congress as soon as it convenes in January. That extra revenue is needed is seen in the Treasury's statement for the fiscal year which ended June 30—a deficit of $3,989,000,000.

Aside from the necessity of more taxes for the federal government, deflated state and municipal budgets have caused considerable agitation for immediate legislation of a taxation nature affecting local businesses and industry. Comparatively few states, for example, have amusement taxes, and it is expected that this and other forms of taxation will result, in many instances, in more onerous tax loads than currently are being endured.

STATE SALES TAX USUALLY 1 PER CENT

Then, too, there is the state sales tax, usually one per cent of the gross profit, which probably would be added to the state or municipal amusement tax. These and many other items can easily serve as the basis for additional taxation at the expense of the exhibitor.

Further than the taxes paid by exhibition in respect to its actual operation, the exhibitor has his own individual tax problems to worry about. There is his federal and state income tax. He may pay half a dozen different taxes which arise out of the operation of his private automobile. These are not dealt with in this survey.

Footage Tax New New York Threat

Outstanding among the newer forms of taxation is the proposed exhibition footage tax which will be introduced in the New York state legislature this winter. It is expected a standard amount would be fixed for each foot of film exhibited.

Another proposal is embodied in the Fearon-Wadsworth retail sales tax bill, which provides for a general admission tax on all amusement enterprises. At present there is no separate state amusement tax in New York; there is a sales tax of one per cent.

The City of New York this summer was authorized by the legislature to impose until December 31, 1935, any tax which the legislature has the power to impose. New York City theatres currently are paying $200 for a theatre license, but when that theatre has stage shows as well as films, the cost is $500. In addition there is a minimum charge of $21.86 for upright signs in front of and on the sides of theatres; a minimum of $61.76 for a marquee; $10 for refrigeration permits; $5 for each boiler and fire inspection. Real estate taxes come to $2.60 per $100 valuation; water and electric rates, usually assessed as of the actual amount of each consumed; special assessments, which include such items as paying repair, sidewalk grating fixtures. In addition there is the building permit fee.

Atlanta Theatres Avoid Special Assessments

Atlanta theatre operators pay no special tax to city or state. Efforts have been made at practically every session to assess a special admission tax. Several weeks ago agitation was started for a special city tax against admissions, but the plan never came before the council.

Under a state law, theatres may not be operated Sundays by the regular operators, but by decision of the state supreme court it is permissible for them to be operated for charity by regularly organized charitable bodies. Under this ruling the Atlanta theatres for nearly a year have been operated by a committee in charge of the Scottish Rite Crippled Children's Hospital, which nets an average of $1,000 monthly to that body.

Washington State May Get Censorship Levy

State of Washington exhibitors are now paying city and state real estate taxes, occupational taxes amounting to one and one-half per cent on the gross intake, city license fees, in addition to federal taxes and the usual water and light rates, inspection fees and the like. To date no additional taxes have been revealed in proposed planks of various state legislators, but it is reported that further burdens will be shifted to the theatres before the end of November. It is considered more than likely that politicians seeking to tie in with the Legion of Decency will propose a state censorship of pictures, which would necessitate a special tax.

Football Not Taxed But Theatres Are

In New Orleans, the Commission Council recently changed the theatre tax to 2 per cent of the gross instead of one cent on each ticket sold, claiming theatres were collecting 3 per cent by the latter means. Theatres must absorb the tax, and owners have given notice that they will fight, asserting it represents "class legislation." The city's newspapers, which were taxed 2 per cent on the gross advertising volume, have been successful in obtaining an injunction.

In New Orleans, all football games in which Loyola and Tulane universities participate will not be subject to taxation. Horse racing in New Orleans also is exempt from taxation.

24 Kinds of Taxes Paid in Minnesota

Minnesota exhibitors pay 24 varieties of taxes to the state and federal government. Among state taxes paid are real estate, personal property, special assessments, corporation annual report filing, moneys and credits tax, boiler inspection fees, corporation income taxes and fire license fees. Figures were not available on the Minnesota. The Minnesota Amusement Company, with headquarters in Minenapolis and operating the former Publix properties, pays taxes in five states in addition to the government.

High Realty Charges In Omaha Territory

High realty assessments mark the tax situation in the Omaha territory. State, county and city levies amount to $36.14 per $1,000 of valuation. Class A intangibles' tax amounts to 25 cents per $100; and Class B, 80 cents per $100. The City of Omaha's occupation tax on theatres is at the rate of $25 for houses having up to 500 seats; $35, 750 seats; $50 for 1,000 seats; $100 up to 1,500; $200 up to 2,000, and over 2,000 the tax is $250. This occupation tax covers all license and permit fees, such as fire inspection, building inspection, electrical inspection and the like.

The only other city fee charged Omaha theatres is when a theatre makes an alteration in the construction of the house, such as new marquees, entrances and the like. Reconstruction up to a cost of $500 necessitates a payment of $1 to the city; reconstruction up to $2,500, $2; $7,500, $5, and up to $10,000, $8.

Sales Tax Defeated Five Times in Ohio

Taxes which Cincinnati exhibitors are called upon to pay include a 10 per cent state admission tax, assessed on all admissions over ten cents. In a majority of cases this is passed on to the public. The tax has been in effect for a year. At first it had a tendency to slow down attendance, but this reaction now is negligible. It is thought, however, that the impost has shifted some business to the houses where a ten-cent top admission is charged.

Real estate is taxed at $21.44 per $1,000 valuation. Personal property tax is on the same basis. Intangible tax is 5 per cent on the yield on dividend-paying securities, and two mills per $1,000, on valuation as of January 1, on non-productive investments. Income tax is paid on the basis of 4 or 8 per cent, depending on the income, with a normal tax of 4 per cent, and a surtax graduated according to income. There is also a minimum $25 state franchise tax, with higher imposts based on the amount of stock outstanding.

Five attempts by the Ohio legislature to enact a sales tax, by means of which the 10 per cent state admission tax would be automatically repealed, have been defeated, and until it is enacted there is little or no likelihood of the admission tax being repealed. It comes up again this winter.

In event the sales tax is passed at a later date, exhibitors naturally will participate, although the outlay will be less than under the present impost, especially where exhibitors are assuming the admission tax burden. However, even where the public pays the tax, it is felt that a sales tax will remove what attendance resistance may now exist by reason of the admission impost, as the sales tax will not be discriminatory, as is now the case.

The Ohio exhibitor pays the customary state corporation tax and a state assessment on "intangibles." A film censorship tax of $2 per reel, levied on the distributor, is passed on to them, Ohio exhibitors say. Approximately $3,000,000 in nuisance taxes was paid into the Ohio state treasury during the year ending August 1, according to the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio.

In Columbus, a special tax planned against theatres will not be put into effect, according to Mayor Worley. Instead, the City Council plans to place a $850,000 deficiency bond issue on the November ballot.

It's Taxes and Taxes For Iowa Exhibitors

The Iowa exhibitor is taxed at every turn. On his purchases he pays under the sales tax 2 per cent on practically everything bought, and theatre admissions also are taxed 2 per cent.

Other taxes paid are: Real estate tax, state, county and city—190 mills on each $100 of assessed value; personal property tax on properties of the theatre, seats, state, county and city tax—190 mills on each $100 of assessed valuation; moneys and credit tax, state, county and city—6 mills on each $1,000; city building permit fee—40 cents for every 1,000 cu. ft. of contents; special tax for sewer—assessed according to construction; state franchise fee when filing application to engage in business—$.50 for each business. Example: A circuit would pay $.50 for each of the theatres in its chain; theatre tax for the city—$100 a year for a theatre seating over 800, $75 for theatre seating less than 800; state sales tax—2 per cent on gross receipts from sales of tangible personal property and a like rate upon the service of gas, electricity, water and communication service and upon tickets of admission to places of amusement and athletic events with a limited number of exceptions: The $.02 sales tax for electric service runs from $1.60 monthly on an $80.00 charge to smaller theatres to $40.00 tax added to the $2,000 electric monthly bill of the larger houses; local tax on telephones—2 per cent on the monthly rate. A $7 theatre phone pays monthly tax of $.14; corporation report tax—one dollar a year; old age pension fund—$2 a year for each person in state.

It is not thought that there will be any additional taxes suggested at the next session, especially if Governor Clyde Herring, for years a campaigner for the sales tax, is re-elected. This tax, it is expected, will bring in $14,000,000 a year. Former Governor Dan Turner is again a candidate for the governorship of Iowa and represents the Republicans with a plan for an increased income tax.

Legislation proposed that most directly concerns theatres in Iowa is that considered by the state fire marshal in regard to theatre construction. Theatres seating under 600 are not now required to be of fireproof construction. Ramps in theatres instead of steps also are proposed.

Three Assessments On Memphis Tickets

Theatres in Memphis pay license and privilege taxes in one lump to the city, state and county, and real estate and personalty taxes separately to the city and to the state and county.

The license and privilege taxes, on houses charging admission of 50 cents or less: film theatres of 500 seats or less, $75 to the city, $75 to the county, $75 to the state; 500 to 1,000 seats, $125 three times; 1,000 to 1,500 seats, $225 three times; 1,500 to 2,000 seats, $300 three times; 2,000 or over, $400 three times. If more than 50 cents, these amounts are increased by 10 per cent for each 10 cents or part thereof over 50 cents.

On all real estate and on all personalty, which includes property other than real estate, the city of Memphis collects $2.13 per $100 assessed valuation, the county collects 91 cents per $100 assessed valuation, and the state collects eight cents per $100 assessed valuation.

There is talk of a sales tax when the state legislature meets in January.

17 Separate Taxes On Maryland Houses

There are about seventeen separate taxes which must be paid to the state, city and federal governments each year by Maryland exhibitors.

First comes the real property tax bill on which the state rate is 22 cents per $100, then the full city tax of $2.45 per $100. A water meter bill is paid each quarter, 20 cents per 100 cubic feet of water used. Meters are used only for certain establishments, such as theatres and apartment houses, while the majority of homes are on an annual flat rate.

The state license yearly is ten cents a seat, the city license annually $50. The yearly city inspection tax is $10. There is the recently re-enacted Federal Corporation Stock tax amounting to one-tenth of one per cent yearly with a 12½ per cent profit allowed on the estimated value of the stock and then with a 5 per cent tax levied on all profits over that.

The city levies a tangible tax on sound equipment and minor privilege tax on miscellaneous signs, etc., which extend beyond the building lines of the theatre.

Each Midnight Show In Buffalo Taxed $2

In Buffalo no recent municipal legislation has added to theatre taxes, nor is there any such legislation pending. Real estate, water, and electric current levies fall on the property or circuit owners rather than on individual exhibitors. In addition to these, Buffalo taxes include a levy of $100 for a theatre license; $86 sign and marquee tax; $2 fire inspection, required four times annually, and a tax of $2 on each midnight show.

Sales Tax Is Paid By Oklahoma Houses

Oklahoma theatres, in addition to levies sponsored by the government, pay a state sales tax of one per cent, building permit fees, fire and boiler inspection fees and the usual water rates. Figures on these, which were reported as unobtainable, are said to be varying.

State Income Tax Paid in Wisconsin

Milwaukee exhibitors, in addition to federal taxes on long distance telephone calls, telegrams, safety deposit boxes, capital stock and corporate income and excess profits taxes, if a corporation, the former at a rate of $1 for each full $1,000, and federal income tax, are obliged to pay a state income tax, determined on a graduated basis ranging from 1 per cent to 7 per cent on incomes over $12,000 and a state corporation income tax, if a corporation, ranging at a rate from 2 to 6 per cent.

In Milwaukee, theatres having automatic sprinkling systems are taxed from $50 to $300 a year, depending on the size of the pipe in the installation. They must pay a theatre tax of $30 a year, a flat fee; a score charge of 10 cents per seat; a sign tax at a minimum of $5 a year, depending upon the size of the sign; a personal property tax of about $30 per $1,000 assessment; a real property tax (if they own the property), at about the same rate.

Milwaukee theatre owners having iron gratings over retaining walls about windows below street level are obliged to pay a tax of $2 per year and are assessed $2 per year for a stationary engineer's license to operate their boilers. If they drive automobiles, they pay a state gasoline tax of 4 cents and a federal tax of 1 cent per gallon and Milwaukee exhibitors must pay a service fee on all checking accounts under $500 of from 50 cents to $1.00 per month.

All theatres employing ten or more persons for 18 or more weeks in 1933 are also sub-

ONE COMPANY PAYS IN FIVE STATES

The Minnesota Amusement Company, with headquarters in Minneapolis and operators of the former Publix houses in that sector, pays taxes in Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Delaware, in addition to federal taxes. Altogether it pays about 25 different types of taxes, ranging from city confectionery license fees to corporation annual report filing fees.

ject to the state compensation act, which obliges them to contribute 2 per cent of their July payrolls.

Indications point to introduction of a sales tax bill before the next legislature in Wisconsin.

Action on a petition to reduce the annual license fee of theatres in Madison, the state capital, has been deferred by the council license committee to give the theatre managers a hearing. The fee is based on the seating capacity.

Special City Tax On St. Louis Houses

In St. Louis the motion picture theatre pays a special city tax of $150 annually, regardless of size of the house. This is the only special tax imposed on the industry by the City of St. Louis. The theatre also pays the customary general real estate and personal property tax of $2.74 per $100 valuation. Most theatres and other business houses pay their water bills according to the actual amount of water consumed. Corporations owning and operating theatres pay a state corporation tax of $1 for each $1,000 of capital. Theatres also pay a one-half of one per cent sales tax.

Wilmington Theatres Pay Varied Levies

Wilmington theatres pay a city and school tax of $1.65 on each $100 valuation, $1.50 going to the city and 15 cents to the schools. Theatres also pay a county and poor tax of 70 cents per $100.

District of Columbia Exhibitors Get "Break"

The District of Columbia appears to be in an enviable position in regard to theatre taxation; there are not many and no new ones have been especially levied upon the District because of decreased revenue from other sources. The District of Columbia—and this must not be confused with the Federal Government—pays no corporation tax, no sales tax, no local admission tax, no electric tax, no building tax, no gross profit tax, no income tax, no capital tax. The theatre's taxes, exclusive of federal, include a real estate tax of $1.50 per $100 valuation, $5 inspection fee, a theatre license fee —films only—of $30 and for stage and screen of $50; a fee of $1.50 per $100 of tangibles and 50 cents for each $100 of intangibles. Water rates are on a minimum basis of $8.75 per 7,500 cubic feet.

Virginia Admission Tax Defeated for 12 Years

While efforts have been made at almost every session of the Virginia legislature the last twelve years to place a 10 per cent tax on theatre tickets, no such levy has as yet been made. The existing tax burdens as to theatres in the state are considered as heavy as can be borne. In Richmond, the seating capacity tax is $150 for 400 seats or less; $170 to 450 seats, and $187.50 for 450 to 1,000 seats. The tangible personal property tax, such as fixtures, is $2.20 on the $100 valuation, as is the real estate tax. There is no state tax on real estate.

There is, however, a state tax of $150 annually on theatres having 350 seats or less.

Florida Exhibitors Find Taxes Heavy

The tax load carried by exhibitors of Florida is not as great as in states where there is a sales tax, or tax on admission tickets, but the Florida exhibitor considers it heavy enough.

If the building is owned by the exhibitor he has to pay the realty tax; so much for the state and the county, and then a separate package for the city or village. Then the personal property comes in for an additional tax by state, county and city. Personal property takes in "everything except the office cat." If the exhibitor owns stock in the company, or bonds or mortgages, they come under the head of "intangibles" and are taxed as such.

Florida has no income tax, but Uncle Sam comes in for his tax, also the corporation and other federal taxes.

Under the Florida occupation tax laws, all theatres have to have a license. This license law is graded according to the size of the cities. The little town gets in for a $25 a year fee, while cities of 100,000 such as Tampa and Miami are charged a state and county license fee of $300. Then the city also charges a license fee, with small towns as low as $15, but the larger cities run as high as $150 a year, with an additional $50 if one shows advertisements on the screen.

SUNDAY SHOWS NET HOSPITAL $1,000 A MONTH

Special local taxation of motion picture theatres is comparatively unknown in Atlanta. Several attempts by the Georgia legislature to levy an admission tax have failed. However, under a state law, theatres may not be operated on Sundays by the regular operators. It is permissible, under a ruling by the state supreme court, for theatres to be operated for charity on Sunday by regularly organized charitable organizations. Thus, Atlanta theatres have been contributing for over a year an average of $1,000 monthly to the Scottish Rite Crippled Children's Hospital, whose committee has been in charge of theatres in Atlanta the past year. And the theatre gets not one cent for tribute.

Louisville Theatre Sues To Force Payment of Rent

Suit to enforce payment of rent totaling $149,300.02 and interest of $9,128.33, alleged to be due on a lease of the Rialto theatre property, Louisville, Ky., was filed in circuit court recently by the Majestic Theatre Company against the United Theatres Company, an Ohio corporation. The petition alleges the Ohio concern guaranteed a yearly rental payment of $110,000 when the Majestic company agreed to a transfer of the lease to the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, operators of the Rialto. During two years of the term since the lease was made only $70,000 rent has been paid, the plaintiff contends.

A JOSEPH'S COAT OF FEDERAL TAXES

A comprehensive idea of the many and varied types of taxes imposed upon motion picture theatres and circuit operating companies is shown in the following listing of federal taxes paid by the exhibition branch of the industry:

TAX	AMOUNT
Amusements	1 cent on each 10 cents over 40 cents admission
Capital stock	$1 on each $1,000 of of capital
Corporation income	13¾% of net profit; no exemptions
Telephone	10 to 20 cents in the scale of 50 cents to $2 calls
Telegraph	1 cent up in scale of one to 29 words, 30 to 49, etc.
Bank checks	2 cents on each
Documentary stamps on original stock	10 cents on each $100 of par value stock
Documentary stamps on stock transfers	2 cents for each $100 of par value stock
Surtax on earnings	5% on earnings over 12½% of declared capital stock value
Corporation franchise	4½% of net profit

In addition, there is the regular individual income tax to be paid by the exhibitor.

MPTOA Urges United Front to Fight Taxation

Theatre and motion pictures are to be faced with the most drastic attacks they have ever experienced, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America declared this week in a bulletin. The MPTOA holds the current unusual public interest in the motion picture responsible for the anticipated attacks.

The organization points out that it is vitally important for the exhibitors to avoid factional disputes, that they offer a united front, in order to escape "unfair and discriminatory" taxation. It urges an organized, systematic campaign planned under intelligent direction, to acquaint legislative representatives with theatre problems.

City Cuts Assessments On 13 New York Theatres

Cuts in assessment totaling $1,305,000 on 13 motion picture theatres in New York City were announced last week by William Stanley, acting president of the department of taxes and assessments. The cuts range from $200,000 down to $50,000, the largest, $200,000 being on Loew's State and on the Roxy. The latter's assessment was cut to $3,650,000.

MUSIC RATE FOR THEATRES SET AT 10, 15 AND 20 CENTS PER SEAT

Houses Seating 800 or Less Pay Old Rate of 10 Cents, Others Win Reduction from Increased Scale Effective October 1

The Exhibitor's Emergency Committee and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers finally adjusted their differences on Monday over the fees that should be paid by exhibitors for licenses to reproduce in theatres the copyrighted music of the Society's members. Both sides accepted the following new scale:

Theatres seating 800 or less will continue to pay the old rate of 10 cents a seat annually—a maximum of $80 for the largest theatre in this group.

Theatres seating between 801 and 1,599 will pay 15 cents a seat annually, or $120.15 for the smallest and $239.85 for the largest theatres in this group, the new rate representing a 50 per cent increase over the old rate of 10 cents.

Theatres seating 1,600 and more will pay 20 cents a seat annually, which is equivalent to $160 for the smallest theatre in this group and $550 for the structure seating 5,500, this rate representing a 100 per cent increase.

The Emergency Committee, representing 8,000 theatre owners, and E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society, whose membership comprises virtually all the song writers and publishers, said Monday that both had gained concessions through the new scale, which is a considerable modification of the rates originally announced by the Society last August and would have effected increases of from 20 to 1,000 per cent, beginning October 1.

Called Equitable Solution

At the conclusion of the final conference, held Monday at ASCAP headquarters in the Paramount Building in Times Square, New York, the exhibitors' committee said: "We feel that the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee considers there has been made a fair and equitable solution of a vexatious question. We have been fairly treated by the American Society and we have fairly treated the Society. It is hoped that exhibitors generally will now support the conclusions that their committee has reached. They may be assured that had the committee not represented them in this matter the rates they would have had to pay for a license to publicly perform copyrighted music in their theatres would have been substantially higher than those that are provided for in the new agreement."

At the same time, speaking for the Society, Mr. Mills issued this statement over the telephone: "The American Society feels that the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee considered the matter fairly, and in spite of the depressed condition in the industry it represents it has given the composers and authors of music a seriously needed increase in revenue. The Society relies on the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee to fulfill its pledge that the exhibitors of the country will support the conclusions of the committee."

Variously participating as members of the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee were: Walter Vincent, chairman; Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Edward Levy, MPTOA counsel; Sam Dembow, Jr., former Paramount Publix theatre executive, who since has resigned to become associated with National Screen; Major Leslie E. Thompson, RKO Theatres; Leopold Friedman, Loew's; Milton Wiseman, counsel for the New York Independent Theatre Owners' Association; W. T. Powers, Fox; Harry Pimstein, RKO, and Leon Netter and Sidney Justin, of Paramount.

The new rates are retroactive to midnight of October 1. Exhibitor who have paid for a new license since October 1 on the basis of the much higher scale that had been effected by the Society on October 1, and which was the subject of the dispute between ASCAP and the Emergency Council, will receive an immediate adjustment.

The higher scale which was nullified Monday by the acceptance of the modified schedule would have levied on a typical first-run 2,000-seat theatre a license charge of $1,275, as against the old royalty of $200 paid on the flat rate of 10 cents a seat, and as compared with $400 under the new scale adopted this week.

Retain Right to Testify

Many exhibitors have been paying the previous high scale since it went into effect October 1 on the advice of both Allied States and MPTOA leaders who warned that any owner—whether circuit or independent—whose license had expired and who continued to perform publicly such copyrighted music without having obtained a new license, are liable to prosecution in the civil courts under the copyright laws, which provide for a minimum "fine" of $250, plus court costs, for each violation, payable to the Society.

Acceptance of the modified rate schedule by the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee does not deprive theatre owners of their right to testify in the Government's pending anti-trust action against the Society, nor do they lose their right to file an individual action at any time. The Emergency Committee had contemplated court action to restrain the Society from enacting the high rate that was abandoned this week in favor of the 10-15-20-cent rate, but subsequently decided that the Government action was sufficiently embracing to include the complaints of theatre owners.

ASCAP Moves Office

The American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers will move its New York offices next month to the RCA Building in Radio City from the Paramount Building. Space on the 45th floor has been leased for a period of 10 years.

Will Kelly, Color Inventor, Is Dead

William Van Doren Kelly, the inventor of the Prizma process, first motion picture color process worker to produce color-in-the-film, died in Los Angeles September 30, aged 57.

Mr. Kelly's connection with the motion picture dates from the early days of the American Biograph & Mutoscope Company. He was first employed as a decorator concerned with the installation of Mutoscope's peep show parlors about 1897 and went to Europe in the service of the Biograph concern. In France he came in contact with the color work of Charles Urban in the process known as Kinemacolor, the original projection filter method.

Kinemacolor encountered considerable market resistance in that it required a special projector, operating at twice normal speed for the optical superimposition of successive blue-green and red-orange images cast through the synchronously rotated filter sectors. Kelly sought to simplify color projection by putting the color in the film. In 1918 Broadway saw a demonstration at the Strand theatre of the Prizma process in which Kelly achieved a moderate success.

All subsequent color processes are related to or in a sense derivative from Kelly's experimentations.

The career of the Prizma company was more marked by color than profit and eventually Mr. Kelly withdrew to concern himself with new and variant processes, including Kellycolor, first of the bi-pack color methods. He was remarkably skillful in photo-chemistry and the manipulation of film. More than 10 years ago he closed his laboratories in New Jersey and went to Los Angeles.

Mr. Kelly was a native of New Jersey, born at Trenton. He is survived by two sons and a daughter. The funeral was held in Los Angeles.

Trendle Booking Unit in 12 Houses

Twelve Detroit theatres are now using the buying and booking service of the United Detroit Service Booking Corporation and more are expected to join, George W. Trendle, president, said in New York Monday.

The booking corporation is in no way connected with United Detroit Theatres Corporation, the Paramount subsidiary, Mr. Trendle said. He explained that he created the service organization specifically to help exhibitors in buying and booking problems. Mr. Trendle said the company does not actually buy and book for the exhibitor; rather it acts in an advisory capacity, helping them arrange their schedules.

SUPREME COURT DENIES A REVIEW OF TRI-ERGON SOUND PATENT DECISION

Decision in Effect Upholds Validity of "Flywheel" and Double-Printing Patents But Doesn't Give Fox Any Damages

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The United States supreme court at Washington, on Monday, in effect upheld the validity of the highly controversial Tri-Ergon sound patents controlled personally by William Fox, the silent man of mystery in the film world for the last four years, when it denied Paramount Publix Corporation as amicus curiae on behalf of substantially the whole industry, a review of a lower court decision holding that it infringed upon a Tri-Ergon patent.

Immediately, Broadway began to indulge in its usual wild and premature speculation of the potential import that the decision may have on the users of motion picture sound equipment. True, it appears that the decision has some significance. But, no one could venture an opinion of its extent with any definiteness.

This much is known: William Fox, the historic foe of the onetime great Motion Picture Patents Company, has for a half-dozen years envisioned himself as a motion picture patents company with purposes and plans as broad in scope as those of the "trust" against which he fought with force, finesse and injunction all the way from a nickelodeon on the East Side of New York's Fourteenth Street to the White House in the bitter, violent days of 1910-14.

Developments in recent years in the courts have established somewhat the nature of Mr. Fox's scheme by which he hopes, some day, to attack practically every company in the industry in order to collect large royalties on two sound mechanisms which he bought from three unknown German inventors for "far less than a million dollars," quoting Daniel Rosenblatt, a Fox attorney.

Would Assess Everyone

To Mr. Fox's enormous holdings, variously reported worth $50,000,000 to $200,000,000—a considerable part of which was gained in an extensive short-selling movement in stocks, resulting in a summons to appear before a United States Senate investigating committee—he would add tribute from each motion picture producer, theatre owner and manufacturer of sound equipment, if and when the courts decreed that his two Tri-Ergon patents were being infringed.

The supreme court's denial this week of a review of a lower court decision upholding the validity of the patents—part of the 2,000 basic patents involved in sound recording and reproducing mechanisms—does not at the same time give to Mr. Fox any damages that he might claim. It is reasonable to assume that the complexities of the courts will postpone for another long period the extent of Mr. Fox's financial interests, if any, in the system of sound devices now in use.

In this connection, Mr. Rosenblatt, attorney, said publicly Monday evening that the supreme court's action in the case of Mr. Fox's claims for his socalled "flywheel" patent and his patent on a process of double-printing sound and film, would pave the way for royalty suits on the wholesale. However, Mr. Rosenblatt let it be known that the "big guns" of the industry would be the first to be talked to. The socalled "small" exhibitors, he assumed, would automatically "fall in line."

Regardless, the decision failed to interrupt the routine business of making and merchandising motion pictures.

Erpi Preparing Statement

Erpi's legal experts, unperturbed, were understood to be preparing a statement of its policy in which the technicalities would be explained. Both Electrical Research and RCA Photophone, under their licensee agreements, participated in the defense of their licensees, which, besides Paramount, included its circuit subsidiary, Altoona Publix Corporation and Wilmer and Vincent.

Under the terms of the licensing agreements existing between Electrical Research Products and RCA Photophone and their producer and exhibitor licensees, the two sound manufacturers agree to defend the licensees to the extent of their investment in Erpi or RCA recording and reproducing equipment, in any case involving patent infringement.

The supreme court ruling this week, while admittedly one of the most important made in recent years concerning the mechanism of the motion picture, climaxed a series of litigations in the lower courts. At one time, Federal Judge Campbell, in United States district court in New York, declared the Tri-Ergon patents were invalid, that Mr. Fox's interests had shown no "commercial success with them," and that Tri-Ergon had made no real contribution to the art. "The success of the defendant (Paramount), its licensor (Electric Research) and its licensees is due to many inventions of the Western Electric Company, without which success would have been impossible," the court said. Electrical Research is the commercial distributor of the Western Electric sound devices.

A Personal Venture

Mr. Fox's American Tri-Ergon Corporation is a patent-holding company organized by him as a personal venture for the express purpose of exploiting commercially in the United States the inventions of three Germans, Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Joseph Engl, who had worked on the systems in a Berlin attic since 1900.

Paramount, in petitioning the supreme court for a review of the lower court's decisions, said at Washington that, "as construed by the courts below, the patents are so broad as to permit the respondents (Fox-Tri-Ergon) to claim tribute from practically everyone who has produced or exhibited talking motion pictures or has done the developing and printing of sound and motion picture records."

Although Tri-Ergon's various complaints specified no definite amount as being involved in damages, they charged that, as a result of alleged infringements, Tri-Ergon has suffered "great and irreparable loss, damage and injury" and is "deprived of great gains and profits." Further, the complaints that were set forth in some of the lower court actions modestly asked that the defendants be required "to pay over to the plaintiff all gains, profits and advantages earned or received."

Attorney for Fox Says Ruling Paves Way for Wholesale Royalty Suits, But Routine Business Goes On as Usual

The Tri-Ergon holdings played an important part in Upton Sinclair's book about the life of William Fox, published independently last year. In the narrative, which was related by Mr. Fox to Mr. Sinclair, Fox charged the bankers and the electrics with wresting from him control of his motion picture companies (for $21,000,000). The Fox-Sinclair writing combination made much of the importance of the Tri-Ergon patents as one of the basic reasons why reputed "outside" interests sought to gain control of his film corporations.

Mr. Fox and Mr. Sinclair appeared during the preparation of the book to be having a merry time figuring out the possible royalties that Mr. Fox would collect through Tri-Ergon, which they "roughlv" estimated at that time as approximating $1,300,000,000, or, as Mr. Fox so aptly described it in the book, a sum of money "equal to the wealth of a nation."

The Patents Involved

The two patents involved in the litigation are:

(1) U. S. Patent No. 1,713,726, Vogt, et al, granted May 21, 1929, popularly known as the "flywheel patent," relating to certain methods and apparatus for uniformly moving the sound record film under the control of inertia, either in record or reproducing machines and utilizing sound controlled light in translating the sound to or from the film; this patent also relates to the photoelectric cell when used with such reproducing apparatus as is generally supposed to be the present practice; and,

(2) U. S. Patent No. 1,825,598, Vogt, et al, granted September 29th, 1931, relating to the process for producing combined sound and picture film by photographing the sound and pictures on separate films so that they may be developed separately, and then printing both records side by side on a single film.

Both patents cover the inventions of Messrs. Vogt, Massolle and Engl, all of Berlin, Germany, who applied for American patent rights in 1912 and again in 1922, according to a history of the mechanisms set forth by Tri-Ergon in 1931.

In 1924, the inventors assigned their rights to Tri-Ergon, Ltd., of St. Gall, Switzerland, which in turn sold the American rights to William Fox in 1928. Mr. Fox then vested these rights with the American Tri-Ergon Corporation, of which he is president and presumably sole owner. Mr. Fox at that time was still president and in complete control of the Fox Film and Fox Theatre enterprises and he took those patent rights with him when he sold his Fox motion picture holdings to the banking interests in 1931.

Started Litigation in 1930

Mr. Fox first started his Tri-Ergon patent litigation when he and Dr. Lee De Forest engaged, during 1930 and 1931, in a fiery battle in the courts over the priority of Patent No. 1,825,598 covering the system of double printing. Mr. Fox's rights were upheld when the United States Patent Appeals Office at Washington overruled Dr. De Forest's claim that the Tri-Ergon patent interfered with De Forest patents. Again, in November, 1931, the Supreme Court ordered the Patents Office to grant Tri-Ergon a patent on No. 1,825,598.

LITIGATION SERIES STARTED IN 1930

Previous to the litigation with Dr. De Forest, Mr. Fox was said to have considered taking legal action against the motion picture industry, charging infringements of his patents. Such action was understood to have been contemplated in 1930 after conferences starting in the latter part of 1929, with equipment manufacturers and motion picture producers, had failed to bring forth any tangible requests from within the industry to procure licenses.

Then, on Nov. 27, 1931, the American Tri-Ergon Corporation, listing headquarters at 10 West 47th street, New York, served the following notice "to the sound picture industry," over the signature of Mr. Fox:

"Infringement suits have recently been instituted under these patents against representative concerns in the industry. Further suits will be brought, if necessary, against infringing film producers and theatre operators and against manufacturers of infringing apparatus, for the purpose of restraining all unlicensed use of these inventions."

The suits referred to, representing the first filed by Tri-Ergon in the industry, were instituted in mid-November of 1931 against the Photophone Division of the Radio Corporation of America, Electrical Research Products, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures and Paramount Publix Corporation. At the same time, Tri-Ergon mailed notices of possible infringement to 100 producers, distributors and equipment manufacturers.

Representing the Fox-Tri-Ergon interests in all the proceedings down through the years was the New York law firm of Hirsh, Newman, Reass and Becker.

The 1931 actions were filed in federal court at Wilmington by former Federal Judge Hugh Morris, as Mr. Fox's attorney, and charged Erpi and RCA with infringing the socalled "flywheel" patent, while Paramount and RKO were charged with infringing the double print patent. Injunctions and accounting of profits were asked in the four suits.

The question of validity of the Tri-Ergon patents again was brought to the courts in February, 1932, in a second tussle between Mr. Fox's company and Lee De Forest, the argument going to trial in the federal court at Wilmington.

Both the Tri-Ergon actions against RCA, Erpi, Paramount and RKO and the Tri-Ergon argument with De Forest over patent priority carried over on the federal court calendars until, finally, on Nov. 28, 1932, Justice Marcus B. Campbell, sitting in federal court in Brooklyn, started hearings on that phase of the litigation involving Paramount Publix.

Other Suits Filed

Meanwhile, other suits had been filed by Tri-Ergon at Harrisburg, Pa., against Altoona Publix Theatres, Inc., and against Wilmer and Vincent Corporation and Locust Street Real Estate Company, all circuit enterprises.

Mr. Fox lost the first round when, in August, 1933, Judge Campbell, ruling in the Paramount case, declared that the claims in Mr. Fox's suit charging infringement of a patent for a process of producing combined picture and sound showed no improvement "over the prior art." The court said:

"No commercial success is shown by the plaintiff, and the patentees made no real contribution to the art. The success of the defendant, its licensor and its licensees is due to the many inventions of the Western Electric Company, without which success would have been impossible.

"The patent is invalid."

Defense Assumed by Erpi

Electric Research Products assumed the defense for Paramount, successfully dislodging at that time Mr. Fox's claims for relief from alleged patent infringement through an injunction and damages.

The Fox-Tri-Ergon interests had made 11 claims under the patent, but subsequently filed two disclaimers in which it was admitted that certain of its claims were too broad. Paramount contended invalidity of the entire patent and non-infringement, which the court upheld.

Judge Campbell's decision appeared to have considerably weakened the Fox case, and Mr. Fox lost further ground at about the same time, in the summer of 1933, when Judge Cohn, of the supreme court of New York State, ruled that his court had no jurisdiction over the type of controversy represented by a motion sought by Tri-Ergon against an independent exhibitor, Leo Brecher, alleging infringement of the Tri-Ergon patents in the use of a sound reproducer in Mr. Brecher's New York theatre.

The court upheld the claim of Mr. Brecher's defense attorney, Louis Nizer, that the Fox patent infringement action filed against an individual exhibitor in such a case did not fall within the scope of any state court, but properly became part of the consideration of the federal courts.

Tri-Ergon Wins Appeal

However, in the following December, Judge Albert W. Johnson, sitting in United States district court at Scranton, Pa., granted Tri-Ergon an injunction restraining the Wilmer and Vincent theatres and Altoona Publix Corporation from making further use of sound reproducing equipment which the court claimed infringed the Fox patents.

Tri-Ergon appealed Judge Campbell's decision invalidating its patents in the Paramount case, and won on the appeal, the United States circuit court of appeals ruling, in June, 1934, that Tri-Ergon has a valid claim and that Paramount was infringing that patent relating to the sound-on-film double printing process.

In this decision, the court declared that "while it might be said that superficially the positives"—which Tri-Ergon set out to establish were produced by its processes—"are similar to positives produced by single film processes, still the function and effect is different and in the practical art that difference has been demonstrated.

Meanwhile, the circuit defendants which had lost their case in Pennsylvania had also lost an appeal, which left Mr. Fox the victor on both fronts. However, his claims were again challenged when Paramount, Altoona Publix and Wilmer and Vincent moved, last summer, for a review of the decisions of the appeals courts. This was denied last Monday by the supreme court, and in effect the supreme court affirmed the decisions of the lower courts upholding the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents. RCA and Erpi both defended the petitioners.

Significance Admitted in Plea

Admitting their significance to the motion picture industry as a whole, the petitions filed by Paramount with the supreme court at Washington said:

"As construed by the courts below, the patents are so broad as to permit the respondents to claim tribute from practically every one who has produced or exhibited talking motion pictures, or has manufactured equipment for recording or reproducing sound with motion pictures, or has done the developing and printing of sound and motion picture records.

"The reproducing apparatus is used in homes, schools and churches and by the Army, Navy and other governmental agencies, as well as by the motion picture producers and motion picture theatre owners throughout the United States."

De Forest Case in Favor of Fox

At about the same time that the United States supreme court at Washington was preparing to deny Paramount a petition for review "on behalf of substantially the whole motion picture industry," Judge John Nields, in United States district court at Wilmington, brought to a conclusion the long fight between Mr. Fox and Lee De Forest over patent priority rights, deciding in favor of Fox and issuing a decree that letters of patent be issued to Tri-Ergon.

The point at issue was the patent rights to a "glow lamp" invention used in the development of sound-on-film. Judge Nields ruled that Dr. De Forest, regarded by some as the "father" of talking films, was not the first inventor of this glow lamp, important in sound photography. Further, Judge Nields said that the three German inventors, Josef Engl, Joseph Massolle and Hans Vogt, who had assigned their rights to Fox's Tri-Ergon Corporation, "are the joint and first inventors of the invention" and that the patent office in Washington had erred in refusing them a patent and granting such a patent to De Forest.

Meanwhile, no disposition has been made in the courts of the cases filed by Tri-Ergon at Wilmington, in November, 1931, against RKO, RCA Photophone and Erpi, which actions were instituted at the same time as the Paramount suit.

THE TRI-ERGON PATENTS

Two patents are involved in the widely discussed Tri-Ergon patents litigation instigated variously by William Fox in the courts over a period of years. One patent relates to that part of the sound mechanism popularly called the "fly-wheel," the other to a process for producing combined sound and film by photographing the sound and pictures on separate films so they may be developed individually.

QUOTA FOR AUSTRALIA AVERTED; HANDS OFF ON OTHER LEGISLATION

Commissioner, After Hearing Evidence Requiring 4,000 Pages of Type, Says Federal Control Would Be a Mistake

By CAS. MARSHALL
Sydney Correspondence

After all the excitement engendered by Commissioner F. W. Marks' long awaited report of his motion picture survey for the New South Wales government, with his recommendation of an Australian quota, it seems that the whole matter has been dropped, for at least a year.

Out of Melbourne, to which a government representative from Sydney had been sent with the thought of agreeing upon legislation to be framed for the two states, comes word that the proposal was shelved for two reasons: failure of the large interests, the small producers and the exhibitors to agree upon details for a quota, and an intimation that the British industry feared unfavorable results for British product and therefore might cancel the advantages it now gives the Australian business.

The New South Wales government thereupon thought it over and decided not to press the matter, in view of its standing policy of helping British producers as well as the Australian. It is expected that a quota measure will be placed before the new Parliament next year.

Commissioner Marks had emphasized the danger of interference by the Government in the film business, the quota suggestion being the lone exception.

Mr. Marks declared that the internal troubles of the business bore no marked difference from those of other businesses whose rights and wrongs were settled without aid of Government intervention. Among things opposed by him is the proposed establishment of a special Board of Control to regulate the industry. This step is received with marked favor by all concerned.

Interim reports had been submitted by Mr. Marks opposing suggested restriction of theatre licenses and advocating an Australian quota. He now proposed legislative action introducing a quota system to force every exhibitor in N. S. W. to screen a set percentage of Australian features each year.

Advises Against Regulation

No legislation ws recommended in respect of the following:

Restriction of licenses for picture theatres to British subjects.

Limitation of blind and/or block bookings of films, or a contract clause which would confer upon exhibitors a right of rejecting a percentage of the films specified. (This recommendation is not to be interpreted as in any way negativing the recommendation upon an Australian film quota which reads: "In order to enable an exhibitor to comply with the quota requirements he shall have the right, anything in any contract notwithstanding, to reject such number of films other than Australian quota films as will enable him to comply with the quota requirements.")

Regulation of film hiring forms of contract between distributors and exhibitors.

Calls Complaints Only Sectional

The whole situation was summarized by Mr. Marks thus:

"It will be noted that my recommendations in general are opposed to legislative action by the Government in respect of matters complained of at the inquiry. I have made it clear for the most part that this is not because of any lack of recognition of the extent to which many of the witnesses are prejudiced by the conditions complained of by them. I am of the opinion, however, that very potent reasons are required to justify the introduction of new legislation to alter conditions in an industry which have been evolved under and comply with existing legislation.

"Notwithstanding this view, I consider that in respect of one issue raised at the inquiry the circumstances are such as to justify special legislation, this being the introduction of a quota for Australian films. I regard this matter as one of national importance, and my recommendation is actuated by what I believe to be the public interest, as distinct from sectional interests of the film industry."

Hearing evidence which ran into almost 4,000 pages of type, Mr. Marks expressed the opinion that all complaints related to only sectional interests. He said:

"No single matter was brought forward in respect of which all sections of the industry joined in asking for relief or redress, nor were there any matters introduced under this heading which called for action in the public interest. It was surprising to me to find so few undesirable features brought forward and how comparatively unimportant many of these were."

The Government inquiry just completed is mainly attributed to the film war waged between distributors and General Theatres Corporation. This has now been definitely ironed out, the corporation having signed contracts with nearly all distributors, the agreements so worded that repetition of a deadlock is almost impossible.

Mr. Marks' advice to the Government "to lay off" the motion picture industry should make those in charge of local film affairs quite proud of having piloted the business in a manner to gain this tribute. The local producers who, at the beginning of the inquiry were conspicuous by their absence, fought earnestly for the quota.

CASTING CENTER "WITH A HEART"

Campbell MacCulloch, newly appointed chief of the central casting bureau in Hollywood, plans an office with a heart. Faced with the problem of trying to find sufficient extra roles for all those engaged in the work, which he sees as impossible, Mr. MacCulloch plans to treat the extra as a human problem, seeking to assist him in his difficulties, personal and financial, as well as professional. Although the ranks have been trimmed from 17,500 to 8,000, there are still more applicants than jobs, says the director.

"PLENTY OF GOOD PICTURE ANGLES"

But "A Ship Comes In" Must First Be Overhauled, Says DeCasseres; Three Other Stage Plays Analyzed

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

A SHIP COMES IN

A grand theme handled by a man who didn't know how to key it. He wabbled between comedy and tragedy, between melodrama and farce, and wound up by producing one of the flattest failures of the season when he should have had a gate-crasher.

There are plenty of good picture angles in it; but for such purposes it will have to be overhauled as completely as my 1918 ulster.

The play is in ten scenes. It is by Joseph Anthony, with Augustin Duncan directing (produced by Richard Herndon and John C. Mayer). The alleged theme is the inherent humbug in some forms of psychoanalysis and psychiatry.

The scenes are laid in Vienna and on the high seas; but for picture purposes I recommend that Vienna be cut out—that burg has enough trouble without loading it with further crimes.

Dr. Bard, greatest of all psychiatrists, is coming to America to claim the million-dollar award offered by H. Gordon Mortimer, American Croesus, for the man who can best do wonders with complexes.

On the S.S. Manhattan we find, besides the doctor, Mortimer himself, his sex-wild niece, a former sweetheart of Doc. Bard's (the majestic Nana Bryant, the idol of the Coast), and two of Bard's recently cured assistants—a fine cluster of thin-shelled nuts.

There are an attempted murder; an unblushing proposition from a woman to a man; a sobersides takes to booze—and, worst of all, Doc. Bard himself relapses to his donjuanery.

Now, all this should be played comically. An idea with these magnificent possibilities should not be lost. Give the script to Ben and Charley. It's a perfect Hecht-McArthur spoof.

The play was still further reduced to b. o. nix by the Dr. Bard of Jacob Ben-Ami, who talks like an actor, walks like an actor, and, worst of all, acts like an actor.

The only two believable characters in this mess are portrayed by Miss Bryant and Calvin Thomas as Mortimer. However—

ALLEY-CAT

Alan Dinehart came out of the West long enough to concoct a play with Samuel Shipman based on a story by Lawrence Pohle. Some of the dialogue and wise-cracking are particularly skunkified.

The play is called "Alley Cat" (Alan Dinehart directing and Bernard Klawans producing). Mr. Dinehart no doubt has ideas about doing this on the Coast, so he also took over the lead in the play, which, truth to tell, is a threadbare, creaky affair, but which will make, I doubt not, one of those pictures you drop in on when you've got an hour to waste.

The lead is Carl Vinal. Carl is living in enforced modest circumstances in Greenwich Village. I may say, in passing, that any one who deliberately goes to live in that section of New York deserves all that is coming to him.

Anyhow, Carl is a broker. He's broke. His wife is getting a divorce from him. So he thinks he'll take the short-cut to Oblivion—gas.

Just as he is about to do what is probably the only gentlemanly act in his life who should pop into the window but a Village alley-cat. This is Audrey Christie, the "Stonewall Jackson" girl of "Sailor, Beware!"

Audrey is his Little Eva. She jacks up Carl's spirits. Eating and drinking, he begins to laugh. Why not live—and see what Mr. Farley's next new stamp will look like?

Well (again—in fact, well, well), in strides the wife (Kay Strozzi). She hadn't got the divorce, and besides Carl has a genuine, blown-in-the-bottle three-months-old baby.

Carl and his Audrey are As One finally. The wife knows Real Village Love is Indestructo.

Dr. Dinehart did a good job with a messy play. There are several Village characters for "comic relief," as they say in "Hamlet."

THE DISTAFF SIDE

Maybe I ought to like the play (and potential picture) by John Van Druten in spite of the fact that most of Mr. Van Druten's theatre seems to me to be a mixture of water and sugar poured into arteries laden with anemic corpuscles.

For "The Distaff Side" shows up the weaknesses and charming imbecilities of woman—woman from her twentieth year to the toothless-bitter age of eighty or ninety. Therefore we men ought to chortle.

But I must report that for all the good acting, in the main, of this British importation; for all the high-priced English deahs and theyahs (which is not English for dear and there); for all the vivid characterizations of Mr. Van Druten's men and women—"The Distaff Side" is a hollow piece of work cleverly stuffed to look like a great domestic crisis.

It is hollow because it is all shell. And this shell fooled most of the critics. The picture angles in the play are threadbare and not at all exciting. It might hit the big dough with a strong cast—for most of our fans go to see their screen sweeties and heroes, and not a story.

They have been living clandestinely in sin. And the "drama" is the revelation of this fact to the mother, Evie, a voluntary widow, serene, bloodless, bromidic.

But the mother says in exquisite Mayfair the equivalent of Boloney! And then she later rejects handsome Charles Bryant as a husband. It is an unsympathetic role.

Toby is, unconsciously, a scream of a creation. He is on his way to Hollywood to become a camera-man, or maybe a pencil-holder for Sir Cecil. He has puny spells, the flu, gets delirious, and refuses to have his hair cut.

This guy would last about one hour in the old Bear Pit out thar where the San Gabriel doesn't flow.

The mother, Evie, is Sybil Thorndike, who hasn't been here for twenty-five yeahs. She has been made a Dame Commander of the British Empire. If there is any psychological depth to her role, she does not exude it. I have never seen such listless acting.

THE GREAT WALTZ

"The Great Waltz" is the most gorgeous and riotously hollow musical show that has hit our stage since my memory runneth not to the contrary.

It is a scenic souse and a color blare done by Max Gordon (producer) and Hassard Short, who conceived and directed it.

But its picture value will lie in the b. o. return of its predicted long run at the mammoth Rockefeller Centre Theatre, its title and the fact that the musical score is made up of the rhythms of the elder and younger Johann Strauss.

In spite of the lavish display of costumes of old Vienna Military and art life; in spite of the corybantic and gyrating sets, the movable orchestra, the blazing columns, the fireworks and the chandeliers; in spite of the beautiful dancing of the Strauss waltzes by the Albertina Rasch Ballet; and in spite, finally, of the superb finale of the "The Beautiful Danube" (the finest stunt ever seen on our musical stage), "The Great Waltz" simply does not click for me.

The book is dull, static, outmoded, and is merely an excuse to sing the grand Strauss waltzes, and the Strauss waltzes do not gain by being sung. They are purely instrumental. A voice deflects from the sheerly sensuous ear-charm of these immortal compositions.

The story bores along fritteringly and raggedly on the theme of the rivalry between the elder Strauss and "Schani," the younger Johann, who was destined to become the immortal Strauss.

There is a love-affair, of course (Vienna, without the ladies?—you may as well try to think of Hollywood without picture studios). And many characters (many, many) flit through this tale.

Of persons you know there are Solly Ward, Jessie Busley, Ernest Cossart, Guy Robertson, H. Reeves-Smith, Alexandra Danilova and Robert C. Fischer.

There is no action in the picture sense whatever. The Great Waltz" is for the eye and ear only, and the big noise is Hassard Short. But you can't sing Strauss!—not for me.

THREE GROUPS MOVE TO DEVELOP "BETTER APPRECIATION" OF FILMS

Series of 24 One-Reel Subjects Taken from Outstanding Features Will Be Presented to Social Units by MPPDA

Given impetus by the recent nationwide church campaign, three separate moves were made in the week within the industry itself and in the field of education to develop a keener appreciation of better motion pictures as a medium for entertainment and educational and cultural advancement. These were:

1. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Will H. Hays, President, through a committee of educators and psychologists will present to schools, churches and social agencies a series of 24 one-reel subjects taken from "distinguished feature photoplays," to serve in character education programs.

2. The Motion Picture Foundation of the United States of America, Dr. William B. Millar, secretary, announced its intention of creating a regular supply of motion pictures "which will satisfy the demand for wholesome and intelligent entertainment."

3. The Motion Picture Research Council, Dr. William Harrison Short, director, adopted another new set of "national policies" embracing, besides a legislative program, the encouragement of the teaching of film appreciation in high schools and voluntary social groups, and the fostering of the organization of local non-theatrical exhibitions as a partial solution of the problem of films for children.

At the triennial General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, to be held in Atlantic City starting October 17, 150 bishops and delegates will hear formal announcement of the plan of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors to present, at once, a series of 24 one-reel motion pictures.

The series, tentatively called "Secrets of Success," will be distributed, without charge, to schools, churches and social agencies by the Hays organization upon the specific recommendation of a committee composed of Howard M. LeSourd, Ph.D., dean of Boston University Graduate School, chairman; Phyllis Blanchard, Ph.D., psychologist, Child Welfare Clinic, Philadelphia; Florence Hale, Litt.D., editor, The Graded Teacher, former president of the National Education Association, and Mark A. May, Ph.D., executive secretary, Institute of Human Relations, Yale University.

This committee, appointed at the Public Relations Conference of educators and religious authorities, held in New York in 1929, has for five years been conducting investigations. The important finding was that, in view of the widespread demand, definite efforts should be made to provide suitable motion pictures for religious and character education.

In 1931 a program was formulated. The type of picture most widely approved was one which presented a life-situation or problem that could be discussed among groups. The plan was abondoned only after financing seemed impossible.

The new plan provided that these life-situations be taken from productions already made. Previous production by various social interests was said to have lost its effectiveness largely through its obvious intent.

The new plan was accepted by the MPPDA board late in August, the directors pledging themselves to place at the disposal of the committee whatever features the committee requested.

The MPPDA members and the committee agreed that the first 24 subjects shall be distributed for experimentation.

Initial experiments were carried out with two short subjects cut from the Fox film, "Young America," one subject from Warners' "Alias the Doctor," and two from Universal's "Tom Brown of Culver."

The first seven finished subjects to be used in the demonstration now beginning have been taken from Paramount's "Huckleberry Finn," "Skippy," "Sookey," "Broken Lullaby," "Cradle Song" and "The Sign of the Cross." The remaining 17 subjects will be ready by November 1.

The pictures have been designed to suit three age groups: children, adolescents and adults, although some of them, it is believed, will serve equally well for all age levels. Subjects are selected only by the four committeemen. Neither the MPPDA nor its company members have voice in the selections. Nor will they have any control in selecting the institutions at which the pictures will be shown.

"Real Cooperators" to Get Films

Because of the limited number of prints that will be made available wide distribution is impossible, and only those individuals and groups who will become "real cooperators" will be able to get pictures, but "in as many different situations as possible."

Physical distribution will be made, at first, directly from the Hays headquarters in New York. The Hays organization will pay the costs of printing and the like. Later, films will be handled from exchanges in territories where the demand is greatest. In most cases they will be routed from showing to showing.

There will be no rental for non-theatrical use during the demonstration period. All groups or schools or churches showing the pictures are expected to pay transportation charges. No admission may be charged to any showing by those using these pictures on the aforementioned basis. The sponsors desire that it shall never be a profit-making enterprise.

When the project emerges from the experimental stage and is going in full swing, nominal rentals will be charged to cover only the costs of editing the pictures, of the preparation of printed "Discussion Outlines," and of actual distribution. All prints will be made of 35 mm. safety film, with the groups and agencies who wish to use the series limited to the following plans:

1. COOPERATION WITH LOCAL THEATRES

Arrangements can be made with local theatre managers to have special showings of the group. A suitable time can be selected when the regular programs in the theatres are not scheduled, such as Saturday mornings. The films may become a part of a "Special Program for Children," at which other pictures might be shown, such as Walt Disney's creations and educational shorts.

Under such an arrangement the actual discussion would take place in schools, churches, or at regular meetings of the organizations. Printed questions will be supplied.

2. USE IN SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES

There are some schools, churches and social agencies that are prepared to make the "Secrets of Success" a part of their program immediately because they are equipped with 35 mm. sound projectors. Such institutions will be guided by a special manual.

In public schools the pictures probably will be shown in the auditorium to a large group, followed by a talk or discussion, or by individual classroom talks.

In churches and social institutions showings can be arranged for particular groups, allowing time for the discussion to follow.

All requests are to be made directly to the committee, through the chairman, Howard M. LeSourd, at 688 Boylston street, Boston.

Showing at Episcopal Convention

The first public showing will be conducted at the Episcopal convention at Atlantic City next week. There will be no schedule of release dates, the series being made available for individual booking at any time.

A spokesman at MPDDA headquarters said the organization is presenting the material and is volunteering the facilities of its members to the committee of four, who are doing all editorial and compilation work and are said to have absolute charge of the program.

Prints will be made available at some later date on 16 mm. stock.

The committee of educators in charge has had summarized a more specific outline of the purposes of the project for use of educators participating in the plan, as follows:

1. To assist individuals and agencies in realizing the objectives of their character education programs by providing useful materials.

2. To give individuals practice in the technique of constructive thinking, involving analysis of the situation and evaluation of possible outcomes.

3. To develop through discussion the habit of delaying reaction to situations until one has thought through the problems involved.

4. To assist individuals and groups in setting up for themselves scales of values, and to commit them to the practical use of those which they rank highest.

5. To broaden experience and understanding of the important issues of life.

"The Secrets of Success" series for the school year 1934-35, containing 24 subjects, represents only a small part of the film material available. Economy in production did not permit a selec-

NO SMOKING IS DETROIT EDICT

Effective this week, smoking in the motion picture theatres of Detroit will be an offense, punishable by a 30-day jail sentence, $100 fine or both, in accordance with a law just passed by the Common Council. The Board of Fire Commissioners recommended the new legislation, terming smoking in theatres a fire hazard. Both patron and theatre manager are liable in violations.

tive process that would cover the full range of possible problems and situations, but the committee feels that the comprehensiveness of those pictures indicates the possibilities of the project.

The committee has reviewed 100 or more photoplays in the selection. Current pictures are not at present available to the committee, but only photoplays of the last two or three years have been included. Pictures for mere entertainment have been excluded.

The committee set up the following criteria on the basis of which the pictures included in the series were selected:

1. The situations presented should be real to the group to which they are shown; that is, they should deal with practical problems either present or representative of those likely to be encountered in the future.

2. So far as possible the situations should be typical—common to the group as a whole.

3. The situations should be sufficiently complex to arouse differences of opinion.

4. The problems raised should be vital—that is, definite values should be at stake in decisions made along these lines in actual life.

5. The problems raised should be such as would lead to further thinking and reading.

Extensive Manual Prepared

In an expansive manual the committee points out how teacher cooperation in the further development of the program may be most helpful. Also explained are: the theory of the series and the general plan of distribution; the relation of the various concepts of character to this series; an outline of the procedure recommended in the use of the films; an indication of the variety of programs of character education both as to organization and method in order that the pictures and texts may be utilized to best advantage; and, a review of the accepted objectives of character education so that the reasons for the selection of particular pictures and the form of the discussion outlines will be better understood.

Dr. Le Sourd, chairman, is a professor of religious education. Born in Cincinnati on November 18, 1889, he received a degree of Bachelor of Arts at Ohio Wesleyan University in 1911, an A. M. degree at Columbia in 1913, and, from the same college his Ph.D., in 1929. In 1915 he graduated from Union Theological Seminary and was ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Dr. Le Sourd was director of religious education at the Madison M. E. Church in New York from 1916 to 1917 and during the following two years he served with the Army division of the YMCA, returning in 1919 to Ohio State University as pastor. He later served as professor of religious education at Western Theological Seminary, Duke University, Boston University School of Religious Education and elsewhere. He was a member of the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection, in 1930. Some of his books include: "The Use of Motion Pictures for Religious Education," "University Work of the United Lutheran Church," "Builders of the Kingdom," "Church School Methods" and others of an educational and religious nature.

Motion Picture Foundation To Promote "Family" Films

The creation of a "non-profit" agency to sponsor and financially assist in the production and distribution of motion pictures of "high moral tone" was made known Friday with announcement of establishment of the Motion Picture Foundation of the United States of America, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York and operating from 247 Park Avenue, New York City.

Dr. William B. Millar, formerly general secretary of the Greater New York Federation of Churches from which post he resigned early this year, and L. Roy Curtiss appear to be the guiding factors. Aligned with them, it was said, is a "group of prominent men and women," including: Dr. William H. Metzler, who has been connected with Syracuse University and New York State College for Teachers for 37 years; Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, Groton, Mass.; Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin; Albert F. Gilmore, trustee of the Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston; Rear Admiral Richmond Pearson Hobson, United States Navy, retired, and Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dessez.

Others said to be interested are: Dr. Charles V. Vickrey, president of the Golden Rule Foundation; Carl Beck, efficiency engineer; Eugene Randolph Smith, headmaster of the Beaver Country Day School, Chestnut Hill, Mass.; Fred R. Marvin, secretary and organizer of the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies; Miss Mary E. Hughes, organizer of the woman's division of the National Recovery Administration; Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Jr., president of the Parents' League of New York City; and Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein, of the Institutional Synagogue, New York.

Of special interest to Broadway is the possibility that Joseph Brandt, former president of Columbia Pictures, might be one of the guiding factors of the project. From his home on Central Park West in New York, Mr. Brandt privately said Monday that he had been invited to become associated with the Foundation and that he will give his decision to the directors at a meeting Thursday.

Mr. Brandt, since he sold his interest in Columbia to Harry Cohn, in November, 1932, has had in mind such a plan as that just made known by the Foundation. Since his withdrawal from the Columbia corporation Mr. Brandt has been inactive, except for a brief period when he was associated with Ben Shylen's Associated Publications, trade regionals.

An announcement from the Foundation's headquarters frankly stated that it "is a non-profit and non-sectarian organization which will be maintained by the gifts and endowments of public-spirited men and women, and it invites the cooperation and advice of social, civic and religious organizations, as well as the motion picture industry itself."

The Motion Picture Foundation as a corporate structure is not new. It was formed some eight years ago by L. Roy Curtiss, who was associated with the late J. D. Williams in the proposed First Choice Pictures distributing company of last year. Two months ago, in Delaware, Mr. Curtiss had incorporated the Motion Picture Foundation Distributing Corporation to handle the actual physical distribution of the contemplated programs. In June, last, it is understood that discussions were held by the sponsors with Tamblyn, Brown, "fund raisers" of New York, to campaign for subscriptions for the Foundation to the amount of $1,500,000. Mr. Curtiss is reported to have obtained the pledge of some "wealthy friends" to match any sum over $1,000,000 that Tamblyn, Brown might raise.

Regular Supply Is Aim

The essential element in the Foundation's program is the production of a regular supply of feature motion pictures and short subjects which will "satisfy the demand for wholesome and intelligent family entertainment."

The plans provide for releasing a "family" program of one feature and from three to five reels of short subjects each week during the school year of 40 weeks.

The pictures will be sold under the direction of the Foundation, but distributed physically through established channels, probably through one of the large companies. The Foundation's sales force will make the product available to theatres and to non-theatrical accounts. If arrangements cannot be made with existing distribution channels, the Foundation will handle the product itself.

Much of the groundwork had been laid for the Foundation rather quietly many months ago, with Mr. Curtiss being principally responsible for the organization of the plan in its present form. In this work he was advised by the late Mr. Williams.

Mr. Curtiss produced the war picture, "The Cavell Case," distributed by Select Pictures in 1918, and admits to having initiated the plan which resulted in "The King of Kings," Pathe, 1927.

The Foundation this week made it clear that it will not directly participate in the business of producing pictures, but that it will aid reliable independent producers by financing and insuring distribution of pictures made from stories which have been selected by a special story selection committee of the Foundation. Loans will be advanced independents at six per cent. Some 200 scripts were said to have been received already for perusal.

In support of its idea, the Foundation said: "That there is a definite public demand for wholesome and artistically fine cinema material is made evident by the fact that some of the pictures which have grossed more than $2,000,000 each and which have been morally sound are, 'Birth of a Nation,' 'Ben Hur,' 'The Gold Rush,' 'The Covered Wagon' and 'The Sea Hawk.'"

"Agency of Social Service"

The Foundation, acting as "an agency of social service," is ready to cooperate with existing producing companies by publicly approving such motion pictures as it considers to be of constructive value, and by helping to interest the people of the communities of the nation in such films. "There will be an appropriate charge made for this service," it was said. Pictures deemed unworthy will not be condemned or blacklisted.

There were reports heard along Broadway following announcement of the Foundation's plan that there might be some relation between the project and Dr. William Harrison Short's

STYLE COPYRIGHTING IS NEW FOX MOVE

Hollywood having outstripped Paris as a fashion-creating center for both men's and women's apparel, producers are taking steps to protect their designers' artistic concoctions. Henceforth Fox Films will copyright all styles created by Renee Hubert. The plan goes into effect with "Lottery Lover," thus making that picture a legitimate reason for a style show.

TIE BLOCK SALE BAN TO SCHOOL PLAN

Motion Picture Research Council. This was denied vigorously by Dr. Short, who said there was no connection "other than a friendly interest."

To be formed immediately by the Foundation is a national story selection committee, a committee on visual education, a national advisory committee and a board of directors. Dr. William Metzler is chairman of the visual education division, which will be composed of 25 educators "who understand the value of the screen as a medium of education." None of these has been named as yet.

Would Seek U. S. Funds

One of the more ambitious plans of the Foundation is to have its visual education committee coordinate the respective groups "for appropriations from the federal government, and from the respective state governments for the production of a regular dependable supply of instructional pictures and for the required projection equipment for the schools of the nation."

The Foundation said it expects to have its first production unit in operation in February, 1935.

The official announcement modestly stated that "an advance canvass of motion picture theatre owners indicates a desire to cooperate in setting aside playing time each week for specially produced family pictures."

"The motion picture can be one of the greatest instruments for social service," it was said, "and it is the essential purpose of this newly formed organization to raise it to its highest levels for social, moral and civic good. The motion picture industry has pledged itself to rid the screen of the objectionable features for which it has been criticized, but it cannot devote all its resources and its ingenuity to the production of a restricted type of screen entertainment, whereas the Foundation has as its principal reason for existence the task of creating motion pictures of the type suitable for children as well as for the entertainment of adults. The Foundation believes the time has come when the public will support a movement that will encourage and help to develop the production of films that have a distinctly high moral tone."

Research Council Moves in On "Film Appreciation" Program

Following a period of comparative quiet since Mrs. August Belmont resigned as chairman last summer, Dr. William Harrison Short's Motion Picture Research Council in New York sent to the press last Thursday afternoon a brand new statement of "national policies in motion pictures," which, it was said, were agreed upon by representatives of some 35 national organizations who attended a conference presided over by Dr. Short in the American Museum of Natural History.

The statement, mailed at the same time to the presidents of the 35 organizations for possible action, included declarations against compulsory block-booking and blind-selling of motion pictures, together with a provision for a legal committee to draft a bill for introduction into the next Congress forbidding these trade practices, and for a joint campaign committee representing these and other organizations to press for the passage of the desired legislation.

The educational phases of the Council's new program include the encouragement of the teaching of film appreciation by its introduction in high schools and voluntary groups, and the encouragement of the organization of local nontheatrical exhibitions as a partial solution of the problem of films for children. There were no specific recommendations announced for accomplishing these ends, or, so far as is known, was any machinery created to arrive at any recommendations.

Said to have been called by Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, chairman of the National Committee of Organization Presidents and Excutives of the Motion Picture Research Council, and by Stephen Perkins Cabot, of the Council's executive committee, the conference was supposed to have been attended by some 74 delegates of the following 35 organizations:

Adult Education Association, American Association of University Women, American Jewish Congress, American Legion, American Museum of Natural History, Big Brothers and Big Sisters Foundation, Boy Scouts of America, B'nai B'rith, Catholic Boys Brigade of the United States, Catholic Daughters of America, Child Welfare League of America, Federal Council of Churches, Federal Motion Picture Council, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Girl Scouts, Institute of Geographical Exploration, International Association of Lions Clubs, International Dental Health Foundation, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Maryland Civic League for Motion Pictures, Massachusetts Civic League, National Association of Junior Leagues of America, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Council of Teachers of English, National Council of Women of the United States, National Council of Jewish Women, National Council of Young Women's Christian Association, National Education Association, National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, National Probation Association, National Women's Trade Union League of America, Russell Sage Foundation, Southern Women's Education Alliance, Women's League of the United Synagogues, National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association and the Motion Picture Research Council.

Dr. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia University, chairman of the conference, explained that while this action was not binding on the organizations represented in the conference, it is probable that the recommendations would be generally adopted in their main substance. The program, as outlined in an official Council statement, follows:

PART I—IMMEDIATE PROGRAM

A. Legislative.

Campaign for accomplishment of two federal objectives in 1935.

1. Abolition of compulsory block-booking.
2. Abolition of blind-selling.

To this end the conference recommends the appointment of two committees.

1. A legal committee to draft a single, brief and workable bill for submission to Congress in January,

And recommends to such committee, for its consideration, the several expressions of opinion made by the conference on the subject.

2. A campaign committee to plan and coordinate continued efforts for the accomplishment of these two legislative objectives and to assist in preparation and presentation of the case of the united organizations before Congressional committees.

B. Educational.

1. Encourage the teaching of film appreciation by its introduction into high schools and voluntary groups.
2. Encourage and cooperate in the establishment of a national film institute.
3. Recommend that constituent bodies of this conference take action to inform the public regarding the effects of unsocial moving pictures in personal and community life.

PART II—FURTHER PROGRAM

A. Legislative.

1. Amendment of anti-trust laws so as to prevent monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade in moving picture industry so far as is constitutional. (The conference recommends that, "as soon as the excellent research into trade practices already begun is completed, appropriate legislative objectives be formulated and submitted to cooperating organizations.")
2. Encouragement of community control or regulation of film exhibition.

PART III—TENTATIVE PROGRAM

1. Encouragement of a general program of public recreation under local boards.
2. Encouragement of the organization of local nontheatrical exhibitions as a partial solution of the problem of films for children.
3. Creation of a scientific, descriptive film service, assuming the abolition of enforced block-booking and blind-selling—this service not to be supported by the industry.

HOLDOVERS IN DENVER

There must have been an improvement in films during the past year, if the number of holdovers in Denver is any criterion. In the past 12 months, 12 pictures were held over at local theatres, compared to four held during the previous year. The films: "House of Rothschild," "I'm No Angel," "Footlight Parade," "Dancing Lady," "Dinner at Eight," "Little Women," "Viva Villa," "Dames," "Cleopatra," "Treasure Island," "Chained" and "Belle of the Nineties."

Kansas City Churches Planning Study Group

Cooperating with the Federal Council of Churches, the Kansas City Council of Churches will sponsor a group study over a period of weeks to mark a "new approach" to the question of the church and the motion picture. The course will be conducted by Reverend I. E. Deer, executive secretary of the Kansas City Council.

Form Agency To Book Shows for Wilby Circuit

A booking agency is to be opened in Charlotte, N. C., as a division of the North Carolina Theatres, Palmetta Amusement Company and Wilby circuit. It will be headed by Charles Mack of Atlanta, and will supply weekly stage shows to houses in North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

First of New Series Starts

The first of Educational's new "Young Romance" series was placed in production this week at the Astoria Studios on Long Island under the direction of Al Christie. Entitled "Three Cheers For Love," it will feature Sylvia Froos, radio singer.

B.I.P. Deal Is Off, Says Mark Oster

Mark Ostrer, one of the three brothers controlling the Gaumont properties in England, said late last week in New York that discussions pointing toward an affiliation of Gaumont with John Maxwell's British International Pictures, London, had definitely been abandoned. Mr. Ostrer made this statement privately after a phone conversation with his brothers in London. "It's a dead issue," he said.

The proposed deal was reported as one which would have amalgamated the two largest motion picture production, distribution and exhibition enterprises in the United Kingdom. Both control about 500 theatres.

However, and following Mark Ostrer's statement in New York that negotiations had been abandoned, Wall Street reports indicated that Mr. Maxwell's B. I. P. company is interested in obtaining the 49 per cent interest held in Gaumont by Fox Films.

Mr. Ostrer will return to London October 19, after having presided over the movement of Gaumont's invasion of the American market. Jeffrey Bernerd, who assisted him, will accompany him but will return soon.

Power, which grossed $15,480 at the Music Hall Sunday, established an all-time record for the weekend at the Tivoli in London, Mr. Ostrer was informed. The Tivoli's previous record was held by United Artists' "House of Rothschild."

The first two Gaumont releases under the invasion plan, "Chu Chin Chow" and "Power," were being sent into the field following Broadway showings, with "Chu Chin Chow" set in at the Fox theatre in Philadelphia, and "Power" scheduled for opening at the Locust there October 15.

Michael Balcon, Gaumont production head in London, now in New York, and Arthur Lee, Gaumont vice-president in America, were to leave this week on a theatre tour.

George W. Weeks, general sales manager, named Joe Kaliski sales manager at Washington; Mark Goldman, Pitsburgh; Harry Skirball, Cleveland, and Abe Fischer, home office representative for Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City.

Michael Balcon, Gaumont production chief now in New York, this week was conducting negotiations for the services of Jack Holt to appear in two pictures in England.

Gaumont will give a luncheon at the Waldorf Astoria October 15, in honor of Nova Pilbeam, 14--year-old star of "Little Friend."

Loew Net Is Expected To Equal $4 Per Share

A net of slightly more than $4 a share on the outstanding 1,464,205 common stock shares for the fiscal year ending September 1, 1934, will be shown by Loew's, Inc., when its annual report is made within the next month, it is authoritatively indicated.

This net is after depreciation and taxes as well as settlement of the recent libel suit on "Rasputin and the Empress," brought in London by the Princess Youssoupoff, for which the company paid $125,000. The net included profits from subsidiaries.

Loew's, Inc., has declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1.62½ per share on the preferred stock, payable November 20 to stockholders of record October 31.

REBELS CEASE FIRING AS THEATRE EMPTIES

Something which may easily set an all-time precedent for courtesy—especially among revolutionists—took place in Madrid Monday when rebels at Logrono, a suburb, suspended their sniping at the police for 15 minutes in order to permit the local motion picture theatre to "release" (sic: United Press) its patrons. This may be revolution a la 1934, but we feel it might take more than a little sporadic firing to keep an American audience from walking out on some pictures.

Bank Night Users Lose Many Appeals

"Bank Nights," ruled out by the Code Authority in decisions on a number of recent appeals from Local Grievance Boards' decrees, may become a protracted issue if the plan of California exhibitors to ask for a reversal of opinion is carried out. The San Fernando and the Ventura, in those California cities, have abandoned their defiance of the decision. Prohibition of the practice as unfair competition has been decreed in two cases by the Omaha board, twice by the Des Moines board. A decision against the Gem at Neodosha, Kan., was the seventh consecutive barring of the policy by the Kansas City board.

Amendment of the code to eliminate the provision requiring adherence within 45 days after its adoption or after entry of an individual or company into the business was approved Tuesday by the NRA.

In a letter to code assessment delinquents, John C. Flinn, executive secretary of the Code Authority, warned them that under a code amendment "the Code Authority shall have the right to institute legal proceedings for the collection" of assessments.

In San Francisco Sol A. Rosenblatt, division administrator, before returning to Washington, indicated that he has no present intention of resigning. Mr. Rosenblatt has approved an interpretative order requiring a minimum salary of $7.50 for each theatre booked for vaudeville performers, amateur or professional.

When it was learned at Washington that the rules governing employment of extras had been approved without a hearing for interested parties in the industry, NRA postponed until Thursday the effective date.

Despite protests from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Scientists, and the agents, the hearing on the agency code will be held in Washington, Mr. Rosenblatt ruled.

Wisconsin Allied, in convention in Milwaukee last week, adopted resolutions demanding a Congressional investigation of the code and revision of the copyright laws.

A public hearing on a proposed code modification and administration budget submitted by the Code Authority for the burlesque theatrical industry will be conducted Monday, October 22, by Acting Deputy Administrator E. E. McCleish, in the Green Room of the Raleigh hotel, Washington.

Katz Asks End to Paramount Suit

Asking dismissal of the suit brought against himself and 15 other members of Paramount's 1930-32 board of directors by the Paramount Publix trustees in bankruptcy to recover $12,237,071—the amount alleged to have been expended in company stock repurchase transactions—Sam Katz, former Paramount theatre head and now assistant to Louis B. Mayer of MGM, on Monday filed an amended answer to the trustees' complaint in supreme court, New York.

As Paramount neared reorganization informal discussions are being held separately by the various groups for candidates for the new directorate. Names tentatively mentioned, unofficially, include Frank A. Vanderlip, and Dr. Julius Klein as representatives of Paramount Publix, and Paramount-Famous-Lasky bondholders; Alvin J. Schlosser, for Paramount Broadway bondholders; Percy Johnston, president of Chemical Bank, for the banking group, and possibly Sir William Wiseman, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and Maurice Newton of Hallgarten & Co., for stockholders; and as representatives of the company itself, Adolph Zukor, George Schaefer, S. A. Lynch, Austin Keough and either Emanuel Cohen or N. L. Nathanson.

Mr. Katz's answer alleged that neither Paramount nor creditors of the company suffered loss or damage as a result of repurchase of the company's stock issued from 1929 to 1932 for the acquisition of theatres and that the payments did not constitute a "dividend or other distribution of assets to stockholders."

Mr. Katz's reply specifically defended the transactions whereby Paramount acquired the Kunsky-Trendle circuit in Detroit; Great States Theatres, Illinois, and a 50 per cent interest in both the William Morris Agency and Columbia Broadcasting System.

Other developments in the Paramount bankruptcy situation included settlement of a 1930 income tax claim of $471,452 filed against Paramount by the Treasury Department for $216,919; denial by U. S. circuit court of appeals, New York, of the application of Samuel Zirn, attorney for a Paramount bondholder group, for leave to appeal a U. S. district court order appointing Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson as trustees, and the filing of a claim by John Balaban on the unexpired portion of his contract.

Columbia Earnings To Parallel 1933

Business of Columbia Pictures Corporation in the first quarter of its current fiscal year—ended September 30—will compare favorably with that in the corresponding period a year ago, Abe Schneider, treasurer, told stockholders at the annual meeting in New York Tuesday. In the 13 weeks to Sept. 30, 1933, the company earned $1.36 a share on the common stock after the usual charges and after preferred dividends.

Contracts for the services of Harry Cohn, president, and Jack Cohn, vice-president, and extension of their options to purchase stock—both for a period of three years as of July 1, 1934—were unanimously ratified.

The stockholders reelected to the board of directors Jack Cohn, Leo M. Blancke, Nathan Burkan, Abe Schneider, Harry Cohn, S. Bornstein and J. Kerner.

Dr. A. H. Giannini, motion picture financier, attended and commended the report.

Gaumont British Opens For Business

This is a statement from exhibitors to exhibitors. We operate 350 theatres in London and the British Isles. De luxe, suburban, neighborhoods.

¶ We don't ask where pictures are made. All we ask is: "Are they good entertainment?" And that's all our patrons ask. We believe you and your patrons feel the same way.

¶ We are also producers. We will bring you 16 productions every year. We know—and you know—that new personalities, new faces, new stories and new treatments, are what you want. And that's what we'll give you.

¶ Mr. Sidney R. Kent, President of Fox Films Corp., after screening our product, invited us to release in the U. S., through Fox. We consider this a compliment. And a responsibility. Mr. Kent's standards are high. We will measure up to them.

¶ Our sales offices in the U. S. will be in the Fox Exchanges. The branches will handle prints and accessories. Our own sales force will shortly contact you from your Fox Exchange. Regal Films, Ltd., will continue to serve Canada.

¶ Our policy is simple. Screen our pictures. Look before you book. Our first [8] are presented herewith. They tell our story in one word—Box-office.

Cleveland Court Backs Dual Ban

As the result of the granting of a permanent injunction against the Family theatre by Common Pleas Judge Alva Corlett last week, double feature programs will continue to be under ban in Cleveland and its suburbs.

The Family theatre, operated by Henry Kaplan, recently presented a double feature program, although it had previously signed the agreement eliminating all duals in the Greater Cleveland area.

Edward I. Siegal, representing the theatre, attempted to prove that the single feature agreement which went into effect on July 8, is a violation of the Ohio Valentine anti-trust law; that signatures to the agreement were secured by fraud, and that although it was stipulated that the single feature agreement would become effective only in the event that it was signed by every theatre then operating in the designated area, at least one house then in operation did not sign it.

Judge Corlett declared that none of the contentions of the attorney were proved by the evidence submitted. He therefore issued a permanent injunction restraining the showing of double features. Importance was attached to the case as it was the first test of the legality and binding effects of the Cleveland single feature agreement.

Loew and RKO In New York Deal

The Loew-RKO product situation in New York was settled last week after many weeks of negotiation between heads of the two circuits and Fox, Columbia and Universal.

RKO abandoned a deal with Columbia when it was impossible to agree on terms demanded by the latter, and as a result, Loew's will continue to have the entire Columbia output in New York while RKO gets the whole Universal program.

RKO also failed to reach an agreement with Skouras on pooling of product for the Riverside, and because of this failure the circuit will continue to show half of the Warner and Paramount schedule in addition to all of Universal and RKO Radio at the 81st Street, on upper Broadway. George Skouras, it is said, wanted to pool Fox with Radio, Paramount, Columbia, Universal and Warner, but because of contracts entered into for the 81st Street, giving Springer and Cocalis second run it was impossible to get clearance for the Riverside to show day and-date with the RKO house. As Skouras would accept no other terms than a simultaneous run before he pooled the Riverside and the 81st Street, the negotiations fell through.

Under the terms of the arrangement between RKO and Loew's, which go into effect immediately, Loew's will select five Universal pictures for its houses and turn the rest over to RKO. No Columbia product changes hands. Loew's will go through with its original contract with Columbia.

IT'S STUDIOS OR SINCLAIR: SCHENCK

The election of Upton Sinclair, "presenter" of William Fox, crusading novelist, former Socialist politically, now ostensibly a Democrat, and that party's candidate for governor of California, will spell collapse for the motion picture industry there, this week declared Nicholas M. Schenck, amplifying comments made previously in Havana and Miami. The president of United Artists and 20th Century, alighting at Newark Airport, with Douglas Fairbanks, after a trip of rain and fog, brought more gloom with his prediction, emphasized by the declaration that United Artists may move lock, stock and barrel to Florida if Mr. Sinclair is the choice of Coast voters.

The root of Mr. Schenck's prediction of dire results for the film industry lies in the drastic taxation program which is an important part of the Sinclair EPIC ("End Poverty in California") plan, which won him the nomination. Furthermore, in Mr. Schenck's opinion, Mr. Sinclair stands an excellent chance of winning, with the possibility that his election will see the actual development of his program, since a large majority election will force the legislature to do his bidding, taking it as a direct mandate of the people, Mr. Schenck indicated.

Florida, where a state policy finds the powers that be highly favorable to the entrance of new capital, and where, Mr. Schenck indicates, a "reasonable" tax program may be expected, appears the likely site if the United Artists or other studios should pick up and move. New York is too large, has too many diversified interests to be practicable as a film center, he said.

Clark, Wobber Plan Visit to Fox Studio

John D. Clark, Fox general sales manager, will leave for the Coast shortly, accompanied by Herman Wobber. After a visit to the studio, the two will return east, visiting Fox exchanges en route, and holding special meetings in connection with the Sidney R. Kent drive.

New Fox films and the Kent drive were discussed by Mr. Wobber at a meeting last week of bookers and salesmen at the New York exchange. Present were E. C. Grainger, William Sussman and Harry Buxbaum.

New Jersey Group Condemns Dual Bills

The Finer Film Federation of New Jersey, meeting last week at East Orange, N. J., passed a resolution condemning the showing of double features at neighborhood houses. The resolution followed an address by the Reverend Walter M. Howlett of the Greater New York Federation of Churches, in which he said that religious organizations interested in better films are marking time.

RKO Payments Await Agreement

Pending submission of a new agreement to the United States district court in New York providing for a reduction in the amount of the monthly maturity of the notes, the payment of accumulated maturities of $600,000, of principal amount of the $1,500,000 RKO gold notes outstanding is being held in abeyance. These notes are held by Consolidated Film Industries and secured by practically all of the RKO investments in subsidiaries.

If approved by the court the new agreement may lower maturities from $300,000 per month to approximately $50,000 monthly, it is said. Thus RKO would have 30 months in which to retire the notes instead of the five-month period in which the company has been committed to meet the $1,500,000 heretofore. The agreement, not finally completed, will probably be presented to Federal Judge William Bondy within two weeks.

Consolidated acquired the RKO notes from the Chemical Bank & Trust Co. and Commercial Investment Trust last June, at which time they aggregated $1,825,000, maturing on the principal amount of $25,000 on July 1 and $300,000 August 1, and monthly thereafter up to and including January 1, 1935. The July and August payments were met by RKO, but the September and October maturities were deferred pending outcome of the negotiations for a reduction in amount of the monthly obligations.

That a new lease on the Music Hall in Radio City may not be entered into between RKO and Rockefeller Center appeared possible late last week as negotiations which have been in progress almost daily between the two for almost two months was said to have reached an impasse. RKO's lease on the Music Hall expired September 1.

Discussions of a renewal of the lease began almost immediately subsequent to its expiration. It is now understood that the discussions of late have revolved, not around a new lease, but around RKO's future status in operation of the house.

Operation of the Music Hall by the Rockefeller interests might be carried on under the direction of W. G. Van Schmus, who has been directing the theatre for some months. That there will continue to be a definite relationship between RKO and the Music Hall seems certain, although, it is said, that affiliation may be limited to an arrangement which will merely provide the theatre with product.

Campbell Radio Series Begins with Screen Stars

The radio program of the Campbell Soup Company, known as "Hollywood Hotel," was inaugurated last Friday night over 88 stations of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Most of the actors on the weekly program have been signed for three years. They include such screen names as El Brendel, Dick Powell and Ted FioRito and his orchestra. The guest stars on the opening program were Claudette Colbert and Warren William.

MPTOA, Allied Seek Affiliations In Several States

As Allied States Association last week drew the affiliation of the recently-organized GFTA (Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama) Independent Theatre Owners Association, with headquarters in Atlanta, new units of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were expected momentarily in northern New Jersey, Michigan and eastern New York.

Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied, announced the GFTA affiliation on his return to New York from Atlanta, pointing out that Allied now has units in 32 states. "We are not through with our expansion plans yet and will not be until we have complete coverage in the United States," Mr. Samuelson said. He plans to attend the convention of the Michigan unit in the near future, which has been postponed because of code problems which effect the unit and which it is necessary to dispose of first.

A discussion of distributors' sales policies, of new product and double billing featured the Wisconsin Allied convention last week in Milwaukee. About 40 delegates were in attendance.

The three units planned by the MPTOA are said to be invasions of Allied-dominated territory. Allied plans eventually to enter all territories, a move which is not expected to go unchallenged by the MPTOA. With a possible entrance of MPTOA into northern New Jersey, the personal stronghold of Mr. Samuelson, it is expected Allied will concentrate on affiliations in additional southern territory.

MPTOA leaders attended, in Memphis, the annual convention of the MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee, held early this week. M. A. Lightman, president of the Tri-States unit, presided. Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, headed the group of leaders attending. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, and Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, accompanied Mr. Kuykendall.

Organization of theatres into an insurance mutual as protection against discriminatory fire insurance rates, was suggested by R. X. Williams, Oxford, Tenn. Satisfaction was expressed with the progress in the wholesome films drive and opposition was voiced to the increased music tax.

William Davis was named last week head of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania at Pittsburgh, succeeding Dr. Herman. All other officers were reelected, with the exception of two directors, the two new board members being Guy Ida and William Walker.

George P. Aarons, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, this week urged formation of a buying combine of all unaffiliated theatres in the territory to oppose high percentage playing terms. Mr. Aarons said affiliated theatres pay a maximum of 20 per cent, independent theatres 50 per cent.

165 Features and 228 Shorts Have Received Certificates of Approval

Certificates of approval have been issued by the Production Code Administration, headed by Joseph I. Breen, to the eight large distributors and 12 independents for some 165 features and 228 one and two-reel short subjects, since the Administration started functioning on July 11th. Vincent G. Hart, assistant to Mr. Breen, supervises the issuance of certificates to pictures presented for approval in the east.

Columbia and Fox presented the most feature productions to the Administration, each having received certificates for 25 pictures. In addition, Fox was given three certificates for pictures submitted in the east. Warners received 24 feature certificates, Paramount, 17; Radio and United Artists, 13 each; Universal, 12 and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 11. The activities in this connection outlined in tabulated form below, indicate the wide extent of product on hand at this time for showing in theatres:

News Shots Taken Up 26,000 Feet

The newsreel added another chapter to its long record of accomplishments over the week-end with a flight—five miles above New York City, where for nearly an hour a Fox Movietone monoplane battled at 125 miles an hour against a wind of the same velocity. More than 26,000 feet above the city Jack Kuhne, Movietone aviation editor, and the Fox pilot, Charlie Stoeffer, sometimes were actually flying backwards in the rarified atmosphere with a registered temperature of 30 degrees below zero.

On Monday the New York Times and New York American carried front page stories of the adventure and Monday night Lowell Thomas, Fox Movietone commentator, told about it on his nightly news broadcast.

Fox said that Mr. Kuhne's expedition into the air took more than three months to prepare. Several unnatural elements had to be counteracted and, aside from the overhauling of the plane itself, special precautions were necessary to safeguard the photographic equipment.

Above 15,000 feet, subzero temperatures were encountered along with the rarified atmosphere in which the usual camera mechanisms will not function. An ordinary camera, it was said, freezes at 10 above zero. Filters and raw stock crystallize and crumble to dust at 15 degrees below zero. Sustenance of human life necessitated oxygen tanks.

Mr. Stoeffer said the atmosphere was so clear that he easily could identify points more than 100 miles away without binoculars. Montauk Point at Long Island's extremity and the ocean beyond were visible to the east.

Mr. Kuhne, using an infra-red camera made a number of long shots of New York, which will appear in Fox Movietone News, volume eight, number 7.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

BABES IN TOYLAND

MGM-Hal Roach

To a greater extent than ordinarily, showmanship that accrues to production value is to be found in this picture. It's a feature length Laurel and Hardy, adapted from Victor Herbert's musical comedy that was popular a generation or more ago. The book and lyrics are by Glen MacDonough, the screen play by Frank Butler and Nick Grinde. "Babes in Toyland" is being codirected by Gus Mains and Charles Rogers, who have directed many Laurel and Hardy shorts.

Supporting the modern clowns are Charlotte Henry, remembered for "Alice in Wonderland"; Henry Kleinbach, Felix Knight, Florence Roberts, Ferdinand Munier, William Burress, Virginia Karns, Johnny Downs and Jean Darling.

In atmosphere, the story is a fairy tale fantasy. There is a story which for a comedy carries a greater than usual amount of contrasting drama and human interest. It's the yarn of a toy maker and his wife and the part which his two assistants played. But the characters giving it life and color are the old Mother Goose heroes and heroines such as Bo-Peep, Tom-Tom, the Piper's Son, the Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe and her brood, Little Boy Blue and all the rest.

Supplementing the comedy drama is the inclusion of the famous Victor Herbert musical numbers, "March of the Toys," "Toyland," "Castles in Spain" and "I Can't Do That Sum." As backgrounds for the motivating story as well as for the special numbers, there is a group of uniquely constructed sets that should not be ignored in any publicity.

While there is plenty of legitimate entertainment discernible in the production, the fact that it will be released prior to and in the holiday season makes possible a topical appeal highly advantageous to business.

THE PRESIDENT VANISHES

Paramount-Walter Wanger

This title carries a thrill that the powerful story substantiating it graphically seeks to make good. Fantastically real, because of its fictionized historical and political counterpart, it deals with a subject and conditions always prominent in the public mind. The world is at war. As the president of the United States tries to keep the country out of it a group composed of politicians, newspaper publishers, bankers, munition makers, industrial kings—the war profiteers—through a subsidized press whip the populace into a patriotic frenzy that demands war and a collection of past debts by force. Rallying to their support, condemned yet secretly supported, comes a great invisible national organization, "The Grey Shirts." The tide of opinion turning against the President, he vanishes and the world is informed that he has been kidnaped. The state of mind changes amazingly. The people want their President. The war makers are blamed for his disappearance. As the Grey Shirts and pacifists stir up frenzy, the horror of war is realized. Then the President returns. Over the radio, he pleads his cause and tells why. Although they never learn what happened, war is averted, the profiteers are exposed and peace is maintained.

The picture was adapted from an anonymously written but widely read novel, by Lynn Starling, who did "Torch Singer." The screen play is by Carey Wilson and Cedric Worth. William Wellman, maker of many popular successes including "The Conquerors," is directing.

A large cast brings the story to screen realism. Arthur Byron is the president, Janet Beecher his wife. Principal supports are Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin, a newcomer from the stage; Sidney Blackmer, Edward Arnold, Walter Kingsford, DeWitt Jennings, Douglas Wood, Charles Grapewin, Charles Jennings, Edward Ellis and Rosalind Russell. Other names are Jason Robards, Paul Harvey, Robert McWade, Osgood Perkins, Andy Devine, Harry Woods, Irene Franklin, Tommy Dugan and Clara Blandick.

As can be gleaned from the summary, topical, exciting, up-to-the-minute showmanship that startles public attention is made available by the dramatic tenor of this story.

THE MIGHTY BARNUM

20th Century

As the title signifies, this should be a showmanship show. It's about the great showman, Phineas T. Barnum, his life and unparalleled exploits. Not a circus picture, it should, however, be one calling for the last word in circus exploitation. The original story and screen play are by Gene Fowler and Bess Meredith. Walter Lang is directing.

There is commercial value of more than ordinary worth in the personnel. Wallace Beery is Barnum. The screen names supporting him include Adolphe Menjou, Janet Beecher, seen in "Gallant Lady" and "The Last Gentleman"; Rochelle Hudson, John Hyams, Virginia Bruce, recently in Monogram's "Jane Eyre"; May Boley, Lucille LaVerne, Herman Bing, Tammany Young and Charles Judels.

As there is value in the name strength, so there is in the production incidents, with such great feats of showmanship as the exhibition of the oldest woman in the world, the first bearded woman, the illustrious Cardiff Giant, the presentation of Tom Thumb and his wife, the bringing of the Swedish Nightingale, Jenny Lind, to America, and the start of the Barnum and Bailey circus with the great elephant, Jumbo, as the big attraction.

Against this hectic background, there is Barnum's life story, the man who in his greatest failures as well as most vivid triumphs was a sore trial to his wife. Therein it combines two great commercial production assets, romantic drama and colorful atmosphere. It should prove a carnival for ingenious showmen. Potential exploitation possibilities are to be found in practically every sequence. The thing that made Barnum, ballyhoo, is the peg upon which should be hung every interest-creating idea.

REPEAL

Much that is commercially valuable is readily evident in this production. The story by Charles Francis Coe was a Saturday Evening Post feature several months ago. Its readers as well as those of other Coe features constitute a ready made audience. The screen play is by Belle and Samuel Spewack. It is being directed by Jack Conway, maker of "Viva Villa," "Hell Below" and "The Nuisance."

To the value accruing to writing and directorial credits is added the patron popularity of the principal cast names. Carole Lombard, whose current "Lady by Choice," in which she is co-featured with May Robson, should prove helpful, is the girl about whom all the colorful and exciting drama, comedy and romance rotate. Principal supporting parts are composed of known names. The four so active in her life are Chester Morris, whose latest picture is "Let's Talk It Over"; Leo Carillo, who did one of the outstanding jobs in "Viva Villa"; Sam Hardy, recently featured in "Little Miss Marker," and Nat Pendleton, currently in "Catspaw." Other principals are Zasu Pitts and Walter Walker.

Comedy melodrama, told against the chilling and thrilling background of nervous fingered racketeerdom, is the quality that motivates the yarn. By no means a gangster story and full of the entertainment type atmosphere, it tells of a showgirl who had ambitions. Getting what she wanted, money and thrill, she was smart enough to have a trust fund, but when real love came along she was ready to give that away to prove she was on the level.

It looks as though there is going to be plenty with which to work in this one. There are story, personalities and color to exploit.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN

Radio

This is comedy romance which, despite the impression naturally created by the title, is aimed more at the masses than at the sophisticates. While New York is the principal locale, the yarn has a refreshing verve and promises the color in unique love interest and light drama that the theme suggests.

The story is by Norman Krasna, who has several popular pictures to his credit, and Don Hartman. The screen play is by Edward Kaufman, who did "Aggie Appleby," and Jane Murfin, scenarist on "Spitfire" and "Life of Vergie Winters." The director, Stephen Roberts, recently did "The Trumpet Blows."

Two players, whose popularity is increasing daily because of recent appearances, have the leads. Francis Lederer, whose current "Pursuit of Happiness" should do much for him as an attraction, has the lead. Opposite him is Ginger Rogers, seen in several outstanding productions and currently in "The Gay Divorcee." Numbered among the principal supporting players are Helen Ware, seen in "Sadie McKee"; J. Farrell Macdonald, Lillian Harman, Eily Malyon and Jimmy Butler.

The story concerns a young Balkan Mountain shepherd, who, while posing for a magazine illustrator, learns of the glories of America and comes here. A crook sells him the Central Park sheep flock. Befriended by his artistic friend, he gets a job as dishwasher in a beer hall to emerge as a star singing waiter. Romance comes to him as he meets a girl from his own country, only to lose her. Searching in vain, he returns to his beer hall job to find a great celebration and the light of his love being married to another. But the strength of his love is rivaled only by the manner in which he has got onto the American way of doing things, particularly as to how quickly a divorce can be arranged.

LIFE RETURNS

Universal

This is a dramatic story with a vivid suggestion of powerful human interest. Basically it's the story of a man and his boy. Both lives were nearly wrecked as the father, neglecting all the ordinary affairs of life, devoted all his efforts toward discovering the secret of making the dead live again.

The yarn is an original by Eugene Frenke, who is also the director and collaborator on the screen play with C. Wolfe Gilbert. The leading roles are played by Onslow Stevens and George Breakston, who was seen in "No Greater Glory" and "Mrs. Wiggs of Cabbage Patch." Others in the cast are Lois Wilson, currently in "There's Always Tomorrow" and "School for Girls"; Stanley Fields, seen in "Many Happy Returns" and "The Criminal Within"; Valerie Hobson, a British picture personality and brand new to American audiences; Maidel Turner, Richard Carle, Frank Reicher, Lois January and Richard Quine.

Because of its story character, "Life Returns" is an interesting entertainment experiment. While dealing in standard elements, drama both life and character being accented, it does so in a manner that is novel to American production. As the man ignores all husbandly and fatherly duties, he continually disappoints those who believe most in him, particularly the boy. Only when, with the assistance of old student-day associates, he discovers the secret of life anew, is he the hero the boy wants him to be.

As the story is unusual, it suggests that novel and different showmanship be utilized.

MPTOA Plans Fight To Finish on Dual Bills

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America last week announced it would conduct a "fight to the finish" against double features when, as and if the motion picture code is re-written. The MPTOA described the Code Authority's ruling that a theatre's clearance cannot be predicated on whether or not it practices double featuring as "a short-sighted and regrettable one which has demoralized exhibition in many cities and enables powerful buyers to 'hog the market' without overbuying."

"When the code is re-written," the bulletin says, "this question will have to be threshed out or it will slowly strangle business, as well as bring on another wave of indignation against the movies." Allied of New Jersey has dropped its plan to adopt a single feature policy in the entire northern New Jersey sector and instead will try to get exhibitors in each of the individual territories to abandon the practice.

MGM Drops Plans to Release "Wandering Jew"

MGM has definitely dropped "The Wandering Jew," and Franklin Films Company, which owns the American distribution rights, will send the picture back to Twickenham Studios, England, without showing it here. Only the New York territory had been sold.

In releasing MGM from the contract, William Shapiro, president of Franklin, does not receive any money except what expenses were incurred. Rabbi Stephen Wise and a rabbinical committee in New York had recommended it not be shown in this country.

Education Council Starts Film Test

"Pleasure and education can be combined perfectly," Professor Kirtley B. Mather of Harvard University announced at the opening of the series of motion picture showings under the auspices of the Adult Education Council of Greater Boston at the Fine Arts Theatre, Boston, Thursday evening. Professor Mather is president of the Education Council.

"To that end," said Professor Mather, "the Council is preparing a series of programs covering the humanities and the sciences which will demonstrate that all education is not academic."

Harvard Foundation To Help

Each week the Fine Arts Theatre will present two short pictures in the humanities and sciences as well as the regular program of American and foreign films. To these programs will come the benefits of the research work of the Harvard Film Foundation. The effort will be to provide a balanced program.

Manager George Kraska of the Fine Arts Theatre selected the opening program to show what can be accomplished by combining artistic films with entertainment of educational value.

The feature was "The Blue Light," screen drama in Italian and German, released by Du World, filmed in the Italian Tyrol, and written and directed by Leni Riefenstahl, who likewise was the leading character. Also on the program are "Manchukuo," a newsreel; "The String Choir," illustrating the functions of the violin, viola, violoncello and double-bass of the orchestra; "The Earth's Rocky Crust," a geological film by Dr. Mather, and a Silly Symphony, "The Grasshopper and the Ants."

There were no vacant seats for the opening and it was not an invitation affair. The audience resembled one attending openings of the opera with richly gowned women and men in full evening attire. The new policy at the Fine Arts calls for a top admission price of $1.50.

Church Groups Attack Screen

The Quakers pledged Legion of Decency cooperation at their Indiana annual meeting, at Richmond. At Savannah, Ga., the United Lutheran Church in America, at its biennial convention, beginning October 17, will be told by its moral and social welfare committee that "the moral situation in moving pictures has grown steadily worse" and the time is here to attack at the box office. At Akron, Ohio, the 31st general conference of the Evangelical Church was told in a message from its bishops that the industry is a "nefarious institution" which "might well be designated as a 'billion dollar filth mill.'" The Pioneer District Walther League, Lutheran group, at its 41st convention in Buffalo, N. Y., demanded a boycotting of theatres showing objectionable pictures.

Previewing for civic and club leaders will be asked at Youngstown, Ohio, and the Better Films Council of Louisville and Jefferson has indorsed a plan for a series of pictures for juveniles.

Unusual Material On Scientific Film

Elaborate and attractive advertising material has been prepared by Erpi Picture Consultants, subsidiary of Electrical Research Products, Inc., for the production, "The Human Adventure," which was produced by the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, with the technical assistance of Erpi Picture Consultants, which is distributing in the non-theatrical field.

The film was produced under the scientific supervision of Dr. James H. Breasted, with the story, narration and direction handled by Charles Breasted. Designed primarily as an educational film, the eight-reel subject depicts what is described as the rise of man from savagery to civilization. Through the use of airplanes for the most part, the activities of numerous archeological expeditions into the sections of the world where civilization had its beginnings were photographed. The film required more than three years in the making, two separate trips from Chicago to the Near East having been necessary for the production.

The advertising which has been prepared on the film is considerably more elaborate than the material usually developed for non-theatrical motion pictures.

Gaumont Officials At AMPA Lunch

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, of New York, and officials of Gaumont British Pictures participated in a "hands-across the sea" luncheon last Thursday at the regular weekly get-together of AMPA in the Motion Picture Club on Longacre Square.

Martin Quigley was guest chairman and introduced, as guests of AMPA, Jeffrey Bernerd, of Gaumont, London; Arthur Lee, vice-president of Gaumont in America; Nova Pilbeam, Benita Hume, Jack Hulbert, "Tiger" King and Michael Delane, Gaumont players; Robert Flaherty, producer of "The Man of Aran"; Michael Balcon, Gaumont production head, and Berthold Viertel. Mr. Bernerd, who also represented Mark Ostrer, one of the three brothers controlling the Gaumont enterprises in Britain, explained the intentions of his company in its invasion of the American market. Mr. Ostrer was ill and was unable to attend.

Mr. Quigley and William R. Ferguson, president of AMPA, also introduced to the 200 press, publicity and motion picture people present J. J. McCarthy and Lester Thompson, of the MPPDA'S Advertising Advisory Council; Walter Moore, Paula Gould, Robert Appleby, Dave Gould, William Gargan, J. H. Hoffberg and Douglas Churchill, who is the Hollywood correspondent of the New York Times.

Gus Edwards, Tony Marconi, Eddie Peaboy and Harry Hershfield entertained.

Circuits, Unions In Wage Parley

Deliberations to ascertain equitable and uniform wage scales for motion picture projectionists got underway in New York this week as a fact-finding committee composed of circuit and union officials completed the assembly of data on which to establish its conclusions. No new agreements have been entered into by the major circuits in New York and Local 306 to replace contracts which expired September 1, and none are planned until after the committee has made known the results of its negotiations.

In Memphis last week all efforts of M. A. Lightman to reach an agreement with union labor failed, with the operators' and stagehands' unions at odds over whether the Lightman Strand must have a stage hand, a stand which has resulted in employment of non-union men at the house for over a year. The Strand has been the target of much picketing and occasional stench bombings for many months. Late in August Mr. Lightman reached an agreement with the operators, but he refused to entertain demands of the stagehands' union that he employ a union stage hand as well.

Theatre sign contractors in New York last week granted the 10 per cent wage increase asked by Local 230, Sign Writers' Union, although the contractors themselves have not yet reached an agreement with circuits on the rate of increase which would absorb the increase in wages.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

CODE FOUND BOON TO PUBLICITY
HOLLYWOOD "HAS COME OF AGE" THAT GRETA GARBO CONTRACT
45 PICTURES ARE NOW IN WORK

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

THAT the industry, from the standpoint of publicity, has gained immeasurably from the movement for a higher moral standard in motion pictures was the consensus of a group of critics, wire service men, columnists, writers who help formulate the outside world's opinion of things Hollywood, at a luncheon table discussion in which heat mingled with light as most spoke "off record," honestly—many at variance with the publications they represent.

To quote one paragrapher—"Such publicity put the spotlight on pictures. It was provocative and controversial. And anything provocative carries interest—and anything interesting is box-office."

Secondly, it was generally conceded that pictures, since the inauguration of the Production Code Administration certificate, seemed better made, better conceived, more imaginative, with structure and technique given more concentrated attention.

One trade paper writer said: "If the campaign only ballyhooed the industry to keep the public's mind off the bad pictures, it would have been worthwhile, but it seems to have brought better craftsmanship in films, and reports also show an increase in theatre attendance, particularly in neighborhood houses where family trade predominates."

Hollywood "Comes of Age"

"An American producer can take a subject like 'Clive of India' and produce it with more reverence than a British producer."

So spoke R. J. Minny, English author of the book and co-author with W. B. Lipscomb of the play, with "Clive of India" running in London for over a year, and still at it. The play has been purchased by Darryl Zanuck for 20th Century.

"While undoubtedly a British producer would make a fine film from the play, he might be inclined to take more liberties with the subject than an American. An American producer would be meticulous about the small things that might offend Britain. Also, British producers may have a tendency to pay less for vehicles.

"My observations of Hollywood?

"Well, I just thought it was sort of crazy quiltish when I first got here, but after I got around and met the people, saw their sincerity and watched how things functioned, I leave here with profound admiration for Hollywood workers and pangs of regret at leaving friends.

"I find the American cinema industry has come of age. Instead of continuing to grovel as they have with gang films and sex exposes, they are going in for classics like 'Little Women,' 'David Copperfield' and biographical films of historical value. It's really the best sign I've noted of maturity."

Minny is also a member of the publishing firm of Chappman-Hall, and one of the publishers of Everybody's Magazine, a weekly.

Sights Unseen

The whims of Hollywood decreed that having appeared previously in two talking pictures for another company, Grace Moore should gamble her face, figure, talent and voice in "One Night of Love" against the picture-making ability of Producer Harry Cohn, Miss Moore to receive no salary.

While the picture was being filmed, it was whispered that the star, irked at the contract her agent had engineered for her, made vigorous protestation.

Now that the film is one of the great cleaner-uppers at the box-office, indications are that she will receive a bigger cash emolument than ever could be paid a star on salary, or on a picture basis.

The agent, so goes an unconfirmed report, no longer represents the star.

Much speculation is being buzzed around the town concerning the future status of Greta Garbo with MGM. The star concluded her present contract with "The Painted Veil" and a new deal awaited the return of Louis B. Mayer. In the event she does not re-sign with MGM there is a strong possibility of her making one or two pictures for Walter Wanger, and again, she might divide her time between the two producing organizations.

45 Pictures in Work

With forty-five pictures actually in work, seven new ones were started this week and six were completed. Two new productions are credited to Columbia, one each to MGM, Paramount, Fox, Invincible and Mascot. Two completed pictures belong to Paramount, the remaining four being equally divided among MGM, Universal, Radio and Fox.

Started at Columbia was "White Lies." Fay Wray, Victor Jory, Walter Connolly, Irene Hervey and Leslie Fenton head the cast. Also placed before Columbia cameras was "Called to Arms," with Steffi Duna, Ben Lyon, Noah Beery, Hobart Bosworth, Charles Sabin and Sheilla Manners.

MGM's new picture, "Forsaking All Others," has a star-studded cast, with Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Billie Burke, Charles Butterworth, Ted Healy and Rosalind Russell.

At Paramount the new feature, "Behoud My Wife," stars Sylvia Sidney and Gene Raymond, with Clara Lou Sheridan, Charles Middleton and Jim Thorpe in support.

"Lottery Lover," the starting Fox feature, has Lew Ayres, "Pat" Paterson, Peggy Fears, Ned Sparks and Sterling Holloway.

A serial, "Mystery Mountain," is the new Mascot contribution. Ken Maynard and Verna Hillie are the leading players.

Beginning its new program, Invincible launched "The Port of Lost Dreams," in which Bill (Stage) Boyd, Lola Lane, Ed Gargan and Harold Huber will be featured.

On the completed side of the record, Paramount is credited with "Limehouse Nights," in which George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong, Kent Taylor, Montague Love, Forrester Harvey and Colin Tapley will be seen. Also there is a western, "Code of the West." In this Jackie Coogan will be seen again heading a cast which includes Randolph Scott, Evelyn Brent and Fuzzy Knight.

MGM moved "Biography of a Bachelor Girl" to the cutting room. This picture teams Ann Harding with Robert Montgomery and numbers Una Merkel, Edward Arnold, Edward Everett Horton and Charles Richman among the supporting players.

Universal checked in with "When a Man Sees Red," a Buck Jones western with Dorothy Revier and Peggy Campbell.

Radio's new number, "Lightning Strikes Twice," a comedy-mystery-melodrama, features Ben Lyon, Thelma Todd, Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher, Chick Chandler, Laura Hope Crews, Walter Catlett and Gregory Ratoff.

Last of the completed pictures is Fox's "Bachelor of Arts," co-starring Anita Louise and Tom Brown. The supporting cast includes Arline Judge, Frank Albertson, Henry B. Walthall and Stepin Fetchit.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

No. 78—DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN AN EMPLOYEE AND MANAGEMENT

QUESTION—Some two-and-a-half years ago, I was employed as a doorman of a theatre in a town of less than 15,000. At the time of the adoption of the code, I was making $14 a week and was working between 48 and 50 hours weekly. I was then raised to $16 weekly, but my hours were not lessened. My duties were as follows: taking tickets, relieving in the box-office, handling all advertising, hiring ushers, writing letters, ordering advertising materials, counting and entering the day's receipts and banking them the next morning. Oftentimes the manager would appear at the theatre for only half an hour a day, saying it was not necessary for him to be there all the time because he could depend upon his assistant. He also told me that when he was not around I was in complete charge of the house.

Now we disagree. I contend that the work I have been doing has been of executive caliber and, under the code, I should be earning $35 a week. The manager says that I am nothing more than a doorman. Which of us, in your opinion, is correct, and to what extent? What steps can I take to collect whatever might be due me?—OHIO.

ANSWER—The situation described above involves the determination of a question of fact as to whether the employee is a socalled "utility" worker under the code, or a doorman, or an assistant manager.

The sole authority for determining such a question of fact is a Regional Labor Board or a Code Compliance Board of the NRA. Such boards are established in each large city. Their addresses may be obtained through the telephone people, or from the city editor of the local newspaper and from the National Recovery Administration at Washington.

In the motion picture code it is said that no theatre employee shall work more than 40 hours weekly, except that there shall not prevail any such maximum schedule of hours for employees engaged in a managerial, executive or advisory capacity who receive $35 or more per week; nor shall the 40-hour maximum apply to employees in theatres whose duties are of a "general utilitarian character." A maximum working week of 40 hours shall apply to doormen.

This means that if a person is an assistant manager or other theatre executive receiving less than $35 weekly, he shall not work more than 40 hours per week. If such executive or assistant manager receives $35 or more per week, then he may work any number of hours without limit under the code. This clause does not say that an executive or manager or assistant manager must receive $35 or more per week, but it does say that unless he does receive $35 or more his maximum working hours shall be 40 weekly.

There is no maximum hour schedule or minimum wage scale specified in the code for the particular employee whose duties are of a "general utilitarian character." However, a supplementary clause in the code says that the wage to be paid a theatre employee whose wages are not otherwise specified in the code shall be no less than 40 cents per hour.

With respect to employees regularly employed as doormen, such employees shall receive not less than a 20 per cent increase over the wage that was paid to them as of August 1, 1933, in cities and places having a population of less than 15,000. However, and regardless of this provision, it is stipulated that the doormen's wages do not have to exceed 25 cents an hour. And, in no event, as stated above, except in emergencies, shall the maximum working schedule of doormen exceed 40 hours weekly.

Again, the question of the status of the inquirer must be determined either by the Regional Labor Board or the local Code Compliance Board of the NRA, either of which board will also decide whether there are any back wages due and the amount of such back wages. If either board rules that wages are due it will order the employer to make such payment to the complaining employee.

No. 79—UNUSUAL SITUATION WHICH INVOLVES REDUCED ADMISSIONS

QUESTION—My theatre is located in a small mining town 10 miles away from the county seat. The mines here are working fairly steady and, until lately, I have done good business—but, in the county seat there exist two theatres "bucking" each other and also trying to "freeze" me out by reducing their admissions to 10 and 15 cents. Not only this, but they come to the company stores in my territory and give them 15, 20 and 25 per cent to sell their tickets. There might be some code law or regulation forbidding them to do this.—KENTUCKY.

ANSWER—There is no clause in the motion picture code which specifically mentions the situation described above wherein the two competitors in a town 10 miles away arrange to sell through company stores in the town of the complaining exhibitor admission tickets on which sales the two competitors give the operators of the company stores from 15 to 25 per cent commission.

This is an unusual situation and, obviously, is a matter which should be brought to the attention of the Local Grievance Board in the exchange city in the territory in which the theatres are located. The procedure would be for the complaining exhibitor to file a complaint with the Board asking for relief from unfair competition. Even though the code does not specifically embrace such a situation, the Board may extend its rights and give a wide interpretation of some existing clause in order to control the practice, if it finds that it is unfair competition.

For instance, the Board might interpret the situation under the clause which says that "No exhibitor shall lower the admission price publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes, reduced script books, coupons, throwaway tickets or by two-for-one admission, or by other methods or devices of similar nature which directly or indirectly lower or tend to lower such announced admission prices and which are unfair to competing exhibitors."

In this connection the Board may rule that the two competitors are selling tickets to the stores at prices below the admission publicly announced or advertised inasmuch as the competing theatres give the company stores a commission on sales, which commission tends to lower the publicly announced or advertised admission, even though the stores in turn sell the tickets to the public at the regular announced admissions.

In the first part of the inquiry it is said that these same two competitors are "freezing" out the complaining exhibitor by reducing their admissions to 10 and 15 cents. The reduction of admission prices is controlled to some extent in the motion picture code clause which says that no exhibitor shall fail at any time to maintain the minimum price of admission specified in any distribution contract. This means that if the competitors' contracts permit of a 10-cent minimum admission, then they are within their rights to sell tickets at 10 cents and 15 cents. But, if their contracts specify a 15-cent minimum and they reduce their prices to 10 cents, then obviously they are violating this clause of the code and a complaint may be filed against them with the Local Grievance Board, which Board will order the offenders to cease and desist from such violation and to thereafter abide by the contract minimum admission stipulation.

Smart Words about Dumb-Bell Letters* to Wise Showmen

"Once in a blue moon the movies really produce something new, and even more rarely than that they develop something exceedingly entertaining, but this time they have originated a feature that promises to be the biggest fun festival ever brought to the screen. It is the 'Dumb-Bell Letters' now showing at the Orpheum. What a laugh they provide ... and what a treat it is to hear an audience, so completely entertained, as to break into applause when the last letter has been shown. I predict that 'Dumb-Bell Letters' will draw more cash customers than any of the biggest movie stars ... a real laugh is a rare thing these days."

—Mel Washburn—New Orleans Item-Tribune

This week we are playing DUMB-BELL LETTERS at the Roger Sherman and Strand, Hartford. I personally watched the reaction of the audience and I can frankly say that there is no short subject that I have seen, in recent months that seemed to give such patron satisfaction.

—B. E. Hoffman
Warner Bros. Circuit
New Haven

"Dumb-Bell Letters had their premiere showing our Boston Theatre were not only exceptionally pleasing but received solid and genuine applause after each showing, which is greatly unusual."

—C. W. Koerner
Boston

DUMB-BELL LETTERS is one of the best comedy subjects I have ever seen. I have sat with audiences in my three situations, Seattle, Portland and Tacoma, while DUMB-BELL LETTERS were on the screen, and they are positively a riot. I sure hope to get a number of these subjects this season.

—John Hamrick

"DUMB-BELL LETTERS" was a distinct hit with our audiences ... the subject outstanding on a very strong bill. Audience reaction was marvelous, the applause at the end was genuinely spontaneous. Many patrons stopped on their way out to inquire if there are to be more. A great subject and an asset to any kind of a bill.

"Have played the first two Dumb-Bell Letters and they sure are a riot. They get a big hand at every performance. I do not believe there is a better short subject made for entertainment value. Am looking forward to your next one."

—Harry Zeitz, President

New Bedford, Mass.

"Just to let you know of our patrons reaction as well as my own to 'DUMB-BELL LETTERS.' These letters actually evoked uproarious laughter and at the finish of the subject brought a round of applause, something very unusual for any shorts. This series is destined to be very popular and it is my earnest belief laughs will emanate from the most solemn faces. Congratulations!"

—Orpheum Theatre, Minneapolis

"Congratulations, Dumb-Bell Letters, the smartest, brightest, short that has hit the screen in years. We have never played any subject that has received such howls and laughs. It has taken Los Angeles and Hollywood by storm and is destined to become a box-office attraction.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 243.—(A) May a motor-generator be rather heavily overloaded for a short space of time without injury? (B) Of what does a motor-generator consist? (C) Why is it necessary to have the generator voltage higher than the arc voltage? (D) Why is ballast resistance necessary?

Answer to Question No. 237

Bluebook School Question No. 237 was: (A) Assuming you have just taken a position as projectionist. In looking things over you find the projection room feed circuit apparently to be smaller than it should be for efficient service. The theatre is paying six cents per KWH. Tell us what action you would take. (B) Tell us what a "live-wire" projectionist should do when he takes charge of a projection room for the first time.

After examining and carefully considering the very short list of answers that I could by any stretch of imagination call satisfactory, I think I will omit all names this time except that of those sending in the answers published. This is no slap at any one. So very many of you have been sending in consistently good answers for so long that I just don't care to pick favorites in a matter upon which there might be some honest difference of opinion.

(A) T. Van Vaulkenburg answers Section A thus: "To ascertain the efficiency of a circuit it is necessary to do more than know it is not overloaded in the matter of amperage capacity, since that only assures us of the circuit being safe. It does not tell us how much power is being wasted by excessive resistance due to length of the circuit.

"In such a case I therefore would (as I have done with my own circuits) estimate (measure, if it is possible) the length of the circuit and calculate the voltage drop in accordance with the rules set down in my Bluebook. This would tell me exactly the amount of waste in watts. I could and would then figure out what the loss amounted to per year. If it proved to be in excess of the interest charge for the amount of money required to run an auxiliary circuit or for removal of the present wires and installation of larger ones, I would explain the matter to the manager and recommend that one or the other (whichever might seem most feasible) be done.

"While it is true some of the kind which you, Brother Richardson, have correctly dubbed 'mismanagers,' might not receive the advice kindly, or might even sneer or laugh at me, that would only make me feel sorry for them. I would know I had done my duty, and if they had not intelligence enough to appreciate that fact—well, that would be their own hard luck."

Good, Van Vaulkenburg! You are absolutely correct in all particulars. The man who has no appreciation of such conscientious work certainly has no right place in a theatre manager's office, unless it be as office boy. It is of course his privilege to refuse to accept the advice, but at least he should appreciate the fact that it was intelligently offered.

(B) Our old friends O. L. Daris and F. Simms submit what I regard as by far the best answer to this section. They say, "Well, Dad, we are going to answer this question not at all along the lines of what the usual procedure probably is, but along the lines you have been for many years teaching us. And 'believe it or not,' we do try honestly to follow your leadership, having found that it has paid us well to do so.

"Upon taking charge of a projection room we would first of all interview the manager and ascertain exactly how it is customary in that theatre to handle programs, and listen to any general instructions he may wish to issue. We also would ascertain just how sound volume is handled, and what the signal code is if there is an observer, when rehearsals, if any, take place, etc., all of which we would put in the form of written notes.

"Then, as fast as possible, we would check up on (a) condition of motion picture projectors and other equipment, making note of all worn parts, needed replacements, etc., reporting same, in writing, to the office, filing copy of said report in the projection room; (b) check up on efficiency of electrical operation of the various circuits, the short ones by means of wire capacity tables, the long ones by calculating voltage drop, making written report if too much loss is found, with recommendation for such changes as may seem desirable; (c) note and make report of all spare parts in stock and requisition for such others as may be needed; (d) examine and test port fire shutters and ascertain whether or not they are properly fused, meaning by "properly," so that they will not only certainly fall, but fall quickly in case of fire; (e) make such tests as we might be able to as to the condition and adjustment of all sound apparatus and the results attained with it; (f) last but far from least we would hand to the manager a note reading something like this:

"Dear Sir: We believe thoroughly in the importance of excellence in the work of projection. We ask that you, sir, accept it as fact that we shall make every possible effort to give you and your audiences the very best results in picture and sound it is possible to obtain from the films delivered to us, believing that such results will bring more money to the box office than would those of less excellence. To this end, sir, we ask your co-operation in the matter of providing all those things necessary to keep the projection equipment in good condition, since unless this be done it will of course be impossible to secure the excellence in picture and sound we desire to give you."

I was both well pleased and surprised at this answer. Brothers Daris and Simms have been sending in good answers for a long while, but up to now none quite good enough to be selected for publication. This, however, I regard as in some respects one of the best ever sent in to this "school."

I realize it is quite true some men may feel inclined to elevate their noses at such a line of procedure, but such men realize, deep down in the bottom of their hearts, that it is one hundred per cent correct procedure nevertheless. I also realize that some men holding down the manager's chair might sneer at such reports as are proposed, written or otherwise, but as Van Vaulkenburg says, they are to be pitied. The man who has ability to be a real theatre manager would be well pleased to receive such reports, and such a letter as proposed. He would have the ability and brains to understand that the writers of the reports and letters were men who were in earnest in the desire to deliver really good results; also, that in all human probability their ability was not small. He would honor them for such desire, and in all reasonable things —co-operate with them.

In considering such an answer it is well to understand that merely because in the past projection has been treated by both managers and projectionists as merely the operation of certain mechanisms, behavior such as this answer suggests tends strongly to build up and raise it to the higher plane, where it rightfully has a place.

I would appreciate a letter from some of you setting forth your own reaction to such matters.

What Every Woman Knows

(MGM)

Romance

For showmen who know and appreciate valuable entertainment merchandise this picture is an unusual opportunity to prove their business-creating ability. "What Every Woman Knows" is a sane picture for intelligent persons, of especial interest for many reasons. Such are its assets that you'll probably want to stand out in front of the theatre and shout to passersby to come in and see the production. It's romance, not new, but refreshing and unique. There is a heart throb in its love interest. A delightful human touch characterizes the drama. The comedy is natural, yet sparkling and spontaneous. All these elements are continuous in the picture; they are never dragged in by the heels.

There is commercial and entertainment merit to the story as well as to the production in the way it is presented, acted and directed. Helen Hayes' worth is established, but that of Brian Aherne is something new. Here he is so effectively different that any comparison to his past efforts is useless. It can be safely counted upon that word-of-mouth advertising in regard to him will be a distinct asset. This combination of personalities immediately suggests that "What Every Woman Knows" is a woman's picture. Its acceptance solely as that would be a mistake. The story is simple. There is nothing flamboyant or glamorous. It's merely comedy-romance-drama, presented in an atmosphere of sincerity, basing its hopes for box office success on the production alone, plus whatever local value accrues to cast personalities.

In the story, Maggie is an aging spinster. The only hope of her father, Alic Wylie, and two brothers, James and David, is to get her married. They make a deal with John Shand, whereby they agree to educate him, and he on the completion of his education, will marry Maggie. The situation makes possible a lot of surprising comedy. Time passes, and Maggie, always in the background, spurs John to realization of his ambitions. As the picture takes on a political atmosphere, demure Maggie contrives the startling propaganda bullets which the radically dynamic John fires. He, thinking that he alone is responsible for his success, is elected to Parliament. Everything he does which raises him to prominence in his party is inspired by Maggie, but the egotist can see only himself and his ability.

When another woman, Sady Sybil, comes into his career and he succumbs to her glamour, Mouselike Maggie so arranges it that their clandestine romance soon palls upon each. When John comes to the crisis in his career, it's Maggie that makes the decision that he thinks is his own. The only time he does anything on his own is when he realizes his wife's great love.

While this picture is set in Scotland and its theme accentuates the Scottish character without either ridiculing or satirizing, its humor is punchy to an extreme degree. Dealing only in romantic and dramatic elements which are generally familiar, it is a class picture with distinct mass appeal. It has the character to entertain the adults of both sexes as well as the young modernes.

It may not be an easy picture to sell. It is suggested that, if possible, it be seen before presentation. With the knowledge thus obtained, hard work, plus a straightforward, sincere appeal to general patronage convincingly carrying the message that this is a picture fully worth their time and money, should bring results.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Menace

Melodrama

This is a dramatic mystery melodrama. Played against an atmosphere of vivid terror suggestion, that element is nicely contrasted by natural comedy. As hokum is mixed with startling realism, the show is packed with substantial entertainment and showmanship assets. Short in running time, although quite a few minutes are devoted to getting under way, the picture moves speedily, a quality uniquely accented by the manner in which suspense is utilized.

Cast names being none too potent, the story is the most valuable selling asset, not only a treat for the mystery fans and amateur crime sleuths, but interesting all around entertainment for general audiences. Unlike most mystery pictures, it conceals the identity of its menace until the last moment of the climax. Suspicion is cast on practically everybody; one misleading clue is given which further serves to upset all advance conclusions.

The yarn opens in Africa. Construction engineer Bastion is invited to a bridge party along with Helen Chalmers, Colonel Crecy and Bellamy. A storm breaks out. Hopping into his plane, Cavendish sees his dam break and he himself is dashed to death.

The other three receive messages from the dead man's brother that he will have vengeance. A year passes and the locale shifts to a Santa Barbara mansion. The three survivors, together again, get messages that their time has come. Then the picture plunges into its suspense packed but comedy tinged mystery. Skinner arrives as a butler. Come dowager Mrs. Thornton and Cavendish to pay a neighborly call. Gloria Chalmers and boy friend Forsythe return from the polo matches.

Then the fun begins. The unknown menace makes known his presence. Bellamy is his first victim. A search for his murderer leads into many complications. Phone wires are cut; all the autos disabled, lights go out, all but the excitement loving Mrs. Thornton are terror stricken. Crecy is wounded. Chauffeur Wilcox, going for help, has his hat shot off. As sister Gloria searches for a missing rifle, butler Skinner is shown in a sequence that surely identifies him as the menace. Building strongly to its climax, the end comes fast and amazingly. One totally unsuspected is revealed as the menace.

The menace is the big selling quality. Put this picture before your patrons with a challenge. Dare them to identify the menace before the end. Ask those who have seen it to keep the secret. Put a little novelty similar to that which is in the picture into your campaign, adapt every known means to stir up curiosity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Gay Divorcee

(Radio)

Comedy-Romance

Always light and gay, this picture is comedy romance, the comedy predominating, with lots of dancing and music. Adapted from a stage play, a formula stage play romance motivates, but the real showmanship and entertainment is in the dancing and accompanying music, both vocal and instrumental. As such it is colorful and in many spots unusual. Considered as an up-to-date musical comedy, an attraction that contains all the elements, both bizarre and real, which audiences generally expect to find in entertainment of this character, it is a show that should have unique appeal for the modernes and at the same time afford much to interest the more staid adults.

In the story, what is to be expected is made evident at the start. Jittery purse-forgetting Egbert causes Holton to dance for their supper in lieu of a few hours of dish-washing. The dance song color being established, the ensuing episode has Egbert in bathing suit stepping with the Dancer and chorus to the rhythmic tune of "Let's Knock Knees." The sight of Mimi causes Holton's heart to go aflutter, and when that lady, accompanied by Aunt Hortense, comes to Egbert's office to find out how she may get a divorce, the groundwork for the comedy romance is laid.

Moving into an exclusive hotel in England's famous Brighton Beach, Holton is a romantic pest to Mimi: she considers his amorous activities a hazard to her divorce plans. The comedy is heightened by the entrance of Tonetti, professional correspondent, and as the production builds to its big spectable shot, "The Continental," Mimi begins to succumb to Holton's wooing. The Continental being the outstanding eye attraction, made so by its flashing rapid fire action as Mimi and Holton dance to a background of an elaborately costumed chorus, the yarn approaches its climax with the entree of Mimi's husband. He, however, is quickly put on the spot as a chiseling philanderer by the remarks of the waiter and the way is cleared for Mimi's divorce, which, of course, means that she and Holton will be able to listen to wedding bells.

Showmanship that best takes advantage of the merits in production and personnel, emphasizing the fun in its comedy, the gayety of its romance and the sparkle and zip in the music and dancing, should stir up plenty of advance interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Two Heads on a Pillow

Comedy-Drama

If the name Dorothy Canfield, rather well known novelist, may mean anything to the exhibitor's patronage, and the novel, "The Eternal Masculine," there may be more chance of arousing interest in this film than otherwise appears on the surface. Let it be known, however, that the aforementioned novel merely suggested the screen play which has been concocted as the basis of this independently-produced picture. Also, in the sense that the theme virtually revolves about the question of marriage, divorce and happiness, or lack of it, the picture may be found in a measure appealing by women. Certainly it is not a family film, and is hardly of the caliber which is likely to prove particularly appealing to men.

There is, as a matter of fact, comparatively little which may be adequately sold about the picture. The cast names are at best inconspicuous, the performances not especially outstanding, though competent, and the story above all lacking in pace. A plethora of dialogue continuously takes a strangle hold on what little action there is in the film, and effectively throttles it. The result is something very like the argumentative type preachment which on occasion appears on the legitimate stage in the guise of a comedy-drama of marriage, morals and manners.

Neil Hamilton and Miriam Jordan share the lead, and are the best names. In support in particular is Henry Armetta, Italian-accented comedian, whose name may be more familiar in the community than either of the principals.

It is, in a word, the type of thing that might be effective to a slight degree on the stage, but for the run-of-the-mill film audience, has little to recommend it.

Hamilton and Miss Jordan, married a few months, quarrel and are divorced. Seven years later Hamilton is a successful lawyer, attorney for a wealthy man and woman who are being sued for $100,000 by Armetta and his son, the son charging that Hamilton's clients, the mother especially, were the cause of the annulment of the marriage of their daughter to Armetta's son. Armetta explosively refuses to listen to reason, will not settle, and the girl's mother dares him to go to court. Hamilton is more than a little surprised to find the opposing attorney to be the girl he once had married.

Between the intermittent quarrels which have a theatrically unreal flavor, Hamilton renews his acquaintance with Miss Jordan, tries to persuade her to marry him again. She turns him down until, following the end of the case, in which she scores a complete victory over him, she agrees to try it again. Somewhere in the midweek is the likely playing position.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Liberty Pictures. Associate producer, M. H. Hoffman, Jr. Director, William Nigh. Story, continuity and dialogue by Albert De Mond. Suggested by "The Eternal Masculine" by Dorothy Canfield. Photographed by Harry Neumann. Production manager, Rudolph Flothow. Film editor, Mildred Johnston. Recorder, R. E. Tyler. Music supervised by A. F. Meyer. Running time, 71 minutes. Release date, October 2, 1934.

Power

Drama

In the manufacture, into motion picture product, of the strong, almost bitter drama inherent in "Power," the novel by the notable Lion Feuchtwanger, Gaumont-British, English producer, has made a strongly dramatic motion picture, but at the same time has propounded something of an exhibition problem, in turn largely dependent upon the local situation, if the large metropolitan center or the smaller community. The strongest selling asset connected with the picture is obviously its origin, the much talked about book of Feuchtwanger, himself an exiled Jewish author from Germany. In the large centers it is reasonable to suppose that a large percentage of the potential patronage will have read or heard of the book, and be definitely interested in the picture. In the smaller communities the drawing power of the book may be a less valuable selling factor.

The fact that the story deals with the continually recurring historical incident of oppression of the Jews, in view of the recent and current German situation, becomes another selling point, but there again the strength of the factor will perhaps be greater in the larger than the smaller situation. This is also true of the cast.

Conrad Veidt plays the lead, and strongly; the other names which may be slightly familiar are Cedric Hardwicke, Benita Hume. The exhibitor will best know the selling value of the name of Veidt dependent upon his locality. The story is heavily dramatic, with only small occasional flashes of relieving comedy. It is, actually, almost bitterly tragic throughout, which itself becomes a problem. To the credit of the producers let it be said that they soundly preserved the spirit and intent of the book. But the tragedy of the story, particularly the conclusion, cannot be taken as in keeping with the conception of motion picture entertainment, looked for by the general mass of average film patronage over the country. The "class" audience, on the other hand, is apt to appreciate the film for what it is, a faithful rendition of a bitterly tragic story, well told. If it be construed in a measure for what was perhaps partly the author's thought, propaganda against anti-Semitism, the same reaction is apt to hold true.

The story is set in the early 18th century, in a German principality under ducal reign, where Suss, a Jew of considerable wealth, with a recollection of his early years of poverty and oppression, builds himself cleverly to a position where he is vitally important financially and as an advisor, to the cousin of the duke. When the duke dies, the cousin succeeding, the position of Suss becomes even stronger. His one aim is to acquire sufficient all-embracing power in the state to be able to be of real service to his people, the oppressed Jews.

In elaborate and authentic setting, Suss has brought to him by the rabbi, his uncle, Hardwicke, whose role is splendidly taken, Suss's daughter, a young and attractive girl. The duke accidentally finds her in the forest home Suss has provided, and as he attempts to force himself upon her the girl is killed in a fall. Suss plans revenge, succeeds in wrecking the duke's reign, but is arrested himself as a conspirator. Almost a gratuitous addition of tragedy is Suss's hanging on the gallows, against a background of the wails of his people.

An adult attraction, it is for "class" audiences.—Aaronson, New York.

The Firebird

(Warner)

Murder Mystery

This is a murder mystery show, deviating so radically from formula that the film presents showmanship problems despite its entertainment worth. As it begins, the atmospheric suggestion is that of sophisticated drawing room dramatic romance. So effective is this quality that when it plunges into its mystery melodrama, the veering is so sudden that the picture's whole tone changes completely. It then becomes a realistic drama of a mother sacrificing her own honor to shield something she can vision but not understand.

The locale is a continental city, and practically all the action, which dialogue interprets, takes place in an apartment house. As the character of the Pointer family is established, Brandt is introduced as a self-satisfied matinee idol. Pursued by women, he believes he can move easily from one romantic conquest to another. Aware of his attempts to set himself right with Carola and her determination to repulse him, audiences know only by illusion of his relationship with her daughter Mariette.

When Brandt is found murdered the police inspector's questioning quickly demonstrates that Carola's confession of guilt, which amazed and shamed her husband, is a fabrication. His investigation leads him to Mariette. Telling of her association with the actor, she describes a vivid moment in their friendship which led to a struggle, the picking up of a gun and its accidental explosion which killed Brandt. Her confession climaxing the story, it is understood that her court trial, which will claim accidental killing in self-defense, will clear the name and reputation of the Pointer family.

Both phases of the picture are presented with convincing realism and this quality is accentuated by the incidental contrasting comedy. There is nothing grim or nerve-jerking about it. Consequently its appeal is rather to the more serious emotions. Sell it as it is, serious entertainment with a peculiar appeal to women, emphasizing the all-around merit in acting, story and production values.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Unfinished Symphony

(Gaumont-British)

Musical Romance

To the special appeal of the high class Continental production this adds the advantage of English speech. It is an adaptation, made in London, of a Cine Alliance production, directed by Willy Forst and featuring Marta Eggerth and Hans Jaray, which was notable in its original form both for its acting and for the brilliance of the music which is an integral part of the story. Both qualities are retained in Anthony Asquith's version, which might be better described as a translation. For music lovers there is the fact that Schubert's music is rendered by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and the chorus of the Vienna State Opera, while there is strong story value in the depiction of the composer's love history. Marta Eggerth's acting is outstanding.

Schubert is presented as a schoolmaster who cannot refrain from composing, even in the classroom, and leads his boys in song when they should be working on sums. He is given an opportunity to play in the drawing room of Princess Kinsky, the autocrat of Viennese society. His rendition of his B Minor Symphony is interrupted by hysterical laughter from Caroline, daughter of the Hungarian nobleman, Count Esterhazy. Schubert angrily closes the piano and refuses to continue, and so forfeits the support of his patronesses. Dismissed from his school, he is reduced to poverty, but is befriended by Emmie, a pawnbroker's daughter, who is in love with him. An unexpected appointment as music teacher in Hungary to Count Esterhazy's daughters, brings Schubert face to face with Caroline, of whose identity he had been unaware. She apologizes for her behavior in Vienna, and Schubert learns from her sister that his appointment was arranged by Caroline, in order to meet him again.

Caroline, in love with Schubert, shows her feelings by the way in which, during her music lessons, she sings the young composer's own love songs. Memories of Emmie lead him to resist until, dancing in peasant costume at a village festival, she sweeps him off his feet. The Count, pretending to consent to the marriage, sends Schubert to Vienna and there has him dismissed with a year's salary. Caroline is forced into marriage with a Hungarian nobleman. Schubert, summoned by a letter signed in Caroline's name, but actually written by her sister, arrives in time to see the ceremony. At the reception, he again plays the Symphony; again Caroline interrupts, this time with passionate tears. Schubert tears up the last pages of the manuscript and dedicates the work to Caroline as "The Unfinished Symphony."

Dignified selling methods should recommend this picture. The orchestral rendering of the Unfinished Symphony, both as a unit and as a recurring motive, is magnificent, and on the musical side are the further assets that many of Schubert's love songs are rendered by Marta Eggerth with charm and strong sentimental appeal. Hans Jaray can be featured for a very realistic and sensitive picture of the composer. Helen Chandler is there for her admirers. The production is on a big scale and as notable for the artistic accuracy of its atmosphere as for its scope.

The romantic story offers distinct possibilities for salesmanship, based on the girl's interruption of the symphony, once with laughter and once with tears, and on the fact that the film provides an answer to the question: "Why 'Unfinished'?"—Allan, London.

Time on Their Hands

Entertaining

With Charles Carlile as featured tenor, this subject in the Song Hit series offers tuneful entertainment, with the perennial effectiveness of the masculine chorus and quartette important to the entertainment. The setting is within a jail, where the inmates' glee club is desolated by the release of its tenor. Carlile is apprehended, and stays in jail long enough to be soloist for the boys. Two of the numbers in particular are amusing as to lyrics.—Running time, 11 minutes.

On Foreign Service

(Fox)

Interesting

This latest number of the excellent Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman series, contains subject matter of diversified and general interest, although for the most part it lacks the punchy thrill and pace of others of the series. As the news cameraman darts about foreign soil, he records elephants fighting in India, bullfighting in Spain and Portugal, the military here and politics there. It has, however, much more speed than the ordinary travelogue subject, and considerable general interest.—Running time, 9 minutes.

His Lucky Day

Fair Comedy

There are a few laughs in this comedy, featuring Ernest Truex, the almost diminutive comedian of the stage and screen. When Truex is told by the boss that he and a stubborn potential customer are coming to dinner, Truex is not too elated, but makes the best of the situation. He brews a cocktail which is potent, as indicated by his sampling. The boss lands his order, but only after a series of dinner mishaps which are occasionally amusing. On the whole, a fair comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Picturesque Portugal

(Fox)

Of Interest

There is general interest in this number of the Magic Carpet of Movietone series of travelogues. The camera work is, as always, excellent, and a minimum of explanatory dialogue permits the picture to speak for itself. Seen as the camera moves here and there over the face of the country, are the native fishermen, the nationally popular bullfights, native architecture and the like. The subject should be found appealing in the manner of travelogues.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction

Interesting

There is considerable general interest in this subject, number three of the series, with James Wallington, popular radio announcer, supplying the accompanying descriptive material. Pictured: alligators having teeth pulled; a young negro turned white; the activity of a Paris fish hospital; the pair of zebras, used by a St. Louis milk company to draw a wagon; the Canadian who uses steel hands with remarkable skill; a girl who uses her toes in uncanny fashion; the Arizon woman who catches snakes for a living—and a good one. Diversified, and of general interest.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Black Sheep

Fair

A cartoon reenactment of the fable which found the little black sheep crying "wolf" once too often, this is a fair animated. The black sheep, in retaliation for the manner in which he is snubbed, frightens the other sheep with his cry. Later they laugh when the wolf does appear, and the black one rescues the wolf's captive, his deed restoring his natural color. For youngsters, especially.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Water Rodeo

(Paramount)

Lively

Lively and entertaining is this subject in the Grantland Rice Sportlight series, in which the daredevils of the outboard motors strut their stuff in thrilling water races. The hurdle and obstacle race, in which one contestant after another loses his hopes, his boat and nearly himself, is the feature and high spot of the subject. The number is almost certain to entertainingly fill a position on any program.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Pichianni Troupe

(MGM)

Fast Action

To the accompaniment of Pete Smith's amiable and occasionally amusing explanatory patter, the famous Pichianni troupe of acrobats goes through its difficult and often thrilling routine. The fact that it is filmed supposedly atop a New York skyscraper adds to the excitement. The slow motion camera does its part in enhancing the effectiveness of the subject. Any audience should be entertained by the short.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Peculiar Penguins

(United Artists)

Excellent

Mr. Walt Disney seems to have successfully contrived once more to produce a Silly Symphony number which is wholly enjoyable, attractively colored and completely entertaining. The two penguin sweethearts get into difficulty when a puffer fish he has given her plays tricks after it is eaten. In disgrace, he regains his girl's affection when he rescues her from a pursuing shark. The number is definitely attractive for any audience.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Dizzy Dwarf

Uneventful

There's little of the unusual in this Oswald cartoon comedy, though the fairy tale of the dwarf, Rumplesilskin, who spins gold out of straw, is of the type that appeals to youngsters. Oswald's sister tells the poverty-worried king that she can fix that, but the dwarf says her life will be forfeited if she can't guess his name. Oswald comes to the rescue.—Running time, 9 minutes.

JAPAN STICKS TO STAGE DESPITE FILMS' GAINS

Attendance Figures for a Year Show 23,350,000 More Attend Legitimate Attractions

Japan, one of the smallest countries in the world, paradoxically is also probably the only country into which the motion picture art has crept during the past 15 years where the stage has not been superseded by the film. Despite the increased popularity of motion pictures in Japan, which has been greatly stimulated by the introduction of talking pictures, the old fashioned legitimate Japanese stage plays attract the largest audiences. Figures on the 1932 theatrical season in Japan show that while 177,343,933 persons attended motion picture performances, the number at legitimate attractions was 220,714,861.

24 Per Cent Children

Compared with 1930, however, the number attending motion picture theatres in 1932 showed an increase of 13 per cent, while the number attending stage performances increased by only 11 per cent.

Of the total number in 1932 attending film performances, 24 per cent were children, assistant U. S. Trade Commissioner Donald W. Smith, Tokyo, said last week.

The improvement in general economic conditions in Japan the past two years since the depreciation of the yen has greatly aided the motion picture industry, he said, and distributors estimate that receipts during 1933 were from 10 to 15 per cent higher than in 1932. All agree that both foreign and Japanese pictures never have enjoyed such popularity.

The length of program expected by Japanese audiences varies between 18,000 and 25,000 feet of film, the usual program consisting of two full length features, a short comedy and a newsreel. Long runs are not popular and programs must be changed at least once a week, except in the case of unusual pictures. During the past year some of the first-run houses in Japan have included elaborate stage shows, in addition to short product and double features, while second-run theatres in the larger cities show regular programs of three foreign talking pictures.

Native Product Dominates

At the end of 1933 there were approximately 1,520 motion picture theatres in Japan, an increase of 80 since 1932, and a gain of 128 since 1930. During 1933 there were several large modern theatres constructed in Tokyo and Osaka. Most theatres in Japan have a seating capacity of 300 to 800; less than 10 per cent seat more than 1,000.

The dominant position of Japanese-made films is well indicated by the number of film theatres which show domestic productions exclusively, according to Commissioner Smith. He cited an increasing tendency of exhibitors either to show Japanese films exclusively or include them with their programs of foreign films. At the end of 1932, there were 1,024 theatres showing only Japanese films, 49 theatres with foreign films only, and 386 giving mixed programs.

During the past year the quality of domestic productions is said to have improved to such an extent that the number of theatres showing foreign films exclusively has been reduced still further. The Japanese production branch—comprising about 33 producers—turns out more than 500 features a year.

There was a considerable increase in the number of film theatres wired for sound in 1933. According to the most reliable trade estimates, a total of 723 houses were equipped for sound, an increase of 384 over 1932. Only about 110 of all wired theatres in Japan have foreign sound equipment, the others being equipped with domestic apparatus of what the commissioner called questionable quality. The popularity of domestic sound equipment is said to be due almost entirely to the price, quotations for complete installations, including domestic projectors, ranging from $600 to $1,100.

Admission Prices Reduced

Competition among exhibitors in Japan has brought a downward trend in admission prices. In 1930, the maximum admission price in Japan was 2.00 yen, the minimum price, 0.05 yen, the average 0.33 yen. At the end of 1932, the maximum price remained the same, but the minimum had been lowered to 0.03 yen and the average price to 0.24 yen, while in 1933 the average admission was even lower.

Only one first-run in Tokyo charges 2.00 yen for its best seats, excluding boxes; the other two first-runs charge from 0.50 yen to 0.80 yen—approximately 15 and 25 cents at the current rate of exchange—for full programs including two features, short product and, frequently, a stage show.

There was a decline in the number of reels of both standard-sized talking and silent films imported into Japan, according to a report released by the Customs authorities, but a considerable increase took place in the number of 16 mm. silent films imported.

Imports of American films predominate, there being 5,743 reels of English dialogue films imported, of which 98 per cent were of American origin, 182 of German dialogue, 38 of French dialogue, and 54 of Russian dialogue. The total number of feature films imported during 1933, according to distributors, was 248 of which approximately 220 were of American origin.

Concentrating on Quality

In 1933 there was only a small increase in the number of talking and sound pictures produced in Japan, attention being centered more on improving quality. According to the best available trade figures, there were 497 features produced in Japan last year, of which 33 were talking pictures and 19 with sound effects. Production in 1932 amounted to 514 features, of which 28 were talkers and two part-talking pictures.

The largest domestic producer, Shochiku Cinema Co., Ltd., which also acts as a distributor and an exhibitor, made 96 features in 1933, including 60 silent films, 17 talkers and 19 sound films. Nippon Katsudo Shoshin Co., Ltd. (Nikkatsu) produced 87 films but made only four talking pictures; Shinko Kinema Co., Ltd., Japan's third largest producer, made 66, all silent. A new producer, Photo Chemical Laboratory Studio, made three talking pictures in 1933, and its schedule calls for one feature a month throughout this year.

A dual system of censorship prevails in Japan for imported films, examination by the Customs at port of entry, besides censorship by a national board maintained by the Home Department. Censorship of imported films by the Customs officials is merely an examination of the contents of the picture and only definitely objectionable scenes dealing with riots, revolution and "red" propaganda are ever deleted.

In general, Japanese censorship is lenient in comparison with the censorship of most Asiatic countries. The main general reasons for the censoring of films are:

Scenes making light of the dignity of royalty, whether serious or comic.

Scenes detracting from the dignity of established authority, particularly the judiciary and the police.

Revolution, sedition and jailbreaks.

Adultery, love-making if too erotic.

Excessive cruelty in certain forms.

Only 10 films were barred in entirety in 1933, eight of them American films, one Russian and one German.

Details were not yet available regarding the number of deletions made by the Home Department in 1933, but during the previous year 2,088 cuts, totaling 19,591 meters, were made. A total of 758 cuts, amounting to 7,655 meters, was made on American films in 1933, the most objectionable scenes being "kissing scenes," which were responsible for 261 cuts, amounting to 1,407 meters.

Of the Japanese films censored in 1932, there were 1,228 cuts made, totaling 10,895 meters. The greatest number of cuts made on Japanese films for any one reason was 94 for "sexual suggestiveness." Only seven deletions were made in American films for the same reason.

Close for Distribution Of Several Action Films

Henri Ellman and R. E. Beck have closed a deal with Exploitation Pictures for distribution of the serial, "Custer's Last Stand," and with Superior Talking Pictures for distribution of the western serial, "Pioneers of the Plains," the series of six Range Rider features, and the series of six Rough Rider features; and with Stage and Screen Productions for the six police dog melodramas, and six Northwest Mounted films. All these films are being distributed by Capitol Film Exchange, Chicago, in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

Melvin Hirsch and Bert Kulick have closed for distribution of the Rough Rider group, "Custer's Last Stand," police dog melodramas, "Pioneers of the Plains," and Northwest Mounted features. Miss M. Swift, London, has closed with Exploitation for distribution in Great Britain of "Enlighten Thy Daughter," with Stage and Screen for "Before Morning." Metropolitan Films, Seattle, has closed with R. M. Savini for 12 "Bud 'n' Ben," three-reel westerns, for Washington, Oregon and Montana.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended October 6, 1934, from 97 houses in 17 major cities of the country, reached $1,093,299, a decrease of $41,316 from the total for the preceding calendar week, ended September 29, when 101 houses in 18 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,134,615.

Blazing New Trails

IN ADVERTISEMENTS we've seen the M-G-M trademark lion, Leo, portraying the roles of Trader Horn, Santa Claus, Mr. John K. Exhibitor and others. But now he has assumed, literally, the role of a trail blazer, designed to benefit on a large scale the motion picture industry.

Along the ribbon-stretched highways of the nation, going East, West, North and South, you'll see 24-sheet boards drawing public attention to M-G-M pictures. On city streets in the most strategic locations these M-G-M 24-sheets are also in evidence. In leading fiction, style and other magazines M-G-M brings forceful sales messages in full-page displays into the homes of the American people; and through the local newspapers it ties its messages directly to the local showings of its productions.

Coupled with billboard, newspaper and magazine advertising M-G-M is continuing the tours of its already extensively-traveled Traveling Studio, creating interest, building good will, not alone for M-G-M, but for all motion pictures.

During the depression years M-G-M has maintained a force of able exploitation men. They have worked hand in hand with exhibitors, planting publicity stories with newspapers, effecting co-operative tie-ups with merchants, securing free time on radio broadcasts, making and placing window displays and other picture merchandising helps.

The screen has been given new life through great improvement in product. That's one essential to success in theatre operation. Selling —advertising, exploitation, merchandising— is another highly important essential. Even the best pictures don't sell themselves. And, too, many an average picture can be turned into a winner if it is properly sold.

When public interest lags, it has to be revived. When people stop buying theatre tickets, showmen go out and bring them to the ticket windows. Exhibitors have done the job in a limited way. But, as it is necessary in all big and successful merchandising campaigns, the manufacturer of a product must blaze the trail, charting it through courses that the individual retailer cannot take alone, yet which are beneficial to him.

Already the public is reacting to the initial blasts in the M-G-M campaign. Witness the success of the first three pictures to receive this extensive exploitation, namely, "Chained," "Treasure Island" and "The Barretts of Wimpole St." New trails are being blazed to the ticket windows of the nation.

New Hampton, Iowa

DEAR HERALD:

Last night we stayed in Hampton. We had thirty or forty good reasons for staying there. One reason was that they had a good hotel, but the main reason was to meet Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peterson again and see their Windsor theatre, which is about the best theatre in northeast Iowa. If you have never met these people you have our sympathy.

Charley was playing Claudette Colbert and Clark Gable in "It Happened One Night." When you see the title to this one you are apt to conclude that it is liable to be somewhat racy, but you will be mistaken. It is as clean as one could wish, and these two excellent stars put it over to the satisfaction of all who saw it. We will recommend this one as high-class entertainment.

We recently saw Clark Gable and Joan Crawford in "Chained." They told us that this picture had been cut, and after we saw it we wondered why they didn't cut it some more. It's the old triangle story of a faithless wife who divorces her husband to marry another man, and the director evidently doesn't have a very high regard for marriage vows or the effect this class of entertainment might have on the American youth. You may like it. We didn't.

That Timber Belt Again

We noted in the issue of September 8 of the HERALD that T. J. Starker, professor of forestry of the Oregon State College, shoots both barrels at us for what we said about the "Timber Belt" idea of producing rain. He did, however, agree with us that rain comes from moisture.

We are not a scientist—in fact, we are only one of the common herd; but it has been a custom of ours all our life, when trying to analyze scientific problems, to inject in them a little common horse sense, and we have frequently found that the horse got the best of it.

Professor Starker tells us that our rain comes principally from timber, and he ought to know, since he is at the head of the forestry service of Oregon, and it would be presumptuous on our part to question his judgment, but we'd like to ask him a question or two, not in a spirit of criticism, but for our own personal information.

Washington, Oregon and California are heavily timbered states, more so perhaps than any other three states in the Union and, as we understand it, their rainy season out there commences generally about December first and it rains almost continually until April, and from then until the following December these forests receive scarcely a drop of rain, while the "corn belt" section, which has practically no trees at all, gets its rain during the growing season while the coast forests are having their dry season. If "trees produce rain" why is this, Professor?

We were in Independence, and this is in the eastern part of Iowa. Night before last the wind was from the east and was off Lake Michigan and the moisture it carried was so dense and so foggy that driving yesterday was somewhat hazardous, but last night the wind changed to the northwest and was so cool that the fog was condensed into rain drops and it rained all night and is still at it this morning. Put a tea kettle full of water on a redhot stove and the heat will evaporate the water and steam will rise to the ceiling where it comes in contact with a cooler surface and it is condensed into drops of water, and not a tree in the room. The reason why we have more rain in the summer than in the winter is because there is more heat in the summer to evaporate the water than in the winter. Why is Salt Lake so salty that one could not sink in it? Because the constant evaporation of water for thousands of years carries no salt, but leaves it in the lake, and you can't sink in salt. Everybody is interested in rain, and if we were in the forestry service we most likely would contend that "rain comes from trees"; but until we join that service we are going to stick to our original belief that "Timber Belt" idea for producing rain is a pipe dream originating from the fifth grade. We don't know anything about it, so we are going to leave this "rain" business to forestry people who do, but since the picture business is largely dependent upon whether we get rain or not, why not discuss it? We are connected, in a way, with the picture business, but we have still got a halter on that horse.

At Cresco we met F. R. Peffer who operates the Cresco theatre, and listen, Lizzie, we found him a mighty swell fellow. Cresco is where Fred Hinds used to bunco the public at the Cresco theatre before he transferred his activities to Whitewater, Wisconsin. They have discovered a cave near Cresco that is likely to rival the Wind Cave of South Dakota in its extent, and is quite likely some day to become a famous sightseeing resort for people who have sense enough to "See America First." There are those who have gone to foreign countries so often that some day they will try to go to the Moon to see if it is really made of Green Cheese. They also think that rain comes from trees.

Standing with the Community

W. F. Smith still operates the Colonial theatre at Clarion. He must stand well in the community or he couldn't make a success of the Colonial as long as he has. We had a delightful visit with him and also his son and hope to meet them again.

Decorah is located down in a canyon which looks like a hole in the ground, but it is a nice looking town and it has a mighty fine theatre manager in H. Engbertson, who has survived without having ever met us until day before yesterday. We introduced ourself to him just as the Chief of Police went by and he didn't call him in, which proves that he is not very familiar with our past history. Anyhow, he is a 100 per cent guy and we hope to meet him again.

We stopped at New Hampton to visit our old friends Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Potter, who operate the theatre there. We never like to miss them because they are such delightful people to meet. We also met Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bloomer. Mr. Bloomer is an uncle of Mrs. Potter and you will remember that he was kidnaped at Monroe, Wis., some time ago and held for $100,000 ransom. He gave us quite an account of the case which was very interesting, and, from his tell of it, we have decided that we'd sooner go fishing than be kidnaped. We don't believe in that stuff, anyhow.

Mighty Swell Theatre

We had a delightful visit again with Mr. and Mrs. Palmer, who operate a mighty swell theatre at Postville. Mr. Palmer was rather under the weather and we hope he soon recovers. It's a pleasure to meet such folks.

George L. Cohen operates the Princess at West Union. We had a delightful visit with him and he took us to dinner and told the girl to "draw two." George is the type of man who makes you feel right at home all the time. We wish they were all like George. Good luck, old-timer.

At Fayette we found Mr. Kappmeyer, manager of the Cozy theatre, sick in bed with a bad cold, and his wife was sweating him with hot water bottles and blankets, and boy, was he sweating. We hope he gets better.

We have a lot more we could tell you, but Ernie would get sore about it, he's so touchy that 'way, so guess we'd better stop for now.

A COLUMBIA PICTURE

"...THE BOX OFFICE DRAW SHOULD BE THE ONLY MEASURING STICK FOR TALENT"

—Eddie Cantor

This "stick" has been a silent but potent measure of Hollywood salaries for a long time. The triumph or disappointment of expensive productions at the point of public response, measured in cold hard figures, is an unfailing criterion of all creative talent-writers, actors, directors, technicians and, in a very real sense, of producers and executives whose judgment dictated the type of story, its treatment, assembled the cast who gave it being, and its costs.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD and MOTION PICTURE DAILY, long aware of the significance of box office reports, have made them an exclusive weekly and daily feature, published without comment. Now the editorial and statistical facilities of both publications have combined to issue the first annual BOX OFFICE CHECK-UP, a summary, with comment, of box office reports and other factors that have contributed to screen triumphs of the past twelvemonth. For the first time there is being set up an annual record and reference medium to serve producer, distributor and exhibitor alike, to measure the possible returns of the future by commonsense values of the immediate past.

Notable among the features to be presented in the BOX OFFICE CHECK-UP is a list of all Box Office Champions from August 1933 to July 1934 — the big money makers of that time with names and duties of the personnel engaged in their production, including all whose genius combined artistic accomplishment with great box office values.

What the Picture Did For Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AMONG THE MISSING: Richard Cromwell, Billie Seward—Double billed this on my action change. I didn't hear a word of comment on it one way or another, and the house reaction was negligible. Just a program picture and apparently they regard it as such. Business better than normal.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—If your patrons like Holt, it will satisfy them. Just a fair program picture is about all that can be said. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 19-20.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Robert Armstrong—Good program picture.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—Nothing I can say would add to the praises written by other exhibitors. It's a great piece of entertainment. All I can say is ditto to everything good any one said about this picture. Too bad we are forced to buy so many junk program pictures in order to get ONE good one like this picture. Played August 26-28.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert, and LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—Every one knows that the above two pictures are among the best produced last year. I do not want to add anything about the merits of the pictures, but I want to recommend that every small town or large town date these back for a second run. It's surprising the number of people who will see them over. In each case I double billed them, and did an outstanding business. It don't make any difference how old they are: they will still draw and please.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

MAN'S GAME, A: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—A mighty good action picture. The stars fine, also a good cast with them. Made a very satisfactory Saturday show, but I still say Tim should get back to westerns. When the natives begin to ask for Tim McCoy in a western, it is about time he came back with his horse. Country towns want westerns and the guy that don't play them is out of customers, that's all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell—A wonderful picture. Jean Arthur's acting great. Story fine. I call it one of the best pictures we have played for the past year. A lot of patrons commented on the picture as they left the theatre and told us at the box office it was fine.—Bert Silver, Silmer Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro, Jackie Searl, Lois Wilson, George Breakston—This is one of the finest pictures we ever played of any company's pictures. Every theatre should play this one and every body should see it. More of this kind of stories should be made in pictures for the benefit of the rising generation. I call it a classic and better than a program picture. Played September 27-28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RUSTY RIDES ALONE: Tim McCoy, Barbara Weeks—This is about the poorest picture this star ever made. A disappointment to the western picture fans, because it had very little action in it and we received one of the worst prints we have ever had from Columbia. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 31.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHTAWAY: Tim McCoy—Good action picture. Good recording. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHIRLWIND, THE: Tim McCoy—This is one of the best westerns we've played. Good riding, shooting, a rodeo show and wrestling match between McCoy and the villain; plenty of excitement and thrills. Running time, 55 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly—Good program picture with plenty of action. Recording good. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—A real good comedy that people understood and like. Business good. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 3-4-5.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Well, Joe, you have redeemed yourself for making "A Very Honorable Guy." People came out and they laughed. —A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

REGISTERED NURSE: Bebe Daniels, Lyle Talbot—This was a good surprise to me. I thought it as good as many classed as specials. It has lots of humor, and that's what our patrons like. Running time, 62 minutes.—Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace Theatre, Gordon, Neb. Small town patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dolores Del Rio, Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Was liked better and did better business than any we have played for some time. Running time, 84 minutes. Played August 30-September 1-2.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson—Not the picture it is cracked up to be. Played old, maybe it has lost its fire. All of Warner chorus numbers are overlong with drills. Played September 20-21.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES: Hugh Williams, Helen Twelvetrees—This will make enemies and I don't mean maybe. It's English—that should tell a lot. More walkouts on this than any other picture we've had in a year. Running time, 79 minutes.—Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace Theatre, Gordon, Neb. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Personally I enjoyed this picture very much. It is full of good wholesome entertainment. Harold does well with his part, as do all the members of the cast. As a box office attraction it is just average. It goes to show, you must keep before the public or they forget you. There are many original gags in the picture and it is full of thrills. It deserves a place among the best of the year, and yet it did not do a big business. It seems good to see Lloyd back on the screen again, and I hope he will be more active in the future. Played September 9-10.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, James Dunn, Ginger Rogers—Another good picture with a good cast.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

DEVIL TIGER: Kane Richmond—Will get by if your audience isn't too critical. Some of the faked shots are very noticeable, but as an animal picture it gave satisfaction. Drew well. Played Aug. 10-11.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—Ruth Gillette went over big here as a Mae West type. The boys sure gave her the oh's and ah's.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien, Irene Bentley, Berton Churchill—Played this one late, but got a nice play on it. Some of our patrons said it reminded them of Mae West. Running time, 66 minutes.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—I note this picture is now approved by the new Production Code. The opening sequences are slow and draggy. Once the picture is allowed to get underway, it becomes very interesting and entertaining to the audience. Business fair. Running time, 74 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—Nice little show, but Baxter deserves a better story than this. Played September 16-17.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Now here is a real picture. Will Rogers is extremely careful that nothing risque or indecent creeps into his productions. Three cheers for Bill! This is one grand piece of entertainment for old and young. We would have no Legion of Decency if Will Rogers was selecting the story material. A great picture that commands the respect of all right-thinking people. Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 2-3.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwingsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

I WAS A SPY: Herbert Marshall, Madeleine Carroll—Folks, I am telling you this one broke all records as being the highest class of different nationalities ever dated on my screen. You will be sorry when it has played your theatre. Never in all my life have I ever witnessed such a miserable horror as this disgusting picture.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye—Fox deserves credit for this one. The life of the gambler and his love for his wife are well exposed. The hitch in this story is that his love for his wife is so great that he must play around with another gambler's girl. A moral gathered from "Now I'll Tell" is that "if the smartest of all fail how can any others expect to beat the racket" Business good. Running time, 87 minutes. —Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye, Helen Twelvetrees—Good picture till the last reel, a killing mixup which kills the picture. Why can't they end good and all feel better. Running time, 87 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—Not a special and hardly as good as you would expect from this cast, but it's fair entertainment, and will please.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees, Frank Morgan—Not so good. It will get by if they like a lot of dialogue and some slight modicum of action when Helen Twelvetrees joins the circus for a slight shot as a bareback rider. I have seen better and have seen worse. Your audience won't break down the doors to see it the second night.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—Used this one on a Friday and Saturday, but not as a western. John Boles certainly was a disappointment in "Wild Gold." Couldn't Fox find a better fitted man to play this part? I believe that he has fallen a great deal in the estimation of our patrons. Harry Green as J. Lorillard Pushkin was very good. I predict they will be using the "cracker handicap" in our saloons soon. Business okay. Running time, 77 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MGM

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Lewis Stone, Patsy Kelly—Did good business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow—Good picture. Good cast. Good story. Satisfaction all round and but few kicks.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn—A sweet picture, and good business. All members of the cast are good, but this little girl Jean Parker is excellent in this picture. Just the kind for the small town and it pleased every one.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—A fair picture which did just ordinary business. Think Legion of Decency has hurt this one for me.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—One of the finest pieces of entertainment to come out of any studio this year. Only Metro could make this type of picture. It has splendid superb acting, direction, sound and quality. This picture will please any audience 100 per cent and you don't have to hide behind the door when they come out; you can stand up with a great big smile and they will all smile back because they all feel that they have had a delightful evening's entertainment. Maybe I am feeling too good about this one, but look, fellows, when they are on their way out and come up to you and say, "Wonderful — Dandy—Great—Fine—Very Good—Splendid" — and all that sort of stuff, who wouldn't feel good? All the advertising and publicity you can give it won't be enough. Step on it! Give it all you've got. Played September 2-4.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy—Nothing much to this one. Just so many reels of film.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy—Very good comedy but Spencer Tracy does not draw for us. Played Sept. 16-17.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: George Brent, Myrna Loy—This is only fair entertainment that did not please my patrons. It is a wartime story, located in Berlin in 1915, but there are no battle scenes in the entire picture. It is a story of the women spies and the part they played in the World War. Practically none of my patrons knew what the title meant and after seeing the show, they didn't care. Business only fair. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Sept. 22, midnight show.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—"Yes, Madam," "Yes, Your Excellency" is all there is to it. Do you know who would rave over pictures like this? Running time, 90 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—Good picture, but the title killed it for business. Where do they get these titles from? Just let me thank MGM for their splendid press books. These beautiful sheets are in a class by themselves, and I consider them the best on the market.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, May Robson, Karen Morley, Gladys George—Just a rehash of the old, old story of a crook who tries to go straight. Might be O. K. on a double bill and that's all you can say for this one. Business punk. Running time, 59 minutes. Played September 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—This is one grand picture that offers excellent entertainment for all classes of patrons. It is a mystery melodrama with plenty of comedy thrills and romance. However, the objection is that it is a gangster theme and three murders are committed. Both Powell and Miss Loy turn in a splendid performance together with the rest of the cast. Played two days to good business. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Sept. 24-25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Real entertainment. Many favorable comments on this one. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 4-5.—Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace Theatre, Gordon, Neb. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—One of the best pictures of the kind we have played. Story interesting and stars great, also all of the cast. Gave good satisfaction to all. Played September 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—This is a fair program picture that will please the average picture fan. Too much dialogue in parts. Business good for three days showing. Played Sept. 16-17-18.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger—If the players had not been so well known and liked, this picture would have been a worse flop than it was. My patrons did not like this type of story—crazy people, crippled people and really an infant committing murder. Put this one in on your rip-roaring western night and it will get by—but try to play it on any other but a Saturday night and the Lion will roar! Oh, yez, oh, yez, and some more yez. Played September 22-24.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore—This drew well first night. Wallace Beery fine, but you won't get them second night as the supporting cast are in roles of hoodlums and playing drunk. Running time, 110 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—A great picture. Story known by every school boy and girl. Both the stars great, but I think Jackie Cooper stole the picture. He was certainly wonderful. Beery is always great in all his pictures, and Lionel Barrymore and Otto Kruger were very much there in their parts. The whole cast great. I call it a 100 per cent picture. Played September 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery, Leo Carrillo, Fay Wray, Stuart Erwin, Donald Cook, Joseph Schildkraut, Katherine DeMille—A magnificent production. Wallace Beery gives a superb performance, ably assisted by Stuart Erwin. Pleased the men and boys one hundred per cent plus, but it did not go over so well with the ladies. In fact, most of them stayed away because they thought they would not like it. Personally, I did not like it. It is too cruel and relentless, but it is a great picture and I would advise exhibitors to exhibit it for the benefit of those who like this kind of picture. Some came and liked it who do not care for the ordinary picture. Running time, 115 minutes. Played Sept. 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Monogram

CITY LIMITS: Ray Walker, Sally Blane, Frank Craven—Nothing big, nothing wonderful, but nevertheless good program entertainment, which goes to prove that Monogram can make pictures when they try. Played August 22-23.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Louise Dresser, Ralph Morgan—A capable picture, and a box-office surprise. Originally booked for three days, it was increased to five, and held up over the whole period. I will also play a return engagement in the future. Gross compares favorably with "Little Women." Pleased every one better than expected, as it seemed to me only average in production, direction and acting. But every one told me it was swell, so it must have clicked on the outside. Shoot the works on this one and don't spare Gene Stratton Porter.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Oregon. University and general patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Chalk up a real hit from Monogram. Here is the outstanding box-office hit of the present season. This picture broke a two-year box-office record on a Sunday, Monday. Not only is it box-office, but it gives entire satisfaction to the people who pay for an evening's entertainment. I do not believe this picture cost a million to make; it may not be produced as some of the major companies would have done, maybe the cast are not the biggest in the business, the director may have made mistakes, but all I know is that people came from miles to see the picture on Sunday, and sent their friends and relations to see it on Monday. I do not know much about the production end of the picture business, but I do know when my patrons are satisfied, and the "Girl of the Limberlost" made me a lot of money and pleased my patrons. Good stories are hard to find and the popularity of the book will be the success of this picture. Get a good story and you will have a good picture regardless of the cast. Here's hoping the "Keeper of the Bees" will be another box-office honey. Thanks, Monogram, for this early date. I understand we are the first in the West to run this picture. Played September 16-17.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker—This is only fair entertainment of the comedy drama type. It is a story of a small town boy who makes good in the big city and loses out by his boastfulness. There is plenty of comedy and romance, set behind the scenes of a radio program in the making. If you must play it, one day is enough. We played one day to only fair business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Sept. 21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells, Noel Francis—Not good—not bad—just so-so. Won't do you any harm and won't do you any good. Use your own judgment about this one. Recording the worst thing about it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 26-27.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

MONTE CARLO NIGHTS: Mary Brian, John Darrow—Neat little picture that pleased.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

RANDY RIDES ALONE: John Wayne—This is a very good picture that will please all western fans. It is crammed full of action, fighting, riding and thrills. This is one of the best pictures Wayne has made this season and with a few more stories like this one, he will be as popular as any of the old western stars. Monogram always gives us good western pictures and that is just what we want. Running time, 54 minutes. Played Sept. 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHOCK: Ralph Forbes, Gwenllian Gill, Monroe Owsley—A very good picture. We played it on a double feature bill and it gave good satisfaction. Story interesting and acting good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SIXTEEN FATHOMS DEEP: Creighton Chaney—My third Monogram picture and it sure pleased my Friday, Saturday patrons. There's a sailor in this that resembles Popeye very much. Had I known this ahead of time it would have aided me in advertising it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne—This little western did more business for me than anything I've run this year. Cotton season helped attendance. Picture pleased most every one. My folks like this fellow.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and His Orchestra—Poor old Mae is on the "spot," more so because of the type she portrays—because of the Decency campaign. Personally, thought it as good as any former picture, but many told me they were disappointed and I think it was more psychological than anything else. They imagined the "Laundry" washed out all the Mae Westicieries because of all the hullabaloo about Mae West, and in justice to our little Mae, she never did in her honest portrayal of the "gal" of the nineties hold a candlestick to the present-day type of her kind. She's decent in comparison. However, my box-office was short about 30 per cent of "I'm No Angel." Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 23.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen—Very good picture. Enjoyed by all. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March—Although this picture did not draw, it caused a lot of talk and some people came twice to see it. It is very unusual, but I wonder if any exhibitor in the country has made any money on it. Played Sept. 19-20.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Fredric March, Gary Cooper, Miriam Hopkins, Edward Everett Horton—Exceptionally delightful entertainment—the kind that only Ernst Lubitsch can produce. It is light and some of the situations are unreasonably silly. It is my personal opinion that nothing in the picture will hurt any one's morals, although some exhibitors seem to think so. Nevertheless, it pleased to an average business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 29-30.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

ELMER AND ELSIE: George Bancroft, Frances Fuller—Usual run of play. George Bancroft and Roscoe Karns were the leading players to hold the interest. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott, Monte Blue, Barbara Fritchie—This one has the Zane Grey label, but is just an average two-bit western. In my opinion, the poorest Zane Grey story to date. Did average business here. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 22.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou—One of the best drawing cards of the season. While the story was poor, little Miss Marker was wonderful. Why don't they give this little star better and cleaner stories? Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—It was surprising how people came out to see this and how every one praises this little star. The picture is very good and the entire cast helps Shirley put it across. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou—They sure turn out to see Shirley and they liked this, but I think it is too bad there had to be so many crooks in it as it draws so many youngsters. Running time, 60 minutes.—Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace Theatre, Gordon, Neb. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle—Much better than George White's Scandals due to the fact that it has some story running through it and it is not so disjointed as the former picture. My opinion is that Carroll allowed a director that knew more about keeping a revue moving to direct. That is apparent in the "Vanities." Very elaborate settings. A fan number that is beautiful with the fans rippling as waves with the girls under them, but these revues do not do the business the production warrants, for some reason that I cannot solve. The revue is spectacular in a lot of numbers. Certainly, it brings to the small town screens something that many have never seen, but it did just a little above average business and should have done more.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea

Wieck—Very good picture for the ladies. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrudé Michael—A fast moving comedy drama that was well liked by those who saw it. The title was against it. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 6-7-8.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Comedy throughout the show. W. C. Fields is a riot in this play. Boy, he sure drives away the blues. Give us more plays with him starring in them. Running time, 71 minutes. Played September 4-5.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Very good comedy. Recording good. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—In my opinion a complete knockout. One of the funniest pictures this year, and yet many will not get the Fields jokes. He is one of the most clever comedians on the screen and all of his pictures have been good this year.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpeher, Idaho. General patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, John Lodge—Flopped badly. Nearly every one voiced camplaint which can be summed up by what one man said: "What do I care about Russia three hundred years ago?" When will the producers discover the nation we live in? When will they quit talking about English markets and make pictures for the greatest market the world has ever known?—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Mampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie—A play that any show fan will enjoy. Comedy, romance, music and anything else that people enjoy seeing. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields, George Burns and Gracie Allen, Alison Skipworth—Good comedy. Down-to-earth story that every one liked. Average business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 26.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—A pleasing little picture. Our patrons were satisfied. Business not so good as this was run week following "County Fair," but it was no fault of the picture. Sylvia Sidney did some nice acting. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 2-3.—Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace Theatre, Gordon, Neb. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—Fair picture. Drew Sunday business to correspond. Played Sept. 9-10.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—Exceptionally fine program picture. Gave excellent satisfaction here. Drew above average. Splendid cast and Frances Drake's dance numbers were outstanding. She can act, too, and is very beautiful, so we'll probably be seeing her often. Adolphe Menjou is perfect in his role and George Raft is much better in this than some of his others. Lots of good comments. Played Aug. 28-29-30.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—We received many compliments on this picture. For good, tense drama with a few comedy touches, it is splendid. The drawing power not so good due to the fact not a player in it is very well known. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—Very fine comedy. Fields is in a class by himself. A few people do not care for him but there are a great many who are completely sold on him. Drew well here and we received lots of good comments. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, Buster Crabbe, Adrienne Ames—Good comedy that got plenty of laughs. Did fair business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 19.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—Business off on this. Fields has never been a very good draw for me, but the ones who do like him, like him a lot. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—From all the ballyhoo RKO gave us, this was about the biggest flop in a long time. It should not be mentioned in the same breath with "Flying Down to Rio." Looks like both the story writer and director started the production, then went fishing and forgot to come back. The title sure was becoming. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 16.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

FOUNTAIN, THE: Ann Harding, Brian Aherne, Paul Lukas—Did not draw as Ann Harding should and many did not like it and said so. Maybe they'll learn to give this star some story material to work on before they kill her altogether. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 25.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston, Frances Dee—A very fine picture; clean and entertaining. The star fine, also the whole cast. Wonderful background to this picture, and if you have not played it, get it and the picture will please any audience. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: John Boles, Ann Harding.—Excellent picture. Pleased women 100 per cent. Running time, 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—A characterization of the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Bruce Cabot was the leading player and boy! did he put this play over with a bang. Another hit for Bruce. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—A deep-dyed sex picture that should not be forced upon any exhibitor on his family night. First was "Finishing School"; then came "Life of Vergie Winters"; then "Of Human Bondage"—all from one exchange. Babies and babies and still more babies. Married men and single girls with babies and more babies. Oh! What a blessed event! On the second night of the showing of "Of Human Bondage" I had exactly three adults and eight children! That is what the picture did for me! Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 30, October 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwingsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—First class entertainment for anyone. Action, comedy, singing and good acting made this picture most acceptable to our patrons. Played Sept. 8.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez—Too much Durante to be funny. He's okay for several gags, but in Greek he's a large headache. Played Aug. 15-16.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown, Zasu Pitts, Arthur Byron, Beulah Bondi—A fine picture, splendid acting, will please anybody. Thoroughly enjoyed by everybody who saw it here. Fair business two days. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 24-25.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny. This is supposed to be a comedy, but my audience just didn't get it. Most of the players, especially Marian Nixon, talk too fast, making it very difficult to understand them. It fell far below average drawing power and most of the comments were "silly" and "crazy." No one will ever miss it if you don't use it. Played Sept. 16-17.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BORN TO BE BAD: Loretta Young, Cary Grant—The idea of a story included herein is something different. But that "difference" just hits the "Legion of Decency" right in the middle. If you are in a "moral" community, chuck this one out. If you think that there might be a question of doubt, then you might as well play it. The story, action, direction sound and light are all okay. Business fair. Running time, 61 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, George Raft—At least this is different and the audience enjoyed this cast back in the robust days of the "nineties." The "beef-trust" girls are back on the screen in this one. Some sequences were a little too long. It dragged slightly when Brody did his jump from the Brooklyn Bridge. Raft as a dancing man in the sophisticated stuff is a pain in the neck to the small town audience, as Paramount has cast him in two pictures, but in this role he fitted better than any that he has had yet, that is, what we have run of him.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Constance Cummings—Good musical. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie, Constance Cummings—They don't come any better than this one for a small town. Plenty of action and Jack Oakie better than he has been in previous pictures, but, this Tracy boy has what it takes with the audience. He is a swell actor, given the right parts, and this one fitted him like an old shoe. The high tension trouble shooters is the theme of the story. It moves fast and is a logical story.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NANA: Anna Sten—Decidedly not a small town picture. May be good for big cities, but poison here. At that, I think Anna Sten has got Garbo, Dietrich or Bankhead beat a mile. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 24-25-26.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner—A mighty good picture. Story fine and acting great. Moves a little too slow for the gait people are taking nowadays and that was all the fault they found with the picture. Gave good satisfaction. Running time, 99 minutes.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Universal

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore, Bebe Daniels—Very few people came to see this and still fewer liked it. It is entirely too "talky."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HONOR OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard—Nice little western. Played September 18-19.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HONOR OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard—Good western. Recording fair. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HUMAN SIDE, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon—One mighty nice picture for all-class trade; enjoyed by all; nothing to draw them in, but if they come, they'll like it fine. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 27.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre. Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Paul Lukas, Wynne Gibson—Good program picture. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery—I found this picture better than criticism in this department had led me to believe. While not as good as one might expect from the advertising in the press book, it is a very nice picture. Should draw, but for some reason it did not make a penny for me. I wish more of the exhibitors would let us know about the audience reaction instead of how much they lost on certain pictures. A picture may lose money for me, but that is not a positive indication that it will lose money for every fellow that screens it. Another thing fellow exhibitors might do is pass along any small idea they may work out on any picture, which could be of any help to other showmen, but at the same time not taking up all the space in this department telling about it. I've just about used too much valuable space in this report and perhaps I should have said nothing.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Summerville-Pitts—If your patrons like Pitts and Summerville they will enjoy this. Mickey Rooney is almost the star of the picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LOVE CAPTIVE, THE: Nils Asther, Gloria Stuart—A very good program picture. All seemed to like it. Both stars are good in any picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard—Too bad that the river was not at flood height when they crossed it. Another one of those pictures of the high-class British families that the poor sap of an exhibitor tries to cram down his patrons' necks with not much success. "Love Captive," "I Give My Love," "Embarrassing Moments." What masterpieces the smart young producer has turned out this year! Universal is supposed to be a family affair in the producing end and it may be that accounts for the large number of poor ones they have turned out this year. It has been apparent that they don't know what it is all about. "One More River" will bore a small town audience, at least that is what it did to mine, what few sat it through.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones, Sheila Terry—Was a bit disappointed in this, as I had expected his first from a new company would be outstanding. I'd class it as an average western and no more. Business, however, was slightly better than normal.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—Good Friday-Saturday show. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Well, boys, Warners have done it again. "Dames" is just as good and in many ways better than "Gold Diggers," "42nd Street," "Twenty Million Sweethearts" and the other excellent musicals put out by Warners. This boy Powell and Miss Keeler, also Blondell, Kibbee, Herbert and the rest, are all excellent. Of course, Zasu Pitts is in a class by herself and keeps the audience in laughter every time she speaks. It's a sweet picture, with a good story, beautiful sets and costumes, good sound, good photography and in every way a great picture. This Warner bunch know how, and do make the best musicals on the market. Date this picture and tell your patrons you have a worthy successor to the other Warner musicals.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Plenty of action in this one. Not much to the story except the usual gobs and girls. Of course it is all Cagney as might be expected. Shots at the Navy, the action of the fleet and the guns.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Big. Here is a great show for any house.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell—Nice little comedy that was produced before the "cleanies." Okay for comedy and action dates. Played September 22.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

JIMMIE, THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—This one is about the fastest and snappiest picture we have used in some time; all about a lost heir racket that keeps Cagney on his toes all the time and keeps the customers on the ends of the seats. We used this one on a special midnight show and it drew to a good average business and all the cash customers seemed perfectly satisfied. Played September 1.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell, Warren William—There was no excuse for making such a picture. It isn't clever, funny, smart or entertaining and it is a shame to put a good cast in such a story. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 23-24.—Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace Theatre, Gordon, Neb. Small town patronage.

Short Features

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Krazy Kat Kartoons—Fine cartoon.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

STABLE MATES: Broadway Comedies—One of the funniest two-reel comedies we have played this year. Audience laughing continuously. Give us more like it. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TECHNORACKET: Scrappy Cartoons—Good cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOTEL ANCHOVY: Coronet Comedies—I didn't hear much laughing on this. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

IRISH SWEEPSTAGES: Terry Toon Series—Extra good cartoon.—Running time, seven minutes.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

NATURE'S GANGSTERS: Battle for Life Series—Showing the dodder, a parasitic plant, that is particularly troublesome to Cespedeza farmers. Very interesting.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY (I'M HER WILLIE): Will Mahoney—Haven't sent in a report in a long time, but have decided to start again. However, this time it's only on a two-reel comedy, but boy! "it's a comedy." I don't remember when any comedy (or feature, for that matter) brought the avalanche of laughs that Will Mahoney and his gang did in this. It's Mahoney's first, to my knowledge, but I understand he's making more comedies, and maybe he will yet give us his great feat (feet) of dancing on a xylophone. For the love of Mike, play this up on a preferred date and watch 'em laugh. Running time, 19 minutes. Played October 1.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

RURAL ENGLAND: Magic Carpet Series—Not so interesting as some others in this series. Running time, one reel.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

THE BIG IDEA: Ted Healy and Stooges—Not up to the entertainment of some of the other Ted Healy, but will entertain. Running time, 2 reels.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HONKY-DONKEY: Our Gang—Pleasing Our Gang comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE JITTERS: Willie Whopper—Another Willie Whopper. Running time, one reel.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LITTLE FELLER: Oddities Series—This is one reel of very poor entertainment and my patrons didn't hesitate to tell me so. We had more walkouts on this than on any short or feature before. Wake up, Metro, and let the exhibitors have what their public like. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TRICK GOLF: Oddities—This is a good one-reeler presenting some good trick shots in golf. The shots are good and the remarks by Pete Smith add much to the entertainment of the show. Our patrons enjoyed this very much. Come on, Pete, let's have more of these. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BETTY IN BLUNDERLAND: Betty Boop Cartoons, Good cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GOLD NUGGETS: Walter Catlett—Good two-reeler.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE NO. 6: This is one of the best issues of this series, showing many beautiful and interesting scenes of Hollywood, the movie stars and their homes. My patrons all enjoyed this one and we hope the others will be as good. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE, NO. 9: Not so good.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR: Screen Songs Series—Part of this is good, but I have yet to find anyone in this town who likes to hear Mary Small sing.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RADIO ROUNDUP, A: Headliner Series—Very good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

CENTURY OF PROGRESS: Very good; educational; actual scenes from World's Fair. Well worth running and advertising. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

DERBY DECADE: Ruth Etting—A comedy of the Bowery in the "gay nineties." Ruth Etting never sang to better advantage than in the three old songs she sings in this. They are "Bird in a Gilded Cage," "After the Ball" and I Love You As I Never Loved Before." Give your patrons a treat and show this one. Running time, 22 minutes.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Universal

FINANCIAL JITTERS: Eddie Nugent—Good weekend comedy.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WORLD'S GREATEST THRILL, THE: Special—This is a very exciting subject. Should please any audience. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

AT THE RACES: Pepper Pot Series—Good, but not as good as "Pure Feud." Running time, 10 minutes.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BUILD UP, THE: Jack Haley—Poor. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

DARLING ENEMY: Broadway Brevity—One of the best in this series. One number, "The Girl Behind the Man in the Moon" is particularly good. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. M. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

JOLLY GOOD FELLOW, A: Melody Masters Series—This is a great one-reeler and is good entertainment for the entire family. It is a musical with B. A. Rolphe and his orchestra furnishing the music. The photographic effects are also good and this entire series are good shorts. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RUN AROUND, THE: Jack Haley—These Haley two-reel comedies are the bunk. We haven't had a one our patrons liked. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslow Stevens, Ada Ince—The serial patrons seem to like it, so what else matters.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

FRANKENSTEIN

In its review of "The Count of Monte Cristo" at the New York Rivoli, the Daily News chose to give that production, in the opinion of the United Artists' executives, a less than satisfactory number of those stars with which the newspaper has identified itself in rating pictures.

In a hasty endeavor to combat the not-so-hot sendoff, United Artists took large space the next day with copy reading as follows:

> "You Be Your Own Judge Today. If, after you see 'The Count of Monte Cristo' at the Rivoli Theatre today, you honestly feel that this picture should be awarded less than four stars, step up to the Manager's Office and get your money back"

And as a follow-up on the ad, a money box was displayed prominently upon a table in the lobby for the convenience of those who might desire to accept the offer.

The effect of the unsatisfactory star rating, the unnecessary expense of the extra newspaper lineage and the negative thought created by the lobby money-back stunt are all further proof of the viciousness of this disastrous method of reviewing.

Despite the accepted belief that patrons have been smartened up considerably, there are still millions whose opinions are formed by professional critical opinion in newspapers and magazines. And many of these, unfortunately, will be influenced by the arbitrary News rating.

Thus a feature expensively produced, skilfully directed and admirably acted is unjustly penalized by a procedure that has no counterpart in any other legitimate business.

But the newspapers are not to blame so much as the producers who by their short-sightedness and seeming impotence have encouraged and fostered this Frankenstein, allowing the strangling noose of the star-rating system to tighten its grip upon the motion picture.

Every time an over-zealous exhibitor broadcasts a three or four star rating in his advertising, he is abetting an evil that if not immediately checked must eventually destroy him.

According to Round Tabler Jack Stodel, of African Theatres, a medical conference took place in Cape Town some months ago, and as part of the program, the doctors reserved a block of seats at the Alhambra Theatre for a certain performance. Jack says it was a cold night, but the house warmed up when the assembled medicos blushed at the title of the picture which happened to be—"The Man I Killed."

FINE SPORTSMANSHIP

Although we have touched editorially upon various angles in commenting on the Quigley Awards project, it is refreshing to note the fine sportsmanship of many of our members who contribute campaigns from month to month not so much from the desire of winning, but to cooperate in advancing a project that has helped concretely to advance the fortunes of some of the winners and has turned the spotlight of favorable publicity upon capable showmen everywhere.

We are also pleased to report few, in fact very few criticisms of the selections of the honorable judges, and especially from those who time and again, miss the Big Prize by less than the proverbial whisper. In fact, the general atwords of Sig Solomon, of the Regent Theatre, Newark.

" . . . But after all, it is the all competitive spirit that prompts one to conscientiously strive for honest recognition through the Quigley Awards."

The persistence of Manager Jimmy Totman, winner of the Quigley Award for September exemplifies fittingly the competitive spirit of which Solomon speaks so aptly, for not a whit deterred by his three previous failures to land an Award, Totman, on "Dames," entered a campaign that could not be denied.

That famous line—"A man who won't be licked, can't be licked"—well describes the splendid sportsmanship of the newest addition to the roster of Quigley champions.

THE IDEA CLEARING HOUSE

Speaking before the managers attending the monthly meeting of the Warner Theatres Newark Division last week, we took the opportunity of again emphasizing the main purpose of the Managers' Round Table Club section and that is to function primarily as a clearing house, a medium for box office slants which members exchange in these pages for mutual benefit.

That these endeavors are looked upon with favor by the men on the firing line is indicated by the Jersey Warnerites who contribute regularly to these pages and in turn study the section for suitable ideas forwarded by other progressive members.

Who'll be the witty showman to take the bows on this one?

Rittenberg's Press Book

Much commendable effort has been expended by Round Tabler Arnold Rittenberg of Mentone Productions in compiling a press book on "The World in Revolt" that contains a lot of meat. Arnold with a background of years in the theatre has endeavored to fashion material of practical use in the field, and has made a number of helpful changes not found in the usual press book. He rates a bow.

Makes Police Tie-Up On "Last Gentleman"

E. V. Dinerman, RKO divisional advertising and publicity manager, tied up with one of the newspapers for his "Last Gentleman" date at the Albee in Cincinnati, Ohio, by having a police "courtesy car" cruise congested streets. Car was equipped with loud speakers and officer seated at mike.

As car neared street intersections, a polite caution was given to observe traffic regulations. In this tie-up a "George Arliss" dollar was given to five motorists each day whom officers in the cruiser considered unusually careful in traffic.

Previews were held for leading local clergymen and editors, chain bakery tieup returned window displays and contest was arranged over one of New York's better radio stations.

Kane Runs "Mr. Sweeney" For County Office

Nicely handled was Tom Kane's campaign to elect to the office of county pest exterminator, "Mr. Sweeney," as part of the clever advance on "Friends of Mr. Sweeney," which Tom had dated in during election time at the Fox Sequoia, Redwood City, Cal.

Spotted among the newspaper ads taken by many of the candidates for the various offices, Kane ran ads similarly composed and illustrated by small cuts of Charlie Ruggles, and in the corner of each of these was the line, "This ad paid for by 'Friends of Mr. Sweeney.'" The same idea was carried out in the regulation election calling cards and day before picture opened, Tom ran a "Thank You" ad on behalf of Ruggles.

Grosses Titled On Cow Milking Stunt

Although it may sound like a gag to showmen in the larger spots, a cow milking contest has been reported by more than one showman to have brought in heavy grosses, and for members in the small communities who are interested, the following information is offered:

The contest usually is put on as part of the national "Use More Milk" movement, tieup being made with newspaper for county milking championship both for men and women, if possible. Dairy is also hooked in to supply cows, stalls, bottles, attendants, etc., and also to contribute co-op advertisement, as well as prizes for essay contests on such questions as "Why I drink milk" and "Best uses of milk in cooking," etc.

Contest usually is run three nights, two for elimination and one for finals, or less as the occasion demands. Contestants are asked to milk with one hand for one minute into quart milk bottles, with cow standing at angle to audience so patrons can see progress being made by entrants.

Length of time stunt runs each night is suggested to be no longer than 20 minutes, allowing time for about 12 milkers. Clever master of ceremonies is more or less essential, and stooges who try and milk cow from wrong side have also been used for laughs. Some theatres have worked local rube act into the show for good returns.

"Maine" Survivor Relates Experiences for "Navy" Date

For his date on "Here Comes the Navy" at the Elks, Middletown, Pa., Manager Douglas Carpenter secured the valuable aid of Mr. Andrew H. Lang, one of the nine living survivors of the battleship Maine, who is locally resident and well known. Mr. Lang, wearing his uniform, greeted patrons and displayed his decorations. He also made interesting comments on the picture, and related his experiences in Cuban waters during the Spanish war.

As an advance, Carpenter had his sound truck cruise the streets, and distributed programs covering a radius of six towns. The P. A. apparatus was planted on the marquee, over which announcements were made, alternating these with records playing the song hits.

Fine Spirit Among Jersey Warnerites

Accepting the long-standing invitation of those friendly Warnerites of Don Jacocks' New Jersey zone, your Chairman finally managed to shake off the cares of duties for a day and popped over to the 12th floor of the Academy Building in Newark in time to catch the finale of the regular monthly zone meeting.

Awaiting us was Publicity Director Jules Curley, who made the introductions and gave us an opportunity to say hello to the members en masse. For a few moments we took up with the assemblage the Round Table Club activities and also discussed the splendid progress of the Quigley competitions to which quite a few of the managers present are enthusiastic contributors.

Among those, we noted Sig Solomon, Jules Fields, Rudy Kuehn, Louis Stein, and our eye also caught the friendly faces of Jack Stein, Sam Goldman, Bob Paskow, George Steinman and many others whose names we apologize for not being able to recall at the moment.

Members Discuss Round Table Section

Mr. Jacocks was kind enough to indicate that in his opinion, managers who studied the exploitation pages in the trade press and press books were in most cases more effective in their operation.

After adjournment, we had time to chat with the managers, many of whom are long-time Round Tablers. Various ideas and criticisms to improve the services of the Round Table Club pages were discussed and plans made for closer cooperation.

Then lunch with Jules Curley during which we learned quite a bit about the advertising operations necessary in publicizing the 51 theatres in the zone. The balance of the day was given over to meeting up with and discussing theatre problems with Mr. Jacocks, his assistant, Frank Damis, and district managers C. L. Dooley, Tony Williams, Dick Hill and Eddie Batlin.

All in all, it was a swell day, and if the Warnerites do not mind a pat on the back, we were pleased to note the excellent spirit of friendly cooperation and sincerity existing between executives and managers. Nice crowd, and we look forward to another visit with those lads soon.—MIKE.

JIM TOTMAN WINS SEPTEMBER AWARD

Warner Theatre Manager, Erie, Pa., Clicks With "Dames"; Succeeds After Four Entries

by A-MIKE VOGEL

For the second time since the inception of the Quigley Awards, the judges have been unanimous in their selection of a winner, Messrs. P. D. Cochrane, of Universal Pictures; C. C. Moskowitz, of Loew Theatres, and Edward A. Finney of Monogram, all agreeing that the Quigley Award for September should go to Manager James M. Totman, of the Warner Theatre, Erie, Pa., for his outstanding campaign on "Dames."

The September competitions are also distinguished by the fact that for the first time in many months three First Mentions have been awarded, those rating that honor being Sig Solomon, Regent, Newark, N. J.; R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight, Fairmount, Fairmount, W. Va., and J. Remi Crasto, RKO Radio Pictures, Ltd., Calcutta, India.

These three entrants distinguished themselves nobly, and it may be of interest to note that the First Mention to Mr. Crasto is the second to go to a showman from Calcutta, which is quite an accomplishment.

The battle for Honorable Mentions was also spirited, 21 theatremen representing 17 campaigns landing this rating from the scores of entries received this month. Among these some seven or eight are newcomers to the Quigley competitions, in addition to the Calcutta showman who copped the First. This indicates ever-spreading interest in the Awards project, which promises still wider cooperation during the three ramaining months of the year.

Totman, with one First Mention and two Honorables already to his credit, crashed through to the Big Prize on his fourth attempt. Jimmy was right in the thick of the fight since the beginning and though he was not successful previously, kept everlastingly at it, proving conclusively that you "can't keep a man down who won't stay down."

Every preparation is being made for a whirlwind finish as the Quigley Awards sweep in to the stretch. At this writing, October campaigns are beginning to trickle in and it is expected that new records will be chalked up in the number of entries received for the rest of the contest period.

To these showmen who have not as yet entered any campaigns in the Quigley Awards, we extend a further invitation for their participation. The rules are few and simple (see page 59, issue Sept. 1) and every theatreman anywhere in the world is eligible to forward a campaign on any product, domestic or foreign.

Rotsky Promotes Display On Myrna Loy Tieup

The possibilities in tieup stills are illustrated by George Rotsky's recent campaign on "Stamboul Quest" at the Capitol, Montreal, wherein this member secured a still of Myrna Loy posing with one of the new Dodge models, with which he obtained over 1,000 lines of free display advertising in three papers, paid for by the local distributor. Similar tieup was made with leading furrier who also went for generous lineage. Perfume hookin clicked for some of the best windows in town.

Noting an article in Cosmopolitan on famous war spies, George sold the local news distributors on a special insert in that issue stressing the similarity of the magazine story and the plot of the picture, thus securing an unlooked-for further plug for the date.

In numerous ways, Rotsky has been obtaining a plenitude of newspaper breaks, among which were on Janet Gaynor's embarkation to Europe from Montreal and frequent sport page mention on a "Capitol Theatre Handicap," one of the featured races at a popular local track.

Sid Plugs "Dames" With Beach Bally

The possibilities of beach advertising in Atlantic City are fully exploited by Sid Blumenstock, Warner ad head in that district, under Herb Copelan, as illustrated by Sid's unique gag for "Dames" at the Warner Theatre in which 20 boys in old fashioned bathing suits ballied the date (see photo) up and down the beach.

Twenty is evidently one of Sid's favorite numbers, for he used that many girls in a rolling chair stunt wherein each of the first five carried a letter of the title, the rest carrying shields with theatre plug.

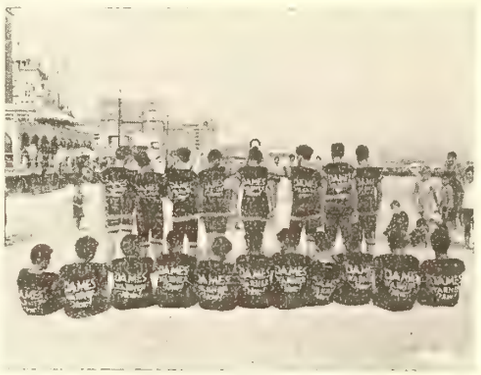
Old-Fashioned Display Helps "Old-Fashioned" Date

Thoroughly old-fashioned did go Manager Walter Morris and Publicist George Browning on "Old-Fashioned Way" at the Stanley, Baltimore, Md., what with many click angles strongly selling the theme of the attraction.



For instance, the interesting window display in a leading men's store in which old-fashioned costumes and models (see photo) was promoted locally with fitting copy illustrated by stills. Derbies, fashionable in the time of the picture, were used for another window tieup.

Lobby display also was in keeping with an exhibit of theatre programs dating back to 1884, two movie machines popular in the day of the penny arcade, and a 1908 model auto, copy on all tying into the date.

Heralds printed in type fashionable in former days were also used and a neat touch was added by the distribution of promoted fans with copy to the effect that this was the old-fashioned way of keeping cool, and that patrons needed no fans at the air-cooled Stanley, etc., etc.

For his lobby display (see photo) Paul used animation. The curtain was made of beaver board and built to give stage effect, overall measure, 12 feet wide by seven high. Shirley's arm, from the three sheet cut-out, was attached to a motor and moved up and down as though the figure were bowing. Song sheets of hits from picture and stills with lights behind were used at base of display.

Touring Baseball Diamond Bally Used by Caldwell

Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, used a street bally for "Death on the Diamond," consisting of a large truck bannered on all sides with framed oilcloth signs 16x10 feet high. Baseball diamonds on both long sides had 20-inch cutout openings at pitcher's plate in which ushers dressed in baseball outfits distributed life savers in glassine bags with copy "On everybody's tongue, etc."

On "Chained," Wally tied up for store toiletry display, tinted photos of Crawford spotted in window and photos of Joan and Gable given away with each purchase made. Men's fall style windows arranged with mounted fashion stills of Gable and theatre credit cards, sports store carried still of Otto Kruger in golfing attire and compo board flash front were other stunts put over by Caldwell.

Yovin and His Staff Build a "Schnozzometer"

Here's one for the books, boys. Joe Yovin, with the aid of his staff at the Crescent Theatre, Astoria, L. I., built a "schnozzometer" for a laff gag on "Strictly Dynamite," in which patrons were invited to walk up to board (see photo) and measure "schnozzles" with Jimmy Durante's. Those of equal length won pass to see the picture. We'll wager two to one that Joe didn't have to issue many ducats!

When "Elmer and Elsie" played his house Joe had small slips of ordinary yellow copy paper put under door sills in homes with copy in pencil reading, "Sorry you were not at home when we called. Will see you Wednesday evening at the Crescent. Signed, 'Elmer and Elsie.'"

Braunagle Plugs War Angle on "Men" Date

Two weeks prior to his "Forgotten Men" date, Jack D. Braunagel, Granada Theatre, Boise, Idaho, plugged the showing by using a flash bomb in the footlights and exploding it as slide flashed on screen "Have you the nerve to see, etc."

From a local vet, Jack borrowed war pictures which were hung on black velour with explanatory captions and note that the pictures had been taken by Capt. Malcolm Stevens, recently become famous through his stratosphere flight.

Front was dressed with sand bags, flags, bugler blowing taps, etc. Tie up with boy scouts admitted them at reduced rate.

LaFalce Sponsors School Essay Contests on "Glory"

Frank LaFalce, Washington zone Warner Theatres' ad head and second prize winner in the Columbia exploitation contest on "No Greater Glory," featured his campaign for the date at the Metropolitan, with several effective tieups with the Board of Education, women's clubs, Boy Scouts, etc. In addition to a series of previews for club officers and prominent educators, Frank induced teachers to talk on the picture before classes and promoted essay contests among the pupils on the subject of peace.

Outside merchant cooperation was also obtained from A. & P. stores, Baby Ruth candies and other chain organizations which distributed heralds and used window strips and displays. Frank further arranged for concerts in front of the theatre by local Boy Scouts and American Legion band.

Pival Proves Worth Of "Last Half" Campaign

To prove that "last half" attractions rate stronger campaigns in his sector, Manager John S. Pival, Senate, Detroit, Mich., recently put on a test campaign for the week-end date on "Registered Nurse," the results reported to have been very encouraging at this prominent neighborhood house.

John concentrated on pushing the title and with it promoted a noted woman doctor to make health talks from the stage of the theatre, the lectures including a plug for the comfort and safety of the house, especially in the interests of the neighborhood children.

Kuehn's Ship Model Display

Yovin's "Durante Schnozzometer"

Bamberger's "Navy" Cutout Display

Pival's Police Department Cooperation

Also commendable was the safety campaign inaugurated around the slogan "No need of a 'Registered Nurse' if you drive safely." Started as a stunt, the idea went over so well that John secured further cooperation from the police heads, by being allowed to stencil police scout cars (see photo) with the safety slogan.

Model of U. S. Warship Features Kuehn's Display

Although given very short notice on his "Here Comes the Navy" date, Manager Rudy Kuehn, of the Fabian, Hoboken, N. J., managed to whip across a campaign that was reported to have clicked strongly. Included among the highlights was a miniature ship model of the USS Creston, constructed by a Hoboken resident. Placed on a specially built stand (see photo) carrying selling copy on all sides, the stunt attracted much attention, stories on it being carried in the local press.

Commendable was the rest of the front showing in which compo board was used with blue velour paper facing. Art heads of the stars were featured, and Rudy further carried out the marine atmosphere by promoting actual life preservers which were enameled and lettered with framed stills of the stars placed within circles. Made over from the front on another attraction, the flash was costless and attractive. Battleship tower and turret with guns were constructed atop marquee.

Kuehn also used a stiltwalker dressed in gob costume, who carried naval flags and wig-wag signals on various corners. House staff was costumed in character and as a last minute stunt a parade of naval reserves unit was put on, marchers carrying theatre banners, as they trooped to the theatre.

Orlove's Good-Will Builder

Public-spirited Louis Orlove, Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., created considerable good-will for his house by suggesting to city officials the idea of altering an old closed school and converting it into a civic center. Officials went for it and the attendant newspaper publicity netted Louis plenty of theatre mention.

Louie Offers Cash In "Gang" Contest

Louis Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, recently put on a "Gang Contest," offering cash prizes and tickets for photographs of local juvenile "gangs" most typical of American youth, similar to the comedies so named. Prize-winning photograph was presented to the casting director at the Hal Roach studios. Louis stressed in his advertising the fact that "Spanky" and "Bouncy" of the "Our Gang" comedies are both Texas born.

Cracks Ace Window For First Time

Herman Bamberger made a battleship cutout do double duty, for in advance it was planted in the lobby of the Paramount, North Adams, Mass., on "Navy" and then switched to a department store window, the latter display reported to have been the first theatre tieup ever used by the merchant. Background was a water and sky effect with battleship (see photo) in black, grey and steel blue. All merchandise was in shades of navy blue.

The front was dressed in keeping with an added naval touch in which Herman had the theatre flag lowered at sundown in regulation fashion. Many of the press book tieups were made and paper sailor hats to which were attached date stickers proved very popular with the children.

ENGLAND AND FILM PUBLICITY

Dignity and Originality Must Be Used To Put Over Campaigns in England, Says Visiting Publicist

by JOHN B. MYERS

Publicity Director, London Films

America has always led the world in the art of publicity, and while this national preeminence is admitted and respected by English publicists, it has been found that the most successful publicity methods on the American side have not always proved suitable in England.

Particularly do we admire the effectiveness of publicity in America, which is in a measure due to the average American's receptiveness to a good campaign. Unfortunately, powerful and spectacular publicity frequently leaves the Englishman in the street cold; if not a little suspicious. From the English publicist's point of view it is a misfortune that his countrymen refuse to be "ballyhoed" and he must look to more difficult and far more subtle methods to coax pounds, shillings and pence into the box office. I was particularly impressed in New York with the fine publicity organizations handling films. Campaigns were being planned over vast American territory with a statistical thoroughness which seems almost dehumanized when compared to the close personal contact work which comprises the main bulwark of English publicity.

The English publicist's job is easier in one respect. England is a small country and has great papers of 2,000,000 circulation. The critics of these papers wield enormous power and they can all be covered by the publicist personally in one day. The publicity man who has had a good day in Fleet Street knows that on the morrow at least 10,000,000 people will be reading his message all over the British Isles. He is not overshadowed by the card index and statistical problems as is his American cousin. His job is one of service plus personality, and if he is good the newspaper man not only relies on him for copy, but works hand in glove with him along constructive lines.

The English critics' reviews of films are absolutely unbiased by advertising appropriation. On the whole, they do not show any favoritism toward British films, rather the reverse, though the widely read English newspaper, The Daily Mail, has long sponsored British films to the great benefit of the industry.

Royalty Attends Premieres

Publicity campaigns for films in England must be dignified, subtle and original. The public refuse to believe that every picture is "colossal," "epoch making," and the "film of the century," and it is no use saying so in screaming propaganda. Alexander Korda inaugurated the Hollywood premiere in London and it has proved an immense success as a publicity builder, but it is interesting to note that where in Hollywood the main attraction is the arrival of film stars who speak a few words on the radio, in England the premiere audiences are comprised of celebrities in other walks of life. The list reads like a court circular and is frequently headed by royalty. There were two European Kings at the premiere of "Catherine."

It is not very often that we have the opportunity to meet up with overseas members of the Round Table and upon the occasion of the visit to these shores of the author of this article, it is fitting that his findings on American theatre publicity and exploitation methods as compared to English procedure be set down in these pages. Mr. Myers is a keen student of the motion picture and what he has to say makes highly interesting reading.—MIKE.

JOHN B. MYERS

Lobby displays and theatre exploitation is conducted along more sober lines in England and I think in better taste. Fortunately in the West End the cinemas and theatres are not all together as on Broadway, and each individual display stands out and is not merged in a uniform glare as on Broadway, where every building, even if it is not a cinema, uses powerful electric lights. This gives a uniformity from which no particular display, however clever, stands out. The English showman is waking up to the value of clever foyer display and good American ideas which they first read of in Managers' Round Table Club section of MOTION PICTURE HERALD are quickly copied and adapted for English consumption and with excellent results.

We have our original ideas, too. On one of our films, a comedy dealing with the gay nineties, we had the theatre front with the huge name sign not in electric lights, but made out of gas piping punched with holes from which the blue gas flames flickered. All the old hansom cabs were commanded and used to give free rides to patrons to the theatre. They carried a card display on the back. In the foyer were photos of living English celebrities, but taken 30 years ago. Such a campaign I should imagine might prove successful for such American films as "The Bowery."

London "Don Juan" Electric Front

English Posters Bad

Our film posters are very bad and here the Americans are way ahead of us in every respect, though in some cases the wording is a little too flamboyant for English consumption and has to be changed. I have always advised every one in England to study and try to copy the excellent layouts and color work of your posters. The same goes for trade paper advertising where some of the English displays look pathetic against that of American companies.

The advertising displays and posters of such American companies as United Artists, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount are magnificent. England is suffering from a deficiency of good layout men and English film companies lose because they are not wise enough to outbid the commercial advertising agencies for the best men. The exhibitor suffers because he cannot get good material for foyer display. Here the American scores. He has tasteful display material in abundance, thus American pictures automatically get better exploitation for this very reason.

American Methods Unsuccessful

Like the Americans, only very late in the day, we send film publicists out in the field to help the exhibitor put over a campaign, and have had many hectic but interesting days helping to duplicate successful London campaigns in big provincial towns and in European capitals. The English are eager to learn from the Americans, but what they learn must be adapted for the English mentality. It is a curious fact that the most brilliant American publicists have flopped when working in England. The methods are excellent, but they are apt to stress the entirely wrong psychological angles with disastrous results.

I can honestly and gratefully say that I have learned more in New York about publicity in two weeks than I have in any European capital. I learned much, too, in Berlin, where publicity is a science.

In New York every one is a good publicist, if only potentially, but some of the fine campaigns here are weakened by the insistent demands of rival campaigns. Every one publicizes and the overcrowding deadens the receptive faculties. In England it is a comparatively new art and a good idea stands out, and even gets credit quite apart from the product it boosts.

England's Street Car Bally

Promotes Street Car To Bally "Dames"

As a change from the usual sound truck and other street ballys, Manager R. E. England, Virginian, Charleston, W. Va., promoted the use of street car which was bannered (see photo) and sent out to cover all local and interurban runs. Records of song hits were played over P. A. system.

England's newspaper publicity was quite complete, two of the press book copies being put on which netted pages of co-op advertising in addition to the usual stories.

In Johnstown, Pa.—

Manager Bill Decker, at the Cambria, featured his campaign with a parade of new

Decker's Parade of Ford Cars

Ford cars, each of which carried a giant size cutout letter of the title (see photo) illustrated by lithos of girls in picture. Bill also used sky projector or buildings and nearby hills, also hooking in Mayor to campaign by having that official accept jumbo invitation to picture on steps of City Hall carried by group of local "dames."

For a different twist in his newspaper ad, Decker featured an enthusiastic review on the picture written by a well known Pittsburgh critic where the attraction had played a few weeks previous. Attractive float in firemen's parade also commanded attention.

In Portsmouth, Ohio—

J. Knox Strachan, at Columbia Theatre, had calling cards printed—"If you're interested in 'Dames,' call, etc., etc.," the theatre number only being given. These cards were distributed all over town by a number of local girls.

Strachan also made press book stocking and style tieups and landed a number of fine windows. Mimeographed wires signed by the stars were delivered by Postal, imprinted bags distributed and many good windows secured.

KUNZE'S "MANAGERS WEEK"

Massachusetts Member Obtains Excellent Results With Voting Campaign for Coming Pictures

Some time ago Paul Kunze, Old Colony and Plymouth theatres, Plymouth, Mass., put over a very excellent Manager's Week which he recommends for almost any situation except a first run full week stand. Paul built his Week around the angle of having patrons vote for the pictures they preferred seeing during that period and although the idea is not new, he got plenty out of it by adding stage features every night.

Advance interest was created with a trailer announcing the dates and this was followed by a strong newspaper campaign in which ads carried ballots containing names of 24 pictures all booked for future showing. Readers were requested to check six of these pictures to be run during the week and as an incentive guest tickets were offered to the first bringing or mailing their signed ballots to either theatre.

Paul's newspaper relations being very sound, he had little difficulty in promoting page one stories completely explaining the idea, and in fact all during the advance campaign obtained splendid cooperation from the dailies.

Returns Better 25%

The mailing list was reached with a four-page folder which was also distributed throughout the entire circulation area and enclosed in the regular house organ. The folder carried all the necessary information on the Week and requested patrons to fill in the enclosed ballots. A return of better than 25 per cent in all was received.

These returns were catalogued and following the showing of the pictures selected for the Week, postcards were sent to everyone who had voted for any of the attractions listed on the ballot which had not played during the week, the cards indicating when these features were to be played. Thus, although the stunt was built up around a single Week, it nevertheless publicized all the attractions which were to be shown in the following three weeks.

When the results were announced the papers carried banner headlines giving the exact number of votes obtained, and Paul followed this up with his regular ad in which he featured the winning attractions and the number of votes each received. Publicity also carried names of guest ticket winners.

Stage Shows Cost Little

The stage attractions were also publicized, and these Kunze promoted at little cost, they being local orchestras, hill-billy troupes, etc., who were satisfied with the publicity and advertising given them in exchange. An amateur night was also put on at a reported cost of $15 in prize money.

Every effort was made to keep interest high with frequent lobby changes and new trailer copy during the actual week and continued newspaper publicity was also sought and obtained.

Paul states that the entire campaign received the greatest amount of publicity he had secured on any single activity, which included editorial mention rarely given and thus especially valuable. There was no merchant tieup and thus the theatres received all the benefits, including worthy additions to the mailing list.

From the increased grosses, the idea was effective at the box office and spread over three weeks the increased cost was little.

To insure perusal of one of his recent programs, Manager Mort Greene, Blenheim Theatre, Bronx, N. Inside, the coming attractions well presented plugged each picture.

AWAY FROM THE STEREOTYPED

To left is illustrated Earle Holden's one-column ad on woman's pages for the date at the Capitol, Atlanta. Note clever use of "warning" angle. Above, J. M. Blanchard, of Sunbury, Pa., to a two-column press book ad, added two extra columns with his own buildup. At right, Nevin McCord puts the pup in the picture to work in a two-column for the Orpheum, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Work's "If" Ad

Recent effective use of the "if" ad is reported from San Francisco, where Cliff Work used this slant on "Richest Girl in the World." The display was headed "If I Were a Dictator," and finished with a guarantee of refund to any patron not agreeing that the picture was beaucoup entertainment.

Newspaper Ties In On "Drummond" Dog Contest

Jim Furman pepped up the advance on "Bulldog Drummond" at the State, Newark, N. J., with a dog contest in cooperation with a local daily which broke a lot of space and pictures of entrants for five days ahead.

Contest was not confined to bulldogs, canines of all species being eligible. Money prizes were given for the ugliest, best trained, biggest and littlest doggie with a flock of tickets for the also-rans. Finals were decided at Newark's Military Park, which of course meant a large turnout of the curious and a three-column cut in the paper.

Ableson Uses Fingerprint Gag on "Harold Teen"

Before leaving the World, Omaha, Neb., Art Ableson, now at the Roxy, Glasgow, Mont., used the fingerprint gag for "Harold Teen" sending out mimeographed letters to a selected group. Fingerprint appeared at top of letter which informed recipients they had been "analyzed by a recognized authority and possessed of a keen sense and appreciative disposition toward the art of motion picture production. You like good screen attractions and therefore would be interested in seeing 'Harold Teen,' etc, etc."

Another box-office stimulant was an "old favorite week" that Art put on. Ballots with past picture successes were listed and all theatregoers were invited to check those films they wished to see at the World. Conforming with his double feature policy, a different screen favorite was shown each night along with the first run attraction.

Ed's Circus Experience Helps on "Clown" Date

His experience as a circus agent came in very handy when Manager Ed Dowling, Palace, Pittsfield, Mass., played "Circus Clown," for Ed transformed the front and ticket office to carry out the authentic big top atmosphere, the cashier's booth being made over into a circus ticket wagon, etc.

The side show idea was also utilized with real circus banners, and Dowling also tied in with a small kid circus to give free shows in front of the theatre in return for free admissions, the excellence of the youngsters being noted in the local press.

Finders of "Cellini" Letters Win Tickets

Different slant to make purchasers read stuffers in packages was Manager M. McCarthy's gag in Hartford, Conn., for the date on "Cellini" at the Strand. Mac made tieup with department store and three days ahead had cards spotted in store, headed "Lost! Rewards Offered!" with copy telling of the loss in the store of a collection of love letters dealing with "Cellini."

Customers were requested to look inside of packages purchased on two designated days for the purpose of finding one of the letters, and to the lucky finders were awarded free tickets. Store also carried newspaper ads on the stunt and plugged it in prominent window.

"He's doing THE MERRY WIDOW WALTZ!"

(To Your Box-Office!)

It wasn't Election Night on Broadway! It was the brilliant World Premiere of the new $2 Astor hit!

FOUR STARS —NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

THE CRITICS WALTZED
to their typewriters and sang:

★★★★ (Four Stars). A new "MERRY WIDOW" emerges at the Astor. Ernst Lubitsch has devised something delightfully fresh and thoroughly entertaining. —Kate Cameron, Daily News

Debonair and witty photoplay that reveals the master of cinema high comedy in his brightest mood. The incomparable Lubitsch proves once more his vast skill at genuine cinema wit. A thousand of those superb "Lubitsch touches". You will probably be picking your favorite ones for yourself.
—Richard Watts, Jr., Herald-Tribune

"MERRY WIDOW" opened at super-gala premiere with huge crowds jamming sidewalks. Lubitsch comedy deftly put over.
—Rose Pelswick, Eve. Journal

Witty and incandescent in the excellent Lubitsch manner, heady as the foam on champagne, fragile as mist and delicately gay. Ensemble numbers are breath-taking. Mr. Chevalier has never been better in voice nor charm. Miss MacDonald—a captivating personality and a lyric voice. The Winter season has been royally crowned.
—Andre Sennwald, Times

Audience applauded each song, each actor. All the lovely Franz Lehar score is there, sung delightfully. Romantic music, lilting gracious waltzes that live on in memory. There are enough laughs to keep an audience giggling most of the time. —Eileen Creelman, Sun

Gaily abandoned! A grand show. It makes the original seem stodgy. A "MERRY WIDOW" which we are sure is the merriest of them all.
—Martin Dickstein, B'klyn Eagle

The exquisite, haunting melodies stir to thrilling, sparkling life. Lubitsch triumph glows in all its glory. A delight alike for eye and ear and heart and soul. Lubitsch's sly, chuckling humor is pointed with impish precision. Film leaves audience bemused by its beauty, thrilling to its songs. Truly Metro's masterpiece.
—Regina Crewe, N.Y. American

Nothing but the touch of Lubitsch could transmute the love pulsations of Count Danilo and the beauteous Sonia into the wickedly irreverent spasms which pour forth. Continuously stimulating. An utterly enchanting picture.
—Thornton Delehanty, Post

COURTS AND MACHINERY

THROUGHOUT the career of the motion picture and the patent issues incident to its technological development there have been evidences that the judges of the United States courts do not rate highly in scientific lore and understanding. The errors, conflicts and contradictions of the Patent Office have been compounded and complexed in the courts in a manner not especially reassuring to this or any other industry.

The subject is renewed just now that the motion picture is again beset by a controversy based on some foreign patent claims of decidedly attenuated industrial importance.

In writing motion picture history the editor has found it necessary on occasion to dispute the United States courts in the record. So it is with special interest one discovers a letter from the celebrated Michael Pupin, discussing the Armstrong-DeForest litigation, to the New York Times, in which he remarks:

"This conflict now brings out into the open the question whether the courts as now constituted can reach correct conclusions in matters involving the determination of novel and scientific truths. The answer has been demonstrated by this case to be emphatically no. Germany and France have long ago reached that conclusion and provided unbiased scientific aid to the courts in all patent litigations."

THE STOCK PROBLEM

MANY an exhibitor and his patrons will be in sympathetic agreement with a pronouncement of this week from Mr. Darryl Zanuck against the motion picture stock company method in production. Mr. Zanuck holds that the audience eventually gets weary of the same array of faces in cast after cast, picture after picture. He also charges that the possession of a stock company exerts a pressure toward finding a place to charge the overhead instead of casting the roles of the picture.

One who sees as many pictures as a good patron of the screen should, can scarcely escape finding the dramatic illusion of many a show invaded by the reiterative appearances of subordinate figures in the cast. It is not precisely a weariness but rather an annoyance. The patron presumably goes to see the show, perhaps also the star, but certainly not "the whole gang."

Unhappily, the more special the character and abilities of these secondary and supporting personages, the more invasive of the story their repeated appearances become. We shall never see the perfect actor, the player completely submerged in his role.

LOST HER HAT

THE souvenir program book on "The Merry Widow" credits the American advent of the operetta to Joe Weber and Lulu Glaser's appearance in the piece at Weber's Theatre. That was, we are advised, a burlesque version, while the original Merry Widow of the American stage was Ethel Jackson, with Donald Brian, opening at the Amsterdam. But while we are remembering it seems that the original production put the costume accent on the Merry Widow hat—rather than the panties and scanties of the current cinema version.

"FREAKISH ABILITY"

IN one of his several recent books, entitled "New Careers for Youth," Mr. Walter B. Pitkin, psychologist, writer, professor, journalist, radio star, farmer, devotes just one bitter paragraph to the motion picture, remarking: "A study of careers brings out the painful fact that nobody has ever advanced far through the maze of Hollywood except through some freakish ability, be it that of Charlie Chaplin or Walt Disney, or some strong personal pull." Mr. Pitkin would perhaps have been more nearly correct if he had said just "some ability." Ability in the show world is very likely to partake of what the psychologist might call "freakish."

The number of persons—both with and without strong personal pull—who are earning on a basis which compares favorably with other industries is proportionately very high. Meanwhile, whether Mr. Pitkin admits it or not, personal pull has not been eliminated entirely from several other lines of endeavor which he considers more highly.

WANTED: A HORSESHOE

THE New York Times seems editorially to think that there is important portent for the recovery of the opera in the fact that the musty old Metropolitan is getting a $250,000 refurbishing, including lazy back seats, murals and whatnot.

May we not observe that when it comes to luring the public with luxury and ornate theatrical housekeeping a number of motion picture projects, reaching their apogee in the Rockefeller Music Hall, appear to have set a considerable pace.

The real drawing power of the Metropolitan was in the millionaire audiences rather than on the stage. Opera as an art is of a piece with society with a capital "S", aristocracies, class consciousnesses and the sort of success that says it with sables. What the Metropolitan needs is to find a horseshoe—another "Diamond Horseshoe."

THIS WEEK - - -

NEW FACES

Accumulation of numerous contract players, in screen "stock companies," is a bad studio policy, last week in effect declared 20th Century producer Darryl Zanuck, in Hollywood. The public becomes tired of repetitious teams, he said. New casts and new combinations in each picture will be the aim of his company, the producer declared, even though the method be more expensive. . . .

CHILD CONDUCT

Already 300 theatres over the country have agreed to open their screens to the experimental educational subjects, taken from regular releases, and compiled by a group of educators, which will present to children, at special juvenile matinees, certain moral issues of conduct for their rumination. The first subject is to be shown at the General Episcopal Convention in Atlantic City this week. . . .

DELAWARE BENEFIT

Concerted action looking to the repeal or modification of Delaware's blue laws anent Sunday films, is expected as a result of the banning, by Mayor William Speer, of a hospital benefit Sunday performance at Loew's Parkway in Wilmington. More than 700 who had donated to the charitable venture were turned away at the theatre. . . .

MIDWEST POOL

The position of Fox Midwest has been strengthened by completion of a pooling arrangement with Commonwealth Theatres in Kansas City, Mo., and Grubel Brothers, Kansas City, Kan., which in effect gives Midwest virtual operating control of six houses involved. Managements will remain intact, with an equal profit split the arrangement. . . .

"PICTURE NO. 5"

Late last week began actual camera work on Charles Chaplin's "Picture No. 5," designation of his untitled latest. Two years are said to have been spent on the script, with every detail worked out prior to shooting, and a three-month shooting schedule planned. Chaplin will be star, author, director, of the United Artists-released film. . . .

ANIMATEDS' HOME

At the Bijou theatre in New York's Times Square, the newly incorporated Cartoon Exhibitors, lessee, are now showing only cartoons, of various producers, daily. Officers of the company: Robert Schirmer, president; J. Markham, vice-president and treasurer; C. S. Cook, secretary. It is a local theatre innovation. . . .

GUILD TO FILMS

The Theatre Guild eventually will have to go into motion pictures, was the prediction made last week during a stop in Dayton by Guild director Lawrence Langner. Unwillingness of players to tour, conversion of legitimate houses to films, are the reasons. His solution: Guild stage productions, adaptation to the screen with the same casts, and Guild release. . . .

ALL WET

Promoter B. Rask's chief difficulty with the open air "theatre" he has been operating for two years outside Tampa, Fla., despite tropical rain and chill winter, has been his daily uncertainty as he cocked a weather eye at the sky. Too often he has been "all wet," and now he is pulling in his fences, stretching a canvas "roof," hoping to outwit the weather. . . .

RADIO'S WONDER

The wonder which is radio photography was demonstrated recently at the Music Hall, where the premiere of the Gaumont-British film "Power," was shown. The audience there saw Prince George attending the London opening of the film same day. The picture, radioed from London to New York, was rushed to the Music Hall in time for that showing. . . .

"LISTEN IN"

When MGM opened "The Merry Widow" at the Astor on Broadway last Thursday evening, with a swank premiere of the Hollywood spotlight and milling throng type, Major Edward Bowes of the Capitol up the street handled a radio broadcast of proceedings from the lobby via Loew's Station WHN. INSIDE of the PATENTS

The situation created in the industry by the Tri-Ergon Decision and the William Fox strategies

By TERRY RAMSAYE

For ten days the motion picture industry of the United States has been in a state of perturbed speculation over the significances and probable consequences of the latest curtain in the complex serial drama entitled Mr. William Fox and The Patents.

It is a scenario—a story of very very human ambitions that is being set down in the dusty language of the lawyers and the courts.

Like all scripts it purveys here and there endeavors at suspense, here and there a punch and minor climax. The opening sequences always develop the complications, plot building as they go. But for those of us who have read many scripts, have seen many dramas, on stage and off, there is ever the conviction, supported by experience, that what happens in the end is not in the hero's speech in the third reel.

We shall, if we survive years enough to see the end of the sound picture patents litigations pending and impending, find once again that something did not happen.

The motion picture was born into, grew up, thrived and became a great industry right through nearly twenty years of a better and bigger patent war than this one can be.

The exhibitor prospered and built the industry that the patentees and infringers were fighting over, while they were fighting. The menaces were many but they never importantly reached the screen.

The unfevered view of today's situation discovers no indication that anything devastatingly important is on the way.

The most immediate prospect is that nothing will happen but more stories in the papers. The most that can happen for a preponderance of the theatres is that maybe at some remote day a minor gadget will be removed from the projection machines and another gadget installed in its place—with business going on as usual. And in such an eventuation the accompanying studio disturbance would amount to a mere change of routine in existing recording processes—also business as usual.

That in sum is the opinion to be reached by examination into the interminable intricacies of the patent records, the suits at law and the corporate and individual factors in the situation.

The picture which has been held up, and no doubt enjoyed the while by Mr. Fox, is that of the motion picture industry of the United States paying to him some millions a year in royalties, millions superimposed on current operating costs.

The millions might constitute motivation enough, but there are the incidental values, all colored by human emotion, that would be had in a return to power, an attainment of the Napoleonic position that seemed in sight a few years ago, a dramatic triumph against the mighty, as represented by the electrical interests, those Titans, the Telephone Company, the Radio Corporation, Westinghouse, General Electric, international publicity and fame—and perhaps dearest of all the joy of winning a big longshot, $45,000 against the grand prize of mastery of the industry.

In the years that have intervened, Woodmere in Long Island has been the Film Business Going On As Usual As William Fox Files New Suits

This week's developments in the situation created in the motion picture industry by the refusal October 8 of the United States supreme court to review two lower court decisions upholding the validity of William Fox's Tri-Ergon patents, were as follows:

William Fox filed suit, through his American Tri-Ergon Corporation, late Wednesday in United States district court, New York, against Columbia Pictures, First Division, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal and Consolidated Film Industries for an injunction and damages alleging infringement of his two Tri-Ergon patents.

Executives and attorneys of the large film corporations and of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Radio Corporation of America were participating in a series of conferences, "behind locked doors," to establish the extent to which last week's supreme court action might involve normal operations of the present system of sound recording and reproduction.

Electrical Research Products, as the sound equipment licensor, publicly reiterated its contractual pledge to protect licensees against patent infringement suits involving its equipment. RCA was silent on this matter, meanwhile preparing to replace fly-wheels on reproducing equipments with a substitute device.

The smoke of Broadway speculation over the possible effects of the supreme court's action began to clear, revealing these established facts:

(1) The United States supreme court had refused to review two lower court decisions which had upheld the validity of the patents in only two cases. (2) This action does not mean that the supreme court cannot consider the issue in the future if and when similar suits against others should take a different turn en route through the lower courts to the supreme court. (3) The supreme court definitely did not say that the Tri-Ergon patents had been infringed, nor that William Fox had been damaged, nor that Mr. Fox owned the patents.

There were indications that Mr. Fox might have to defend his ownership rights to the patents on two fronts.

Contrary to all grossly exaggerated reports, Mr. Fox and the industry had not even approached a common meeting ground for an adjustment. The industry was conducting its usual business in the usual manner.

FIRST ROUND OF PRELIMINARY BOUT

Elba from which Mr. Fox has looked afar at the lights of empire over Broadway, busy the while with his strategy, forgetting not for a moment the vision of dominance which rose before him in the optimisms of the beckoning days when the Fox-Case sound pictures were born of research and adventure. That book "Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox" published some two years ago was a message from Elba, a fighting document, not the memoirs of a retired warrior.

The hasty zeal of headline hunting journalism has seen in the appearance of a decision from the United States Supreme Court, refusing a writ of certiorari to require a review of a Circuit Court of Appeals judgment which supported two patents of German origin for which Mr. Fox was contending, as the end of the line of litigation, an abrupt and final victory. Subsequent developments are more likely to show this decision as a victory in one round of a preliminary bout.

If the issues and moves ahead were concerned only with matters of law and moves in the courts, which they are not, the decision concerned could not properly be considered a final adjudication of the patents involved. The actions concerned involve two defendants only and carry the judgments somewhat narrowly reached and with reference to restricted jurisdictions. Enforcement of patent claims against other infringers elsewhere would involve new parallel litigations with no assurance of an identical line of judgments in the lower courts and with considerable prospect of divergences which would bring the conflicting decisions again before the Supreme Court for new action. Whatever may have been the reasons for the institution of these actions in Pennsylvania, there is no warrant for the positive assumption that the Pennsylvania opinion would become ruling precedent. Hence the first battle is not over.

DIVERGENT LINE OF CONTROVERSY LOOMS

Meanwhile there looms ahead a divergent line of controversy and litigations which may make the entire issue of the validity of the patents concerned an issue of no importance, even if the patents were conceded to be important—another subject to be approached presently.

First, in this secondary angle of issues, is the question of ownership of the patents. They are at the time held by the American Tri-Ergon Corporation, of which ninety per cent of the stock is held by Mr. Fox while ten per cent of it reposes with the parent organization of the German inventors, the Swiss Tri-Ergon concern—Swiss because many European enterprises with international interests like neutral territory for their corporate home.

There are two contesting claimants against Mr. Fox for that ninety per cent of American Tri-Ergon, the Fox Film Corporation which contends that the $45,000 he spent for the patents was spent from the corporation's funds and in behalf of the corporation, and the Swiss concern which contends—or is minded to contend—that Mr. Fox has lost ownership of his nine-tenths of the American rights by alleged failure to execute his agreement to exploit the patents as to picture production and sale of licenses in the United States.

PATENTS LAWFULLY HIS, FOX CONTENDS

Mr. Fox makes on his side the contention that the patents are lawfully his by sale executed between him and the corporation he then controlled, and that further his agreement to license the Fox concern under the Tri-Ergon patents is rendered null and void by the corporation's failure or refusal to continue payments to him of some $500,000 a year in execution of the terms by which he sold his interests to Mr. Harley Clarke at the end of that stirring battle for control some years ago.

Should the Fox corporation prevail and prove or regain ownership of the control of American Tri-Ergon the existing cross-licensing agreements would wipe out the issue as to Erpi licensees, but no others. The Fox corporation is bound by a cross-licensing agreement with Electric Research Products, Inc., which in turn is covered by the cross-licensing agreement between the Radio Corporation of America, with its RCA Photophone, Inc., and the Telephone Company, but certain complicated conditions imposed prevent the cross-licensing by Erpi of RCA Photophone on Fox patents because of RCA's interest in the home movie field.

If, however, the Swiss concern prevailed and regained the ninety per cent of its American rights now held by Mr. Fox, it would be confronted with all of the problems of litigation which stand ahead of him, and perhaps without the drive of his personal zeal, certainly with considerably less of a war chest. A victory for Swiss Tri-Ergon would tend inevitably toward an early settlement, it would seem, and it appears the more probable because of current conversations addressed at the objective of setting up a mutuality of interest between the Fox Film Corporation and the Swiss concern. Should they join interests there obviously would need to be a profit of some sort in sight for each, and that obviously would involve some sort of settlement.

If one is to lay aside the question of ownership and cross-licensing arrangements and assumes or has had ultimately and finally adjudicated the validity of the patents, there yet remains the question of their importance to the art of making and exhibiting pictures. No very profound research is necessary to discover that pictures may be made and in fact are being made, and projected, by instruments and processes which can hardly be held to infringe the claims of the patents at issue.

FLY-WHEEL MERELY AN INERTIA DEVICE

The Tri-Ergon fly-wheel patent may be summarized as one covering the use of the weighted wheel to insure or create a steady, continuous motion for the film, while receiving the sound record or transmitting it. No matter what the courts hold, any reasonably competent technician would view this on a par with an attempt to patent a wheelbarrow or a grindstone. That, however, is not the immediate point. The point is that the fly-wheel is merely an inertia device, purposely introduced into the system, but meanwhile all of the other rotating parts of the mechanism, having mass and substance also have incidentally inertia. So it is found that the fly-wheel is not essential. To reduce the matter to practical figures it is probably a fair estimate to say that it would cost something less than a half million dollars to eliminate all the ten thousand Erpi fly-wheels in theatres in the U. S.—an item indeed but a slight one to weigh against a control of the industry by Tri-Ergon leverage.

It chances, incidentally, and should be recorded in passing, that the same condition does not precisely apply to the RCA Photophone mechanisms which appear to be so constructed as to be in their present form more dependent on fly-wheel control. It seems that 'way back then when the Tri-Ergon patents were being offered for sale and both the Radio and Telephone experts were considering them, all agreed they were of no value, but that the ensuing designs by the Telephone-Western-Erpi engineers retained a consciousness of the existence of the German claim while RCA Photophone manufacturers seemed to take the fly-wheel patent more lightly.

This is perhaps indicated by the fact that Mr. Fox's attorneys and patent experts elected to institute their fly-wheel patent litigation against RCA, with the more obvious reel.

INDUSTRY CAN'T BE BROKEN ON FLY-WHEEL

But in this connection it must be borne in mind that under the cross-licensing agreement Photophone may on option make a Chinese copy of the Erpi mechanism if it is so desired. It is estimated that about 3,000 to 3,500 Photophone reproducer installations are in use.

Apparently the industry can not be broken on the fly-wheel.

The Tri-Ergon printing patent is set up to deal with a combination and sequence of processes: the simultaneous recording of picture and sound on separate films; their separate development and finally the printing of a positive from both the sound and picture negatives.

It is pointed out by the studio and laboratory technicians, and argued by the supporting patent authorities, that the breaking of this sequence of processes at any point results in a non-infringing process. This leads to the apparently well warranted assumption that primary recording on disc with rerecording on film—the process used in quest of better quality for "One Night of Love" and "Enter Madame"—would escape; and that the use of the newsreel type of camera, recording both picture and sound on a single negative, instead of the two specified by the patent, would stand free and clear of control.

Also quite obviously dubbing and scoring, being recorded subsequent to the picture making, would escape because of the specification involving the term "simultaneous." The printing patent appears to have been made extremely vulnerable by taking in too much territory. Some men do that, too.

In any event, there are no indications that there is a remote possibility that exhibitors will need to re-equip for discs. Pictures will continue to be delivered with both sound and pictures on the film.

It is well to set down here now the fact that there are involved in the art of the talking picture somewhere in the neighborhood of 2,500 patents. The issues of today concern two patents. And one is to be reminded, also, that the Tri-Ergon patents at issue would not empower the making of talking pictures which involve the use of various vacuum tubes, photo-electric cells and related electrical components controlled by the Telephone - Radio pooling arrangement.

NEWSREEL FRANCHISE MIGHT SHARE IN PEACE

Were the industry to render the Tri-Ergon patents irrelevant by any of the devices indicated and yet find them sustained firmly and finally, the owner or owners of them could then hope to recover for such damages as they might prove they had sustained for the period of infringement. In the face of evidence of their non-essential character their past value would then seem to approximate that of a left-handed monkey wrench. In any event the accounting problem would become intricate.

Broadway has been entertaining itself the while with reports and conjectures about the terms that Mr. Fox would seek to impose upon the industry, if, as and when he might. A much quoted price has been $8,000,000, which is obviously an inadequate measure of what Mr. Fox knows about the industry and thinks of it. It is much more likely that he had considered an annual royalty return in excess of any such figure.

As a bit of the whimsy of the situation it has become known that Mr. Fox holds yet a special interest in newsreels and might consider making an exclusive newsreel franchise to him a part of the price of peace. This is the more to be enjoyed in that, as has been indicated, the patents at issue do not cover newsreel recording and printing. Remember, the newsreel camera had a fly-wheel, too, before sound was born.

Meanwhile, the players are looking at the chess board. There may be a lot more lawsuits—and there might be a settlement, any time, not in astronomical figures but mayhap for enough to save money in the law departments.

The situation is louder than it is large.

Over the entrance of a theatre in Chicago's Michigan Avenue, graven in stone, is: "All passes, art alone endures."

Actions Mark Initial Step in Applying Decision of Court; Consolidated Film also Named

William Fox's first step toward applying the recent refusal of the United States supreme court to review lower court decisions upholding the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents was made late Wednesday, when the American Tri-Ergon Corporation moved to involve five additional motion picture corporations in litigation.

Mr. Fox's Tri-Ergon company filed individual suits in the United States district court in New York against Columbia Pictures, First Division, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal and Consolidated Film Industries asking for separate injunctions against these defendants from further use of the double-printing process and the "fly-wheel" mechanism in sound, on the ground that they allegedly infringe his two Tri-Ergon patents. The defendants are given 20 days in which to reply. In addition to the injunction, Mr. Fox asked for the usual accounting of profits as the basis of estimating possible damages.

Another Battery of Atttorneys

Tri-Ergon won its case against Paramount and has pending similar actions against Radio-Keith-Orpheum, Radio Corporation of America and Electrical Research Products. Fox, Monogram and United Artists are the only three large companies that have not been served to date.

In filing the new suits on Wednesday Mr. Fox added another battery of attorneys to his already lengthy list of counsel. Handling the case to date was the New York law firm of Hirsh, Reass, Newman and Becker. Representing American Tri-Ergon in the new litigation is the firm of Ward, Crosby and Neal. Former Judge Thomas Thacher is also of Fox counsel.

Exhibitors received over the weekend further assurance from Electrical Research Products, Inc., that it would protect them "in strict compliance with the provisions of our contractual agreement with you in the event of a patent infringement suit based upon our reproducing equipment being brought against you, provided, of course, that you are not in default under your agreement with us."

The Radio Corporation of America was silent in this connection.

However, RCA was preparing during the week to replace the fly-wheel mechanism in its reproducers in theatres with a substitute.

Since producing and exhibiting licensees of both Erpi and RCA are contractually assured of protection by the two licensors against patent infringement suits, it appears that the cost of adjusting the Tri-Ergon problem will fall ultimately on these two companies.

Nothing Further Established

In any event, the supreme court's action, which refused a review of lower decisions upholding the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents in two cases, was explained by motion picture attorneys Monday as having established nothing beyond that. The supreme court did not say that the patents had been infringed, nor that Mr. Fox had been damaged, nor that he is the owner of the patents.

Under ordinary legal procedure, it was further explained, if Fox-Tri-Ergon and the motion picture industry did not effect a settlement, Mr. Fox in all probability would seek injunctions against licensees charging infringement. This would involve long and complicated legal procedure.

If the court did grant a temporary injunction, the defendants would be required to post a bond and the controversy would then rest until trial. However, the court could refuse to grant a temporary injunction and at the same time order the case to trial.

Newspaper headlines claiming that Mr.

SUITS AND MORE SUITS

Fox has come into control of the motion picture industry were obviously gross inaccuracies.

Some highly important and rather significant reports were heard from the downtown business districts of New York on Tuesday which indicated that Mr. Fox may soon be asked to defend his ownership rights to the patents on two fronts.

One story said that Tri-Ergon, Ltd., of St. Gall, Switzerland, which in 1924 acquired the rights to the two patents from the three German inventors, and which, in turn, disposed of 90 per cent of these rights to William Fox in 1928, was entertaining the idea of filing a suit to retrieve these rights from Fox on the grounds that he is no longer entitled to the patents because he has failed to commercially exploit them. It was even reported that the action already had been filed.

While declaring that his New York law firm represented Swiss Tri-Ergon in this country, Milton Diamond, an attorney of 745 Fifth avenue, denied that any such suit had been instigated against Mr. Fox up to this time. In answer to the specific question whether his client contemplated taking any such action, he said, "We have not arrived at any decision."

"We are compelled to decline participation in any discussion of the future plans of Swiss Tri-Ergon for the present," Mr. Diamond added.

The Fox attorney, Daniel Rosenblatt, was somewhat surprised to hear of the report.

Suit Against Fox Pending

Of equal importance with any action that Swiss Tri-Ergon might institute to recover the patents from Mr. Fox is a suit now pending in the courts, filed on or about July 1, 1933, by Fox Film Corporation against William Fox, in which Fox Film asked for the return of the patents and also for a sum ranging between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 charging irregularity in a series of alleged stock manipulations.

After several legal skirmishes over various technical points in the case, with honors divided about evenly, the matter now stands on the calendar of the court at Mineola, Long Island, and, according to Fox Film counsel, it could be brought to trial at any time.

Three Courses for Electrics

While the situation was said on Broadway to be one of some importance because of its possibilities, it is by no means critical, according to the consensus of motion picture leaders.

From confidential sources it was learned that Mr. Fox is not averse to talking about a settlement, the nature of which, while not established, was variously reported in the press to range between $8,000,000 and $100,000,000. The last estimate obviously is tremendously exaggerated.

On the other hand, the electrics appeared to have one of three courses open: Effect a complete settlement with Mr. Fox, arrange to pay him moderate royalty patents, or evade the Tri-Ergon patents in sound systems and let the courts decide whether Mr. Fox is entitled to any payment.

The situation was the subject of several meetings during the week of the generals of the large corporations and John E. Otterson, president of Erpi. It is assumed that RCA had a representative on hand. First of these conferences was one held Monday in the New York headquarters of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. All sessions were held behind locked doors.

The future action of the industry depends upon Mr. Fox's next move, and, according to the Fox attorney, the American Tri-Ergon Corporation has not decided upon the next step. Quietude about the Fox camp gave some support to the Broadway report that William Fox is sitting back awaiting overtures from the industry—which were considered unlikely.

Allied to Revise Its 1928 By-Laws

Allied States is planning a complete revision of its 1928 by-laws to conform to present-day conditions. A vote by mail is to be made before any amendments officially are recorded.

Coincidentally Allied announced in Washington its three-point legislative program for submission to congress in January.

These points are:

"To secure a Congressional investigation of the negotiation, writing and administration of the motion picture code.

"To secure a modification of the copyright laws which will curb the monopolistic power of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

"To secure enactment of an anti-block booking law similar to the so-called Brookhart bill."

A special meeting of Allied directors was being held in New York Wednesday and Thursday following the meeting of eastern unit heads in Boston Monday in advance of the regular directors' meeting in December. Expected to attend in New York were Abram F. Myers, Sidney E. Samuelson, Aaron Saperstein, Walter B. Littlefield and H. M. Richey. Annual election of officers is expected in December.

Northwest Allied Meet Will Discuss Taxation

State and federal taxation will be discussed at the annual convention of Allied Amusements of the Northwest, to be held at the Washington Hotel in Seattle beginning October 24. Sales contracts, the code, the music tax will also be discussed.

Church Talks End

The Reverend Hugh C. Boyle, bishop of the Pittsburgh diocese of the Catholic Church, spoke last Friday evening over the radio, concluding a series of talks explaining the attitude of the Legion of Decency.

Rosenblatt Against Federal Censors

Strong opposition to any form of government censorship of films was voiced Tuesday by Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA division administrator, speaking before the motion picture division of the State Federation of Pennsylvania Women, at Harrisburg.

"Self regulation in the industry is the answer to clean pictures," Mr. Rosenblatt declared.

"It was evident in March, 1934, that the place to do any cleaning up was at the source of the trouble—where the pictures were made and at the time they were made," the Division Administrator said. "It is interesting to note that, even at this time of emphasized interest in pictures, every proponent of some corrective step is quick to declare against government censorship. I myself do not believe in such a remedy, because I know that you cannot legislate morality. Self-regulation and education, under powerful and virile leadership, are the only effective mediums."

No Change in Pathe's Plan

Pathe Exchange, Inc., will institute no changes in its plan of reorganization, it was decided this week following a study of several changes suggested by a group of stockholders. Officers of Pathe, after several weeks of consideration, concluded that the proposals contributed no further advantages to the reorganization plan, it was said.

Pathe still has several days in which to file affidavits in reply to those stockholders opposing the holding of an extraordinary meeting at which the reorganization plan could be adopted by two-thirds of the stockholders present.

Stuart W. Webb, Pathe president, said Tuesday it was expected the court would approve the holding of the meeting within two weeks, after which 90 days must elapse for notice to all stockholders.

Jordon Loses Last Appeal In Alabama Bribe Sentence

Elmer D. Jordon, former Alabama state senator from Gadsden, convicted in 1932 on a charge of soliciting a $250 bribe from Lee Castleberry, local theatre manager, last week lost his final appeal before the state supreme court, and must begin serving his two to two and one-half year prison term within 15 days.

Ed Berry, a Fox Unit Manager, Killed in Crash

Ed Berry, 43, unit business manager for Fox, and a half-brother of Al and Ray Rockett, died at the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Hollywood, early this week, of injuries sustained in an automobile accident at Bridgeport, Cal., last Saturday night. He is survived by his widow.

22 CIVIC GROUPS DENY INTIMATED COMMITMENT TO SHORT'S PROGRAM

Delegates Did Not "Agree Upon Statement of Policies" Calling for Legislative Drive Against Films, Executives Say

Crackling pyrotechnics this week burst about the crown of the Motion Picture Research Council's gray-haired executive director, Dr. William Harrison Short, as the heads of 22 organizations flatly denied that he had been given any authority to release, as he did ten days ago, a statement to New York's film trade and daily press so worded that it was widely construed as indicating that these national bodies had given their official sanction to the Council's "new" program and would actively support its congressional legislative campaign against the motion picture industry.

Says Statement Was "Agreed Upon"

The press had been given the following announcement through the Council's "bureau of public enlightenment," presided over by Herbert S. Houston, in connection with a conference held at the American Museum of Natural History in New York the last week in September, sponsored by the Council: "A statement of national policies in motion pictures agreed upon by representatives of 35 national organizations was made public yesterday (Oct. 3) by the Motion Picture Research Council of 366 Madison Avenue, New York, simultaneously with the mailing of them to the presidents of the associated organizations." The release also quoted Dr. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia University, who presided, as saying the 35 organizations in all probability would adopt the Council's "new" program, although this was not binding.

"The associated organizations" referred to in the Council's publicity release were, presumably, those 35 bodies represented by delegates of whom at least 22, it now appears, had no authority to commit their groups to any plan of the Council.

The 35 are:

Adult Education Association, American Association of University Women, American Jewish Congress, American Legion, American Museum of Natural History, Big Brothers and Big Sisters Foundation, Boy Scouts of America, B'nai B'rith, Catholic Boys Brigade of the United States, Catholic Daughters of America, Child Welfare League of America, Federal Council of Churches, Federal Motion Picture Council, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Girl Scouts, Institute of Geographical Exploration, International Association of Lions Clubs, International Dental Health Foundation, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Maryland Civic League for Motion Pictures, Massachusetts Civic League, National Association of Junior Leagues of America, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Council of Teachers of English, National Council of Women of the United States, National Council of Jewish Women, National Council of Young Women's Christian Association, National Education Association, National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, National Probation Association, National Women's Trade Union League of America, Russell Sage Foundation, Southern Women's Education Alliance, Women's League of the United Synagogues, National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association and the Motion Picture Research Council.

Most Deny Commitments

The Council's press release also stated bluntly that the delegates had sponsored a statement declaring against compulsory block booking and blind selling and had agreed to a provision for a legal committee to draft a bill for introduction into the next congress "forbidding these trade practices."

Most of the 35 organizations denied participation in the Council's conference in any way other than as interested observers. They declared that their delegates had been sent solely as individuals with no authority to make decisions for the groups they represented.

The following symposium conducted by the HERALD represents the carefully expressed opinion of executives of these organizations in respect to the impression created by the Council's announcement:

American Association for Adult Education:
(Morse A. Cartwright, Director)

"As far as this association is concerned there is no commitment one way or another to the Research Council's program. The conference in question included those persons who had been officially invited and those delegates who had been asked to come as interested observers. This association did not commit itself to the Council's program nor is it associated with the Council in any way."

American Museum of Natural History:
(F. Trubee Davison, President)

"There were no official delegates of the Museum at the conference, although it was held, at our invitation, at the Museum itself. The Council should be very careful before sending out such publicity."

American Jewish Congress:
(Bernard S. Deutsch, President)

"So far as we are aware we have never had anything to do with the Motion Picture Research Council nor with the industry itself. There were no delegates to the conference."

Big Brother and Sister Federation, Inc.:
(Rowland Sheldon, Executive Secretary)

"We had no delegate at the conference mentioned. We do not believe this organization would take a stand on anything like this."

Big Brother Movement:
(Jos. H. McCoy, General Secretary)

"No delegates from this organization attended the conference, nor have we any knowledge of Short other than hearsay."

The Big Sisters (Protestant):
(Ethel Morrey, Executive Director)

"The Research Council is not known to this organization. . . ."

Boy Scouts of America:
(James E. West, Chief Scout)

"We agreed to take over a number of questionnaires regarding the different types of motion pictures preferred. These were given to some Eagle Scouts to answer. That is the extent of our organized support of the Council to date."

Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America:
(Dr. Samuel McC. Cavert, General Sec'y)

"As far as we are concerned in this matter we did send delegates to the conference but they did not commit the Federal Council of Churches to the Research Council's program. We are, however, supporting the general move-

SHORT LAYS BLAME ON NEWSPAPER MEN

Following upon the Herald's inquiry into the extent of the 35 organizations' commitments to the Council's program, Dr. Short sought to put the burden of responsibility on newspaper rewrite men and headline writers by means of a statement issued to the organizations alleged to be supporting his program,—this despite the fact that the opening paragraph of the publicity release of October 4 definitely informed the public that "a statement of national policies in motion pictures agreed upon by representatives of 35 national organizations was made public, ... simultaneously with the mailing of them to the presidents of the associated organizations."

Dr. Short's cover-up letter of October 16 follows in part:

"The officers (of the Council) hope you have not been annoyed by publicity given to the conference of Sept. 28-29, in which organizations seemed to be committed to the program drawn up and recommended there before they had had opportunity to consider and pass upon it. . . . .

"The news story sent out by our committee on information quoted Dr. Wood as saying that 'this action was not binding on the organizations represented in the conference.' To our regret, the story as re-written by several papers omitted this vital statement. . . . .

"There is no need for us to say, however, that we hope the recommendations of the conference will commend themselves to you and receive your support. . . . ."

ment against block booking and we have cooperated with the Legion of Decency in its campaign for public non-support of objectionable films."

National Board of the YWCA:

(Anna Rice, General Secretary)

"We will work out our own legislative program with respect to the motion picture industry. It may coincide with that of the Council and it may not. Our delegate at the conference stated that the National Board of the YWCA approved the Council's program."

International Federation of Catholic Alumnae:

(Mrs. Phillip A. Brennan, President)

"I know nothing of such a statement. The Federation has not committed itself to anything in respect to motion pictures."

National Council, YMCA:

(George J. Zehrung, Director, Motion Picture Bureau)

"We had an unofficial observer at the meeting, but Dr. Short had no right to issue such a statement. Individual delegates of these various organizations had no authority to bind their groups to the Council's program. The thing that strikes us is that Dr. Short has no real program, and if he did, he does not appear to have any machinery to make it work."

National Council of Jewish Women:

(Mrs. Mary G. Schonberg, Executive Sec'y)

"Mr. Short exceeded himself in this announcement. We considered it extremely meretricious publicity and so we informed the Council. We are definitely not one of the organizations allegedly endorsing this program. As a matter of fact, we do not even know whether the program is good or not."

National Council of Women:

(Lena Madesin Phillips, President)

"The invitations, which were issued under the name of Mrs. Grace Coolidge, stated that no decisions were expected to be made by the delegates to the conference. This publicity is, therefore, very surprising. No delegate had authority to make decisions for the organization."

Junior Leagues of America, Inc.:

(Mrs. DeF. Van Slyeck, Executive Director)

"None of our delegates voted on anything. We are an absolutely non-committal organization and we do not participate in legislative activities of any sort or description. The Research Council has no right to send out statements of this sort as official publicity."

National Federation of Business & Professional Women's Clubs:

(Emily R. Kneubuhl, Executive Secretary)

"Our delegates did not take any official stand at the conference. We are not committed to the Council's program."

National Education Association:

(J. W. Crabtree, Secretary)

"The matter has not been presented for specific action to the Association. I have personally encouraged the Research Council and its investigations, being anxious for any reform that would make the industry more safe for the children of America. My only regret is that the industry itself is not taking the lead in investigations and research in this field. There has been no activity on our part to destroy."

National Probation Association:

(Charles L. Chute, Executive Director)

"We were voting to get a consensus of opinion, but we were voting as individuals, after which reports were to be made to the executive board of the organization. We did not, however, express ourselves officially with respect to the Council's program."

National Congress of Parents and Teachers:

(Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, President)

"The action taken by the Motion Picture Research Council should be construed as not being against the motion picture industry, but as an aid to their own avowed wish to improve the films. We believe the abolishment of blind and block booking will go far toward helping attain that goal."

General Federation of Women's Clubs:

(Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, President)

"The Federation has not given indorsement to the plan of the Motion Picture Research Council and does not participate in initiating legislation on any question."

Institute of Geographical Exploration, Harvard University:

(Weld Arnold, Executive Director)

"Any use of my name or that of my organization by Dr. William Short is entirely unauthorized in any connection. I am perfectly able to speak for myself. I have nothing against the motion picture industry, which I regard as having great educational possibilities."

International Dental Health Foundation for Children:

(Dr. Louise C. Ball, President)

"The Foundation's delegate was not there when the final vote was taken. Being present at the conference did not mean we were committing our organizations."

Russell Sage Foundation:

(Lee F. Hanmer, Director)

"It is untrue as far as we are concerned. If this is representative of the Council's tactics, it is too bad. It is dangerous to go to such meetings."

Southern Woman's Educational Alliance:

(Miss Orie Latham Hatcher, President, Richmond, Va.)

"We understood that the conference, while inviting representatives' individual expressions, did not commit the organizations represented. The Alliance has never participated in any legislative campaigns and any change of general policy would have to depend upon the decision of our national board."

AN INVITATION THAT A DEB DIDN'T WRITE

Although there appeared to be considerable mention of tea in the invitation to the fund-raising fashion show for the Motion Picture Research Council, held in the Ritz-Carlton last week, the HERALD reporter who attended saw few cups but many glasses of every type and size, the refreshments being chiefly of a light amber tint. The invitations read:

DIARY OF A DEBUTANTE

"Dear Diary—

"What do you think! Mother has set the date for my Coming-Out party! ! ! And it's going to be broadcast over the Columbia Network from the Grand Ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Wednesday, October the tenth, at three o'clock. We're going to have a Radio Fashion Show (including my entire wardrobe from morn 'til midnight—and some of mama's dashing new clothes) and Tea.

"The new things are too—too divine—all selected by Tobé, and from Macy's Little Shop.

"Dad says it will be for the benefit of the Motion Picture Research Council (instead of me!) and that's why tickets (including tea) are $2. Members of the Council are:

"Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Mrs. James Roosevelt, Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. Walter McNab Miller, Mrs. William Blair Niles, Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Miss Kate Ogleby, Mrs. Charles H. Sabin and Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Jr.

"Isn't it exciting? And, dear diary, I know everyone will take the gentle hint and tear off this little scrap of paper and send it in with a check."

Most Others Outside City

Of the organization officials who could not be reached for statements, most have headquarters outside New York City.

"The recent meeting of the Motion Picture Research Council was not only interesting but should prove of value in the promotion of the objectives of the Council's work," Kathryn McHale, director of the American Association of University Women, wrote to Dr. Short Thursday.

The National Congress of Parents and Teachers is sponsoring plans to ask that a federal commissioner be appointed to represent the consumer public at the point of production and to seek governmental supervision of motion picture distribution. A plea to this effect was made this week at Columbus as delegates to the Ohio convention of the Congress met in convention.

"We have organized in the past and helped the movies while they have exploited our children, and the time has come to quit," declared Mrs. Robbins Gilman, permanent chairman of the organization.

And the Fashion Show

In New York, Dr. Short, aided and abetted by a seemingly limitless number of New York's glittering socialites, was holding a fashion show, "The Diary of a Deb," to raise money for the Council. The show was put on in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton and was attended by a fashionable throng eagerly bent upon moral uplift of the motion picture and study of backless evening gowns.

Invitations to the Council's social function were couched in a language obviously peculiar to New York's "debbies." Whether James G.

'CALLS FOR BIGGEST ALL-STAR CAST'

But "Merrily We Roll Along" Will Require 3 A. M. Huddles, Says DeCasseres; Other Plays Discussed

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

MERRILY WE ROLL ALONG

The new play by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart (Sam H. Harris, producing), "Merrily We Roll Along," is the big sensation of the new season.

As a picture, it will call for the biggest all-star cast ever assembled in Hollywood. But to make it a tremendous success (like "Grand Hotel" and "Dinner at Eight"—and "Merrily We Roll Along" is a better play than either of these) from a box-office angle will require a lot of head-scratching, conferring and 3 a. m. huddles.

For this play is played backward—from 1934 to 1916. Just how far will the picture audiences stand for this new technique? It is not a series of "flash-backs," as we had in the old silent days. It is, literally, a bitterly humorous and tragically ironic play that begins with the climax and ends with the banal, quiet beginning.

Psychologically, "Merrily We Roll Along" is true. For our memories and the explanation of why things happen to anybody naturally run to what happened in our yesterdays. Still, the night I was present, people walked out, muttering, "I don't understand it."

If the picture producer who buys this work plays it straight it will be a somewhat commonplace story. Played as is, it is a fine, original piece of work: a paradox, but a fact.

"Merrily We Roll Along" is a great play just because the whole tragedy is looked at from a standpoint of Why am I what I am?

The story is laid around Richard Niles (Kenneth McKenna), a successful, fashionable, very wealthy American playwright.

The first scene (there are nine) is in his home on Long Island. He is 40. It's a birthday party, with a great crowd of fashionable and artistic rotters. The scene ends by Richard's wife (Jessie Royce Landis), an actress who made him, throwing acid in the face of the leading lady in his play. This is in 1934.

Thence forward we go down the years—1927, 1926, 1925, 1924, 1923, 1922, 1918, 1916, and we see how these characters rose and rotted. It is a master story of broken ideals, marital infidelities, rum-parties, divorces, obsequious spine-curving in order to "get there," smeared and shattered romances.

The last scene is laid in a college chapel in 1916. Richard Niles, at 22, is expounding the Glory of the Ideal in his valedictory. The audience has just sat through two hours of how this Ideal tobogganed into Success, Praise, Hero-Worship—and acid throwing.

Messrs. Kaufman and Hart have made every minute count: romance, comedy, tragedy, satire, biting dialogue—the pathos of what-you-are and what-you-once-hoped-to-be, and the dirty road Upward.

"Merrily We Roll Along" is an uptodate Morality Play.

Picture value (if the public takes to the reverse-gear stunt), 100 per cent.

DREAM CHILD

"Dream Child," written by the prolific J. C. Nugent (Abert Ingalls, Jr., and the Westport Country Playhouse, producing), is the sanest, most genuinely hilarious and best constructed comedy that we have had this season.

As a picture product it will register big because it is for the middle-class trade, the solid homespun brain, the forthright-laughter crowd.

That's not all. Here is a comedy of small-town people, with New York for environment in the second act, that is psychologically plausible. It is so exquisitely balanced and nuanced, so sensitive to everyday values, that the deep, hearty laughter that it causes is neighbor to the tear. And that is a rare feat, both on stage and screen: to make you laugh with a gulp in your throat.

A whole garden of flowers to J. C. Nugent. Here, in this play, this veteran trooper becomes the finest comedian of the home-brew type that Broadway has known in years.

He is a master craftsman at producing ludicrous and pathetic effects with a cough, a curious lurching angle of the body, the weighed reading of his lines, a crook of his pudgy finger.

Of course he builds his parts to suit himself, but even this is useless unless a man's gifts are greater than the role, which is the case in Nugent's "King Tut" Jones, of Eastville, N. J. It is a masterpiece of comic pathos.

"Tut," as he is called, is a well-to-do realtor who hates the whole routine business game.

But there is Bob Jones, his son (Alan Bunce). He, too—an architect—is becoming staid and is going to marry the local banker's dried-in-the-mazuma daughter.

Now "Tut" secretly dreams of living his lost rowdy life through Bob. So he lures the kid to a run-down but decent old Pension in Greenwich Village that once upon a time, in "King Tut's" youthful days, entertained Salvani, Booth, Irving, etc.

In this house Bob meets a "modern paintress," who wants a child but no husband. The very first week she and Bob have an affair.

The "paintress" skips out one day. She's trying her eugenics on Bob.

Four years after—back in Eastville. Bob is married to the banker's daughter. The "paintress" comes to see him—just in from Paris.

She reveals to the father only that there is a baby in Paris and that her ideas were all wrong. She should have married Bob.

Tut is secretly overjoyed. Bob has been the real old devil that he wanted to be—and so Tut is off to Paris.

This unusually fine comedy made a hit without the aid of the carriage trade or the proletariat from Union Square—hurrah!

Picture value, 90 per cent.

SMALL MIRACLE

Producers, line up for a big buy. Exhibitors, get your box-offices ready for a big smash.

"Small Miracle" is the first sure-fire crook melodrama offering of the season on the speaking stage.

This is no more open to dispute than Vic McLaglen's fist in a gamblers' dispute.

"Small Miracle" is by Norman Krasna. George Abbott—who should stick to putting on shows and not acting in them—did the staging, a corking job. Courtney Burr, of "Sailor Beware!" fame, did the producing.

The play is an oblique combination of "Grand Hotel" and "Broadway." It is laid in the spacious lobby—between the acts and during the progress of a musical show—in the Forty-third Street Theatre. The characters—and there are twenty-five of them—come and go between the lobby and the performance (which will of course appear in the picture). All of these characters have some slight story to tell, as in "Grand Hotel."

There is a slow beginning in the first act in order to plant all the characters and the budding dramatic situations. Beginning with the second act the speed is gradually accelerated, until from the third act on things happen so fast that eye and ear can hardly follow.

Tony Mako (played superbly by Joseph Spurin-Calleia, who has immediately become the Big Noise of Broadway) is being taken to Colorado to be hanged. He is handcuffed to an easy-going detective. They have four hours to train-time, so they see a show.

The character of Tony is sentimental, revengeful, desperate. He gives five hundred dollars to the detective for the latter's child ("why let a crooked warden get it?"), makes a getaway in the lavatory, returns to the lobby while they are hunting him outside, and kills the squealer he is after, whom he had lured with a fake phone call.

Tony is killed on the stairs by the detective under the blare and jazz of the show.

The second episode centers around a hat-check boy, who is being bilked for two hundred dollars by a coatroom girl, who makes him believe she must have an "operation."

This girl is the wife of the squealer that Tony is after. The boy steals a pin (to get the money) from a woman's coat. This woman is in the theatre with a man not her husband (third sub-plot).

Now, the boy is loved by a girl who is a file-clerk in the office of this husband whom the lady is cheating. He is sweet on her, and the poor girl lets him have his way at a neighboring hotel to get the two hundred dollars for the boy she loves.

When she returns to the lobby she discovers that her act had been unnecessary. Circumstances had freed her lover and the curtain goes down on her great grief.

It is grand entertainment—no more.

Deny Indorsing Dr. Short's Plan

Blaine, Research Council treasurer, was responsible for the creation of the invitation was not made known. His name, however, appeared in the lower left-hand corner of the second page in a coupon intended to be sent to the Council, together with a check for $2 as admission to the show.

The show, as stipulated in the invitations, was presented by the Research Council in conjunction with Tobé and Macy's, and promptly, on the dot of 3 p.m. Wednesday, a fanfare of trumpetry announced the commencement of the "exercises."

No Cameramen on Hand

Mrs. Tobé Coller Davis—who is Tobé—faced a battery of microphones and in dulcet tones began her description of milady's trousseau. There were no newsreel cameramen on hand.

The first number on the bill was described as a bright blue tweed suit with beaver collar—price $54.75. The second item proved more in keeping with the spirit of the occasion—a leopard coat with beaver tuxedo, possibly in honor of Miss Marlene Dietrich whose penchant for semi-male attire is well known. The beaver tuxedo was listed in the Council's program at $399.

In the balcony, the reporter was keeping tab on the customers. It appeared a strange crowd: no executives, no hurried whisperings in dark corners about what "Br'er Fox is gonna do when he cuts loose with American Tri-Ergon": nothing but women and a few unemployed-in-the-afternoon men.

In one corner of the crowded balcony sat a portly matron, well clad in silver fox, looking slightly morose, but nevertheless engrossed. Presently a slender, horsey-looking woman in tweeds approached her and the following conversation ensued:

"My dear," said the matron, "you're the last person I expected to see here."

"Well, you know really, that is I mean to say, I just had to come," replied the horsey woman. "You know I've just joined the Research Council and I just had to see what was going on."

"My dear, I've only just become a member, too. Of course I don't know what the Council's all about, but I think it's a very good thing, don't you?"

"Yes," said "horsey." "Yes, it is nice, isn't it?"

At this point a well-built young woman clad in a lamé blouse top double duty evening gown strolled down the runway, turning this way and that, and the reporter's attention to the conversation lagged slightly.

Smattering of Applause

The proceedings were interrupted and Mrs. Davis introduced Mrs. Joseph W. Burden, a member of the Council and a daughter of the English actor, Cyril Maude. Mrs. Burden spoke briefly on the work of the Council.

"The Council believes the world should be filled with beautiful manners, morals and conduct, as well as beautiful clothes," she said.

It was obvious from the smattering of applause which greeted these few remarks that New York's society was there to look and not to listen.

Again the fashion show got underway, with more "pretties" to soothe the eye. Afterwards a lucky number contest was held, and many valuable prizes were given away. For example, there were two dresses, a hat, lingerie, a brocade evening bag outfitted with makeup for formal evening use. Also some lucky number ticket-holder was the recipient of an undetermined quantity of champagne.

Ritchey Export Corp. To Distribute in U. S.

Norton V. Ritchey, director of Ritchey International Corporation, exporters of American films, including Monogram product, this week announced his company henceforth will distribute foreign films in the United States, in addition to exporting.

Contracts already have been closed with Leon Garganoff of Lianofilm, Paris, for distribution of "The Battle," with Charles Boyer and Merle Oberon. This is an English talking version, produced in Paris.

Houses under 800 To Pay Music Tax Of Nickel a Seat

Acceptance last week by both exhibitors and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers of a modified schedule of rates to be paid by theatres for a license to reproduce copyrighted music of ASCAP members brought an almost immediate end to the verbal denunciations by exhibitors in the field of the Society's previous rate policy. The peacefulness spread further when it became known after the modification had been accepted that theatres seating less than 800 persons and operating three or less days a week will pay ASCAP only five cents a year for each seat. Other phases of the new schedule provide that:

Theatres seating 800 or less and operating more than three days will continue to pay the old rate of 10 cents a seat annually—a maximum of $80 for the largest theatre in this group.

Theatres seating between 801 and 1,599 will pay 15 cents a seat annually, or $120.15 for the smallest and $239.85 for the largest theatres in this group, the new rates representing a 50 per cent increase over the old rates of 10 cents.

Theatres seating 1,600 and more will pay 20 cents a seat annually, which is equivalent to $160 for the smallest theatre in this group and $550 for the structure seating 5,500, this rate representing a 100 per cent increase.

However, it remains for each exhibitor and each circuit to negotiate a new license under these terms on an individual basis. The Exhibitors' Emergency Committee which obtained the new schedule from ASCAP did not necessarily commit the individual theatre operators.

Dascomb, Paramount News Paris Executive, Dies

Edmond Brooks Dascomb, executive of Paramount News in Paris, died suddenly at his desk in his Paris office last week of a cerebral hemorrhage. When 33 years old he had joined Paramount News, in 1927, shortly after his graduation from the United States Naval Academy, and was transferred to Paris in 1930. He is survived by his wife, Anne Glavin Dascomb, and his mother, Mrs. Nellie Dascomb. The body is being returned to the States for burial at Mercer, Pa.

Frank Lloyd Now Academy President

Frank Lloyd was named last week to succeed J. T. Reed as president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast at a continued meeting of the board of governors and executive committees. Warner Baxter was elected first vice-president, to succeed Howard J. Green, and Howard Estabrook was selected to succeed Lewis Stone as second vice-president. Nathan Levinson was elected secretary, as successor to Frank Capra. William Sistrom was reelected treasurer, and Don Gledhill was continued as executive secretary and William Conklin as chairman of the actor-producer relations committee.

A code for first assistant directors was adopted. Already ratified by seven major producers, it provides for the payment of a bonus of one week's pay between pictures for overtime on a preceding picture.

A note of optimism characterized the meeting, with the expression of opinion that the Academy is destined to resume its former recognized position. It was revealed that since the arbitration department of the Academy was established in 1931, a total of $112,000 has been paid by studios in claims handled through the Academy. Independents, as well as members of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, have made use of the producer-actor relations office in settling claims out of court.

Files Action on Color Processes

Leon F. Douglas, inventor, has brought a $20,000,000 suit in United States district court, San Francisco, claiming all present color films, including Technicolor, are infringements of patents he applied for in 1916 and obtained in 1918 and 1923.

The suit is indicated as preliminary to other suits to be filed against Technicolor, Paramount, Walt Disney Productions, and others, according to Charles E. Townsend and William A. Loftus, attorneys for Mr. Douglas.

According to the suit filed for Mr. Douglas, he began experimenting with color films in 1912, making his first patent application four years later. The processes now used by Paramount, Fox and Technicolor, he claims, are based on principles which he discovered. Mr. Douglas say he owns approximately 50 patents, some not involving color films. He was one of the organizers of Victor Talking Machine Company. His inventions include one making submarine pictures possible, he claims.

He contends that in 1917 he made color film with Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin which was used in a Red Cross drive. His principle, he says, is based on the use of two prisms, one filtering red light rays onto film and the other green rays. From the two negatives thus obtained, a positive print is made on film treated with emulsion on both sides, one for the red and the other for the green tones.

Reels of Royal Slaying Banned; Flier Drowned

Tragedy rode the wings of a Fox Movietone News plane Wednesday when the craft crashed into the Atlantic 70 miles off New York while attempting to pick up from the SS Washington the films of the royal assassination in Marseilles. Harry W. Johnson, mechanic, was drowned. Others in the plane, who escaped unhurt, were Jack Kuhne, aviation editor of the newsreel, Marion Grevenberg, pilot, Edmund Reek of the Movietone staff, and Radio Operator Robinson.

With the sea too rough for a landing aboard the liner, a trailer buoy had been let out with the film container attached. The accident came when the plane tried to land on the water.

American newsreels had been confronted with sudden drastic censorship of films of the slaying of French Foreign Minister Louis Barthou and King Alexander of Jugoslavia.

There was clear and unmistakable evidence, as reported from London, where an uncensored reel was seen, that the French police protection afforded the country's foreign minister and the distinguished guest he met at the Marseilles dock, was wholly inadequate. Cabinet resignations further point to that fact, and that appears the outstanding reason for the sudden and, with newsreels, unprecedented action of the French authorities in banning the reels.

American companies vied with one another almost at the moment the assassination became known in this country, in releasing reels which carried shots pertinent to the place and victims of the assassination, with the largest display subtitles editors could quickly concoct. Executives were alike helpless as the French authorities pulled the films from the boats on which they were to be brought to America, and halted planes at Le Bourget airport, outside of Paris, as they were bound for London and transmission to the United States. The ban likewise in large measure extended to French theatres, and was adopted by other European governments.

Philadelphia Golf Tournament Held

With 70 golfers and 200 diners present, the Philadelphia Exhibitor last week in Philadelphia held its sixth annual golf tournament and dinner-dance.

Johnny Bachman was ace golfer of the tournament, for which 30 prizes were awarded. Winners from New York included Jules Levy, Ed McEvoy, Mitchell May, S. Charles Einfeld, Harvey Day and H. M. Warner.

Speakers at the dinner in the evening were Walter Vincent, Sam Saxe, Mr. Levy, Joseph Bernhard, Mr. McEvoy, Mr. Day and Mr. Warner. Louis Nizer was toastmaster.

NRA WRITES OWN ASSESSMENT PLAN

New Rates Scheduled To Be Effective October 30; Dropping Leasing Clause Voted

The NRA at Washington this week approved a new schedule of code assessments for the two main branches of the industry, producers-distributors, and exhibitors, and announced that objections to those schedules may be filed up to October 30, when they will become effective unless substantial opposition has been expressed from within the industry.

The new schedules were arrived at after several factions in the industry had raised objection to previous rates of assessment as determined by the Code Authority. These new schedules were approved by the NRA on Wednesday, and made public after conferences between William P. Farnsworth, deputy administrator, and Harold S. Bareford, of Warner Brothers, representing the industry.

The new schedule of assessments for the producer-distributor branch follows:

On all incomes below $12,000, the assessment will be $120; between $12,000 and $25,000, $142.50; between $25,000 and $50,000, $215; between $50,000 and $100,000, $350; $100,000 to $250,000, $700; $250,000 to $500,000, $1,000; $500,000 to $750,000, $1,500; $750,000 to $1,000,000, $2,000; $1,000,000 to $2,500,000, $3,200; $2,500,000 to $5,000,000, $6,250; $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, $12,000; $10,000,000 to $15,000,000, $17,500; $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, $20,000; over $20,000,000, $23,000. These assessments are based on the gross domestic revenue for the full calendar year.

The exhibitor schedule, which is based on the last half of the calendar year and on population, is charged, within each population classification, on run and capacity of the theatre. The schedule is as follows:

In cities with a population under 10,000, and capacity under 500, the assessment is $5; capacity over 500, $8; 10,000 to 25,000, $6 and $9; 25,000 to 100,000, $9 and $12; 100,000 to 300,000, $12 and $18; 300,000 to 500,000 $15 and $21; 500,000 to 700,000, $16, $18 and $24; 700,000 to 1,000,000, $20, $21, $36 and $52; over 1,000,000, $16, $18, $24, $48 and $60.

It was announced that 8,349 exhibitors are covered by the schedule, which, it is estimated, will bring in a revenue of $88,004.

Leasing Clause Removal Asked

The Code Authority this week voted to remove from the code Article V-E, Part 6, or the leasing clause. The resolution was sent to Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt for approval, following which the code will be amended in accordance with its terms.

Major distributors for some time have maintained that decision on leases by the Code Authority could not be enforced by the NRA because the clause had not sufficient scope.

Independents, however, are of the opinion the clause was put into the code to protect the small exhibitor from "having his theatre taken away during the last few months of a lease." They plan to carry their case to Washington at a public hearing to be set by Mr. Rosenblatt.

Theatres not in competitive zones cannot have protection over one another, the Code Authority ruled last week, after considerable discussion. Some members held that theatres in zone "A," for example, could have clearance over theatres in zone "B" provided the proximity warranted it. This was vetoed, however, and the original plan remains.

The Chicago clearance and zoning schedule was turned back to the local board last week on the ground that it violated every known principle for setting up schedules.

Other Code Authority actions were:

Reversal of decision of the Boston grievance board dismissing an overbuying complaint brought by the Coolidge Corner Theatre, Brookline, Mass., against the Capitol and Allston theatres, Allston, ordering the Coolidge Corner in a zone separate from the Capitol, Allston and Egyptian.

Affirmation of Kansas City grievance board decisions ordering discontinuance of "bank nights" by the Colonial, Southtown, Roanoke and Westport theatres, on complaint of the Lindbert theatre.

Affirmation of an Atlanta grievance board ruling in dismissing an overbuying complaint filed by the American, Park, Ritz, Rivoli, Bijou, Benito and Cameo theatres against the Rivoli, State and Rialto theatres, all of Chattanooga.

The Code Authority reported a cash balance of $14,371 as of September 29 and receipts of $68,000 from producers and distributors and $82,419 from exhibitors.

The agency hearing was postponed at Washington until October 31. Edwin J. Loeb, Hollywood producers' representative, was in New York conferring with executives.

NRA announced that foreign films must follow American NRA film regulations.

Variety Club Has A Rousing Affair

In the atmosphere of a circus, with sawdust, sideshows, and all the rest the sixth annual Variety Club banquet was held last week at the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh, with more than 900 in attendance. The banquet honored Harry Goldstein, Paramount Cleveland district manager, and Harry M. Kalmine, Pittsburgh Warner Theatre zone manager, outgoing Chief Barkers. The incoming Chief Barker, Mike Cullen, was also among those honored.

More than 40 well known stage, screen and radio stars appeared on the entertainment program, with six bands supplying dance music, but fortunately not all at one time. John H. Harris, national Chief Barker, was general chairman of the banquet committee. Rosey Rowswell acted as master of ceremonies and Johnny Perkins served as ringmaster for the lengthy show.

Among the speakers were Joe E. Brown, Louis Nizer, John B. Kennedy, Bert Wheeler, Roy Atwill, Jock Sutherland, Regis Toomey, "Rip" Collins of the St. Louis Cardinals, Sol A. Rosenblatt.

In conjunction with the affair the Quigley Award for September was presented to James M. Totman, manager of the Warner theatre, Erie, Pa., by Joe E. Brown, Warner star. Details of the presentation appear in the Managers' Round Table department.

Quittner Settles; Other Actions Up

Charges that delay in handling claims filed against Paramount Publix were obstructing company reorganization brought assertion last week from Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, attorneys for the trustees, that reorganization "at the earliest practicable date" would be to the best interests of all stockholders and creditors.

The charge of delays was made by Saul E. Rogers, attorney for a minority Paramount bondholders' group, and was embodied in a letter to the trustees requesting information as to the current status of creditors' claims.

The trustees, through their counsel, denied the charge, and declared that "notwithstanding the favorable operations of the company under the trusteeship the earliest possible reorganization is advisable and for that reason the trustees have treated the subject of claims as one of first importance."

Status of $297,000,000 Claims

Accompanying the letter to Mr. Rogers was a summary of the current status of the $297,000,000 of claims filed against Paramount in the bankruptcy and reorganization proceedings, the period for filing which expired September 15. Since then the claim of $178,000,000 of Paramount Broadway bondholders has been reduced to $44,000,000, and with eliminations of duplicate claims the total claims against the corporation have been further reduced to $154,000,000. Of this latter amount, the trustees' reply to Mr. Rogers said, only slightly more than $50,000,000 is regarded as being provable and filed in proper amount. More than $4,000,000 of claims in this category are those of Paramount subsidiaries filed against the parent company, and they with others of a similar type can be made part of a plan of reorganization.

The trustees' report stated that less than $3,000,000 of claims remain to be investigated by them and that $1,500,000 of this amount represents the claim of Stanley Company, which the report believed to be "without merit." In addition, more than $50,000,000 of claims are being negotiated under settlement plans that will greatly reduce their amount, it was said.

Quittner Case Settled

Paramount now is negotiating settlements of all anti-trust litigation pending against the company, the trustees' report revealed. Included among such negotiations are the action of A. B. Momand of Oklahoma for $4,960,000, and E. M. Loew, Boston, for $5,099,000.

The Joseph Quittner action for triple damages of $5,100,000, which has been drawn out over a period of many years, was settled Friday for $10,000, and contracts were exchanged the following day. The plaintiff, Joseph Quittner, does not consider the settlement satisfactory, it is reported, but approved the terms in order to end the litigation. His father, the late Edward Quittner, was the original plaintiff.

An examination of present and former executives and department heads of Paramount concerning the conduct of the company's business prior to bankruptcy, the causes of its financial difficulties and its dealings with creditors was begun in New York Tuesday before John E. Joyce, sitting as special commissioner for the federal district court. Those listed for examination are Ralph A. Kohn, Jesse L. Lasky, Sam Dembow, Jr., Neil F. Agnew, William S. Paley, George W. Trendle, John H. Kunsky, Elek J. Ludvigh, A. John Michel, Norman Collyer, Edward A. Brown, Joseph E. McDermott, Fred E. Mohrhardt, Marion Coles, Charles E. Hawthorne, Henry Anderson and Fred L. Metzler.

THOMAS B. COSTAIN

Costain in Fox Literary Bureau

Thomas B. Costain has been appointed head of Fox Film's new bureau of literary material, which will have its headquarters in the RCA Building, New York. The new bureau is now being organized by Mr. Costain, who was for seven years chief associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post, working directly with George Horace Lorimer, editor.

Mr. Costain, in his Fox post, will work closely with writers of fiction and drama, and with Winfield Sheehan, vice-president in charge of Fox production on the Coast. The present story department will form a nucleus for the organization. Associate offices will be established in London, Paris and Budapest.

Mr. Costain, born in Canada, worked on newspapers there before becoming connected with the MacLean Publishing Company, finally as editor of MacLean's Magazine. From that post he went to the Curtis Publishing Company, remaining a member of the Post editorial board for 14 years. He has recently handled author contact work for the Ladies' Home Journal.

Distributors Ban Spot Bookings in New York Deal

New York distributors this week ordered cessation of spot bookings for theatres involved in the Skouras-Seider-Schwartz buying pool on Long Island. General sales managers of all major companies, after two weeks of discussion on the pool, decided that unless the individual circuits sign contracts for product, they cannot spot book.

New York exchange managers met last week to discuss with Louis Nizer, Film Board of Trade secretary, the three-cornered pooling arrangements on Long Island. Sales managers of major companies had met at the MPPDA offices earlier to consider the same plan, it was reported. It was indicated that Springer & Cocalis might enter the pool, extending the plan to Brooklyn.

Fox Metropolitan Bid Is Rejected

The new bid of $4,500,000 made last week by Hayden, Stone & Co., New York banking house, for the assets of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses was rejected Tuesday by the circuit's bondholders' committee due to dissatisfaction with terms.

That the offer was to be an investment move and contemplated continued operation of the circuit by Skouras and Randforce was considered likely, in that the bondholders' committee had submitted the bid to Skouras and Randforce with a proposal that the two operators consent to the drafting of new short-term operating contracts carrying provisions for cancellation in the event the Hayden, Stone negotiations were not consummated within 60 days after circuit reorganization.

The committee believes the long-term operating contracts held by Skouras and Randforce have consistently discouraged other theatre operators from bidding.

It is believed the financial house's offer contemplated a foreclosure on Fox Metropolitan assets and a reorganization of the circuit by the bondholders' committee, rather than a purchase of the bonds by Hayden, Stone and reorganization under their direction. Subsequent to foreclosure and reorganization by the committee, Hayden, Stone would acquire Fox Metropolitan through an outright sale.

When the Loew-Warner joint bid for the circuit's assets was withdrawn late last summer the Fox Metropolitan bonds fell off from $46 to $30; after last week's developments they went up to $36.50 for the Saturday close.

An application for interim allowances aggregating $285,000 for services rendered during the Fox Metropolitan receivership was allowed in the amount of $40,000 by Judge Julian W. Mack in U. S. district court, New York, on Monday.

Irving Trust Co., as receiver, had applied for fees totaling $75,000; Walter Littlefield, receiver's counsel, $70,000; Beekman, Bogue & Clark, counsel for the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee, $80,000, and $60,000 for the Hanover Bank & Trust Co., trustee under the Fox Metropolitan indenture.

Following objections by independent Fox Metropolitan bondholders, Judge Mack disallowed the Beekman, Bogue & Clark and Central Hanover Bank petitions, and reduced the Irving Trust allowance to $25,000 and the Littlefield allowance to $15,000. The fees cover a 10-month period preceding the circuit's petition for reorganization last August.

Bruce Returns to New York

Robert C. Bruce arrived in New York this week with "Irish Melody," "Italian Caprice," "Mediterranean Songs" and "Barcarole," the new three-color Technicolor "Musical Moods" which he made in Europe for Audio Productions. These films will be part of the series of 18 subjects which are now being released by First Division Exchanges.

Marx Bros. Sign with MGM

The Marx brothers—now only three in number since Zeppo went into the agency business—this week signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer calling for one picture, with an option for more.

Jack Cohn Sails

Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, sailed for Europe aboard the Aquitania Friday.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Cable dispatches from Peiping tell us that Metro's production unit, on location shooting atmosphere in China for Pearl Buck's "Good Earth," is daily experiencing the inconvenient and expensive reactions of horror that the Chinese authorities have for the sad economic realities in their country. Typical of how these realities are thrown on the ash-heap of ignored truths is the treatment by the Chinese of one of the large crowd scenes. China's people are the most poverty-stricken in the world. Only the few well-fed also are well shod. Most of China's 475,000,000 inhabitants, both young and old, go barefoot, many in rags. Yet, when the Metro cameraman from Hollywood wanted to film some huge crowds in Peiping the authorities, with that city pride of some of our own Chambers of Commerce, demanded that MGM buy shoes and new, clean clothes for everyone so that they would look well dressed.

Another striking example was given in the treatment of the book's scene in which bandits attack the town in which Wang Lung is working as a ricksha coolie, enabling his wife to steal the jewels which set them on the high road to land and wealth.

Under the tutelage of Chinese mentors this scene has been transformed into a triumphant entry by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's army into the city to free the people of their many chains. But, then, maybe they were not trying to hide the stark realities in this instance. Someone may have remembered an earlier American motion picture in which the United States Marines arrived just in the nick of time to effect the rescue.

Cats by the hundred swooped down on Carl Laemmle's motion picture plant at Universal City the other morning for a fish feast. Some $600 worth of denizens from the briny deep—five tons of 'em—had been hurled and tossed around on a "Night Life of the Gods" set a la Mack Sennett pie fashion by some 300 extras for a scene.

There were salmon and barracuda, sword fish and mackerel, bass and tuna, halibut and whatnot. When the sun finally hit them habitation became pretty difficult around the studio.

Hollywood's newly acquired zest for the old-fashioned "treasure hunt," in which the players are assigned to bring back certain designated articles from different places, is proving to be a first-class thorn in the sides of the movie colony's best known picture folk. The nervy "hunters" balk at nothing. One gang of strangers stormed Joan Crawford's place the other two a. m. demanding her "left garter." Young Joan compromised. She gave them a handkerchief with her initials embroidered on it.

Gertrude Merriam, assistant to A-Mike Vogel in the "Managers' Round Table" department of this publication, has a bright young son of 14 years who is already evidencing quite some interest in things cinematic.

"Say, mom, what ever happened to Mae West's 'It Ain't No Sin?'" asked Jimmy at dinner the other evening.

.."They changed it to 'Belle of the Nineties,'" she replied.

"Why?" queried the young lad, "because it is grammatically incorrect to say 'ain't?'"

PAGING SI SEADLER

Ted Schlosser writes us about the guessing contest that he staged during the week at his Vernon theatre at Mount Vernon in Kentucky. It was part of the exploitation for Metro's "Treasure Island." In the lobby stood a table holding a large sealed bottle full of pennies. Part of the copy on the card mentioned that "Free Tickets for Treasure Island" were among the awards.

Strolling leisurely through the lobby last Sunday afternoon, Ted approached a patron who appeared to be puzzled. "May I help you?" he inquired solicitously.

"Yes, thank you," replied the customer. "Tell me, please, where the h—— is this Treasure Island place, and if I win a prize what railroad will I take to get there?"

The Quaker City organization of exhibitors known as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, and the comparatively new offshoot known as the Independent Exhibitors of Pennsylvania are at the moment engaged in a public exchange of most vitriolic correspondence, which is beginning to assume the proportions of an exhibitor organization battle of the kind we knew in the merry ol' days of Sydney Cohen and of "Fightin' Al" Steffes, who, by the way, has retired to the comparative quiet of exhibiting motion pictures in his native Minneapolis.

Charges and counter charges are being hurled, varying from claims of misconduct in office of those in charge to wholesale misrepresentations of the exhibitor's problems. The fight has been getting hotter by the hour. On the weekend it reached really serious proportions when David Barrist, president of the IEPA, sent to Charles Segall, president of the MPTO, a "private" letter—multigraphed for the press—in which, among other things, Mr. Barrist warned Mr. Segall that "people who live in glass houses should throw only rubber balls."

Irving Hoffman tells the story on Papa Marx, the late daddy of Arthur, Julius, Leonard and Herbert (Harpo, Groucho, Chico, Zeppo) of the time, not long ago, when the elder Marx had been listening for hours to Gregory Ratoff and his pronounced accent at a party.

Finally he was able to corner Gregory alone and said:

"Mister Ratoff, I'd like to ask you a question, please."

"Go right ahad, my frand," encouraged Ratoff.

"You don't come from this country, eh?"

"No, I'm a foreigner."

"I see. Are you German?"

"No."

"Are you French?"

Another "No."

"Are you Austrian?"

"No."

"Then what nationality are you?"

"I'm Russian."

"Russian, heh?" said Marx, "that's what I thought!"

Thirteen years ago at this time there was a conference at a lawyer's office in the narrow street of Wall in New York's financial sector. Participating were the biggest guns of moviedom, who, near the close, named the late Lewis J. Selznick and Saul Rogers as ambassadors extraordinaire to the Capital on behalf of the motion picture industry and on an important mission. Arriving one chilly morning at Washington's Union Station the two proceeded directly to a suite in the Wardman Park hotel where they met for the first time the late Warren G. Harding's most efficient postmaster-general in the person of Will H. Hays. Mr. Hays had been injured in a train wreck and was recovering under treatment.

Mr. Selznick and Mr. Rogers, who is now practicing motion picture law on his own, bore with them a roundrobin inviting the "General" to the leadership of the industry. There were some touching phrases in that document. ". . . and are striving to have the industry accorded the consideration and dignity to which it is justly entitled, and proper representation before the people of this country. . . ." "We feel that our industry requires further careful upbuilding and a constructive policy of progress. . . ." One important passage read: "The compensation we are prepared to pay is one hundred thousand dollars a year under a commitment satisfactory to you, for a period of three years."

Signed on the document were the names of Adolph Zukor of Famous Players, William Fox, Samuel Goldwyn, W. E. Atkinson of Metro, Morris Kohn of Realart, Rufus S. Cole of Robertson-Cole, Lewis J. Selznick, P. L. Waters of Triangle, Carl Laemmle and Hiram Abrams of United Artists Corporation. There have been some changes since then.

Returning to that conference in Wall Street in 1921 we overhear the name of Herbert Hoover offered as a candidate. Had not the majority held out for Hays we probably never would have heard that now famous classic: "Two chickens in every pot, a car in every garage."

Paramount Publix Corporation has sent forth a notice to the press that Walter Wanger, their producer, has signed Peggy Conklin to a long-term contract which agreement contains nothing alluding to "morality, marriage, airplanes, horseback riding, swimming or other events deemed risky by producers." The italics are ours, but the statement is Walter's that, "When a woman has brains enough to gain stardom on the stage, and to distinguish herself as one of the most promising players of today, it would be utter nonsense to suppose that she could be silly enough to risk her reputation and her future in some ill-advised prank, risk or action."

Hamrick Opens Theatre

John Hamrick opened his new Orpheum theatre in Portland, Ore., last week, with Mascot's "Young and Beautiful" as the feature attraction.

Disney Loses Plea In Supreme Court

The United States supreme court last week refused to Walt Disney a writ of mandamus, sought to require Judge Harry A. Holzer, Los Angeles, to vacate an order referring to a special master for hearing the infringement suit brought by RCA Photophone, Inc., against the Disney Film Recording Company, Ltd., Walter Disney Productions, Ltd., and Walter Disney, charging the use of machines infringing on Photophone patents.

Mr. Disney had opposed having the case heard before a special master, so assigned because of an overcrowded calendar, on the ground that it imposed an unusual burden of expense upon him and would result in his companies being fined as well as being assessed damages if they should lose.

Mr. Disney, in his appeal, declared judges in Los Angeles are "discriminating against patent litigants." RCA Photophone had asked for the special master procedure.

Disney Gets Injunction Against Biscuit Companies

Judge John P. Barnes of the United States district court for the northern district of Illinois, has issued a restraining order against United Biscuit Company of America, Sawyer Biscuit Co. and Chicago Carton Company, in a suit filed by Walter Disney, the creator of "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphony" cartoons, released through United Artists.

Disney brought suit to restrain the defendants from infringing certain copyrights and trade-marks and unfair competition.

Double Bill Truce Built on Thin Ice

Exhibitor delegates who came to New York more than three weeks ago from Los Angeles to discuss the double featuring situation with the Code Authority returned this week to their own territory apparently determined to continue their fight against theatres indulging in the practice, despite the fact they had agreed to a truce with the Code Authority.

The delegates, headed by Ben Berinstein, agreed to the Code Authority's decision to eliminate a clearance penalty on duals from the schedule, but only, they said upon their arrival on the Coast Sunday, in order to get a definite schedule working for California. After that, they indicated, an appeal will be made to provide penalties.

In Cleveland, too, the double bill situation continued to occupy the spotlight. An application to intervene in the case of Center Woodland Amusement Co. against the Family theatre, in which Common Pleas Judge Alva Corlott last week granted a permanent injunction restraining the Family from double featuring, was filed by Lawrence Rich, attorney, representing Morris Israel of the Erie. A date for the re-hearing was set at October 20.

In Flint, Mich., double featuring will be abolished after November 1.

ADMISSION TWO BOTTLES

And "Empties" at That, Says Dave Gould, Home from Puerto Rico; Nickel Is Average Price

The spectacle of an overseated motion picture territory in which the average admission price is five cents, a situation in which admission to a film theatre can be had for two empty liquor bottles, and where on gala nights a man and his wife are admitted for three cents, was described this week by Dave Gould, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's chief of operations in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Dominican Republic and the Dutch West Indies. Mr. Gould is in New York from his headquarters in San Juan.

Mr. Gould looked out of his office in the Times Square belt and sighed enviously as his gaze met sign after sign advertising admissions of from 40 to 65 cents. There are five theatres in San Juan which have a top weekend admission price of 50 cents, but this usually is considerably modified on weekdays.

"San Juan, which is the largest city on the island, is overseated with 19 theatres," Mr. Gould said. "The Paramount, Fox, Capitol, Rialto and Marti are the largest houses. The Paramount has a seating capacity of 1,400 and the Fox 500."

The remaining 14 theatres in San Juan, he said, scale their admissions from 25 cents down to 5 and most of them operate on a daily change basis. The five "first runs" change their programs three times a week.

Empty Liquor Bottles as Tickets

The MGM executive told of the policy of a theatre in an unnamed town on the island where a person can gain admission by presenting two empty liquor, beer or pop bottles at the box office—Coca Cola bottles alone are not accepted. It's a seeing commercial eye at that, for the resale value of the bottles is 2½ cents each.

"At Cayey, a very small town, the local theatre played 'The Private Life of Henry VIII' for a two-cent admission price," Mr. Gould said, "and the same theatre undoubtedly plays my product for the same price. The small admission price is a regularly accepted thing in the island, despite the fact that labor throughout the territory is now extremely well paid."

On Thursday nights at the Cayey house two persons may go to the theatre for three cents.

Mr. Gould revealed that the American industry releases 400 features annually in Puerto Rico, despite the fact there are only 119 theatres on the island, only about 86 operating at all regularly and the great majority of these 86 open one to three nights weekly, with daily program changes, except in the large towns like San Juan and Ponce.

Operates Own Film Board

Puerto Rico operates its own Film Board of Trade, which functions in exactly the same manner as a Film Board in any key locality in the United States. This Board is now working on an NRA code of fair competition for the Puerto Rican industry, "with peculiarly different problems in the matter of codifying the industry down there."

The Puerto Rican film board is made up of Carlos Zeno, Fox Films, president; J. P. Donohue, Paramount, vice-president and treasurer; Victor M. Solten, Universal, secretary; Frank Planas, Warner; Lester P. Sussman, United Artists; Remirez Torres, Medal Film Exchange, and Mr. Gould. Medal handles RKO Radio and Columbia product. There is also the Marti Film Exchange which handles independent American product, including a large number of action pictures, serials and westerns.

American-made films are by far the most popular with Puerto Ricans, Mr. Gould said. When sound first came into practical existence, there was a considerable threat of competition from Spanish pictures. American talkers, however, rapidly developed a number of favorites with the island people and today the threat of Spanish language films is considered negligible. Although a large portion of the populace speaks English, Mr. Gould said, all films carry superimposed Spanish titles.

That Tax Bogey

An especially sore point among American distributors is the fact that, although Puerto Rico is an American possession, the island bureau of internal revenue takes a tax of ¾ of a cent per foot on every film entering the island, whether it is played or not, and the theatre man pays one per cent of his gross to the island government, in addition to regular federal income taxes.

Asked how, with such low admissions, theatres and distributors in Puerto Rico could possibly show reasonable profits, Mr. Gould again looked longingly toward Times Square and said:

"Money in itself doesn't seem to mean much down there. The theatre cannot possibly make money as we understand it, and the distributor barely makes sufficient to pay expenses and have a small margin of profit beside. But it's a beautiful place to live in."

Oklahoma Unit Joins MPTOA

The Theatre Owners of Oklahoma, in annual convention this week in Oklahoma City, voted affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, following an address by Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA. More than 200 were in attendance at the convention.

The organization of state exhibitors re-elected all officers, including: Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City, president; L. A. White, Weatherford, vice-president; R. M. Clark, Oklahoma City, secretary-treasurer; Fred Pickrel, Ponca City, Pat McGee, Oklahoma City, Edward Kadane, Frederick, and Mr. White, directors.

In Mr. Kuykendall's address, which was the highlight of the convention, he said: "We accept 100 per cent the challenge of the Legion of Decency. The proof of that acceptance is the product now being shown."

City Plans Altering Its Architecture To Conform with Theatre

WHEN an entire community changes its architecture to conform with that of its principal theatre, that is something. And that is just what is about to happen at San Jacinto, beauty spot in the shadow of the mountains of the same name in southern California, down below San Bernardino. All the business fronts are to be altered to fit in with the appearance of the theatre, if a movement now under way is carried into effect.

The Soboba theatre at San Jacinto, operated by Harry Hofman, identifies itself as "America's Most Unique Playhouse" and the theatre front, as shown in the accompanying picture, demonstrates that the unusual has been capitalized to capacity. Speaking of capacity, San Jacinto has a population of 1,300—and the theatre seats 731!

The Soboba is patterned after Hopi Indian design architecture, and the Indian motif has been applied to every possible feature of the structure and its appointments. The lampshades, the seats—and these are homemade, as is practically everything in the place—advertising boards, all carry some form of Indian design. The actual basic struture is steel and concrete, with continuous steel arches forming the arched dome of the auditorium.

The auditorium walls and ceiling are of Celotex in large sheets, which gives the general effect of a blockhouse. There are no wall decorations other than the lighting fixtures.

Cactus and Flowers

The same effect is achieved for the outside of the building, where cactus and flowers have been planted in pottery at advantageous spots. The outside roof of the arch is painted with a high-grade aluminum paint which, Mr. Hofman points out, has proved excellent as a heat-resistor.

There is a "cry room" for the babies, equipped with a speaker and its own ventilating system. The management provides ear phones, also homemade, for patrons with impaired hearing. There is a wide screen used on occasion. The theatre's cooling system consists of water-cooled ventilation. This Mr. Hofman calls very satisfactory "despite the fact that the climate here gets a trifle warm."

The stage is adequate for the average production; all the high school and other home talent plays are presented at the Soboba.

Crystal Microphone

Another development, which Mr. Hofman says may or may not be an innovation, is a crystal microphone hanging in his office. It was built by his projectionist, Bruce H. Denney. Several evenings a week Mr. Hofman broadcasts, over the theatre's regular sound system and through an outside speaker, telling of local events and of his coming pictures. He notes that the Soboba was using its "mike" fully a month before KMTR radio station in Los Angeles began with its silver microphone, which has been widely advertised as the first on the Coast.

The Soboba Theatre, City's Architectural Model

Of the Soboba's newspaper advertising Mr. Hofman writes: "I carry at least a two by ten in the local paper and in the Hemet newspaper, and a four-inch ad in Perris (another nearby town). I get darned good publicity in all the papers—and the rates are reasonable."

For outdoor advertising are used one 24-sheet, 25 three-sheet boards scattered over a 20-mile area, and 15 one-sheet stands on the Sunday showings. Poster work is done by Ted Grohs, "a very talented young artist."

Dance Classes on Stage

A dance studio, with classes on the stage, conducted by a young woman with excellent training, has proved quite popular and a good exploitation medium.

There is a staff of five girl ushers—all young and comely—who alternate nights. All wear Indian costumes.

"To hell with double features," Mr. Hofman forcefully asides in outlining the program policy of the theatre. "Outside of the usual cry of paying too much for films we have few complaints—even business has been fair recently. Our policy is three changes a week, with an occasional stage show stuck in."

Mr. Hofman, who writes "I couldn't get along without the HERALD; many thanks for your excellent helps," sums up the story of his theatre and its operation with this phrase: "We have a young bunch around here and have lots of fun, even if we don't make much money."

San Jacinto is rich in Indian lore. Several tribes make their homes in the nearby territory. While the actual origin of the theatre name was not given, inquiry among authorities on Indian languages reveals that the Sobans are a tribe of New Mexican Pina Indians named after their chief.

Cunningham Heads Indiana Exhibitors

Earl Cunningham, manager of the Fountain Square theatre in Indianapolis, early this week was named president of the Associated Theatre Owners at the state convention, held at the Claypool Hotel in Indianapolis. Other officers elected were: Maurice Rubent, Michigan City, vice-president; Harry Markun, Indianapolis, treasurer; Helen B. Keller, Indianapolis, secretary, and Charles R. Metzger, counsel.

The following directors were elected: A. E. Bennett and Leonard Sowar, Muncie; Roy Harrold, Rushville; Alex Manta, Indiana Harbor; V. U. Young, Gary; Walter Easley, Greensburg; Ross Earber, Terre Haute; Oscar Fine, Evansville; James Fushaneas, South Bend; Robert Scherer, Linton; Frank Carey, Lebanon; Robert Hudson, Richmond; H. P. Vonderschmitt, Bloomington; R. R. Bair, A. C. Varing and John Servaas, Indianapolis.

The association pledged support to the Legion of Decency, and the music license tax and the National Housing Act were discussed. Mr. Metzger presided at the meeting.

Milwaukee Projectionists' Wages Up 10 to 14 Per Cent

After many weeks of argument, Milwaukee exhibitors and the Motion Picture Projectionists' Union, Local 164, of that city, this week agreed to a new wage scale retroactive to September 1, when the old agreement expired. The new agreement provides for wage increases ranging from 10 to 14 per cent, with weekly booth costs varying from $57.75 to $341.88.

Gaumont to Spend $300,000 Per Film

Gaumont-British, moving actively forward in its planned invasion of the American market, will expend an average of $300,000 on each of the 26 features planned for the current season, last week in New York declared Mark Ostrer, chairman of the board. "The Iron Duke," starring George Arliss, cost $750,000, he said.

Mr. Ostrer, who leaves for England this week, will return after the first of the year. He said his company is not interested in acquisition of the Roxy theatre in New York and does not want to operate its own theatres in this country. The majority control of Gaumont-British rests with Isidore and Mark Ostrer, the latter said. Their stock interest totals 51 per cent of the company, and not 49 per cent, as has been frequently reported. The additional two per cent was acquired by them two years ago from Lord Lee of Fareham, he said. He denied reports that John Maxwell of British International Pictures is dealing with Fox looking to purchase of the Fox 49 per cent stock interest in Gaumont-British. The annual general meeting of the company will be held October 29, when a final dividend of four per cent, less tax, on the ordinary shares, will be recommended, making a seven per cent dividend for the year.

The company here has renewed its contract with A. P. Waxman, whereby he continues in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation. George W. Weeks, in charge of sales, has named W. G. Carmichael to the sales staff in Atlanta, J. S. Carsacallen to Charlotte, Harlan Starr to Detroit, Rudolph Knoepfle to the Cincinnati territory.

The company gave a luncheon this week at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel for Nova Pilbeam, child star, whose first picture, "Little Friend," was screened at the luncheon.

Antonio Grossardi, Italian consul general in New York, on Wednesday presented the Mussolini cup awarded the picture, "Man of Aran," to Mr. Ostrer and Robert Flaherty, director. The presentation at the Ritz-Carlton hotel was followed by a preview for the Architects' Emergency Committee.

In attendance at the Waldorf Astoria were: Mark Ostrer, toastmaster; Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager of G-B; Michael Balcon, in charge of production; Arthur A. Lee, vice-president; Sam Smith, and A. P. Waxman, advertising counsel. At the dais were Walter Huston and his wife, Berthold Viertel, director of the picture, which was screened; Mrs. Arnold Pilbeam, Jack Hulbert, a G-B star; Robert Flaherty; Howard S. Cullman of the Roxy; Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times; Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager of Hearst Metrotone News, Jack Alicoate, Film Daily, Martin Quigley, of Quigley Publishing Company; Terry Ramsaye, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and Red Kann, Motion Picture Daily.

Catherine McNeilis Honored at AMPA

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Thursday, at the regular weekly luncheon at the New York Motion Picture Club, paid tribute to Catherine McNeilis, publisher of New Movie, in a "Tower Day" first anniversary celebration. Louis Nizer was toastmaster and guests of honor included Eddie Cantor, Ernst Lubitsch, Claire Trevor and Ginger Rogers. The toastmistress was Elsie Janis.

ALL BRITISH STUDIOS "GOING AMERICAN"

Moral of "Henry VIII" Film Success Found Sinking In at Last; Invasion Killing Plot Fable

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

When Herbert Wilcox said, on his return from New York, that he never was going to make another "English" picture, he anticipated the policy now in open favor with every producing concern in this country worthy of being taken seriously.

It has taken some time for the moral of "The Private Life of Henry VIII" to sink in. The Gaumont invasion of America, and the news cabled back of the reception of its pictures there, has probably been an even more important factor in killing that dear old fable, an article of faith with some of our very worst producers, that America was "conspiring" to keep out British films.

At any rate, it has happened. All the studios are going American in the sense that they are grabbing all the American brains they can lay their hands on with the definite belief that America will buy the films if they are good enough.

It is, of course, a result of the lead of the few clever ones. John Barrymore and Lubitsch signed up in one week. Buster Keaton, Adrienne Ames, Nils Asther, and half a dozen more are actually here and working or getting ready to work. It all means one thing: England wants the American market and at last has realized the right way to earn it. Even the die-hards see it now.

Toeplitz Plans Extensive

The Lubitsch deal looks a very big one. Toeplitz thinks that way and, with the Banca Commerciale Italiana in the family and the Midland Bank of London represented on his directorate, he can afford to. He is spending a fortune to begin with on "The Dictator," on which Clive Brook already has done some scenes.

After "The Dictator" comes a picture to be directed by Kurt Bernhardt, maker of that wonderful Conrad Veidt picture, "The Last Company," which unfortunately was dubbed as an English version. After Bernhardt comes Lubitsch.

It reads like a crescendo which may leave Toeplitz well up in the Zanuck class in less than two years.

Korda and Shakespeare

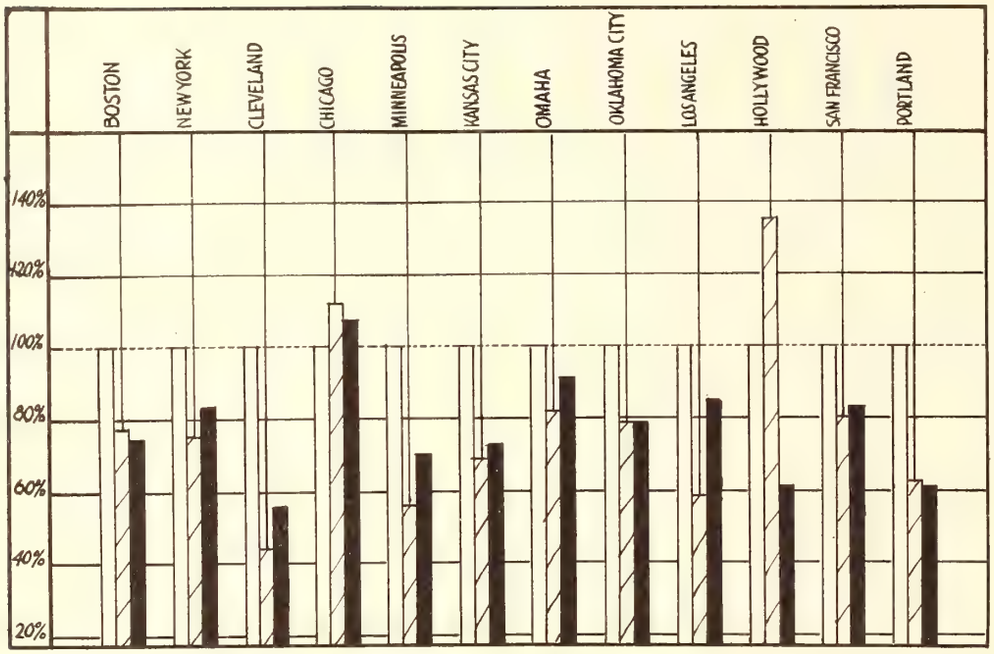
And always there is Korda. He invited us to take cocktails with John Barrymore, and most persons thought, and printed, that John was earmarked for the H. G. Wells film, "The Shape of Things to Come" (though it will not be finally called that). At the bar, Barrymore denied it and Korda denied it and George Grossmith told us privately that the Barrymore film was going to be Shakespeare.

This the principals presently shyly admitted, but wouldn't say which of two plays they finally would select or what those two were, anyway. With "Hamlet" regarded as an odds-on chance, you can have your own guess whether the other is "Richard III" or whether the two are hiding quite a different plan, which might be the Private Life of the man Shakespeare or might not.

What Korda would do with his Strachey complex in a "straight" Shakespeare screening takes some thinking over.

More cocktails during the week to hear Joe Rock and Ralph Ceder say what they hoped to do with Leslie Fuller, kingpin in the British provinces, but not so far, and for some reason, regarded as "West End" or American. Leslie Fuller Productions, formed with Joe Rock as producer and Ralph Ceder as director, plenty of money, and a five years' distribution contract with Gaumont British under which Leslie Fuller himself expects to get £20,000 ($100,000) per annum.

I think they can make Fuller a good American bet. He is a first-class droll, hardly needing dialogue to get over his stuff, but has been kept in the program class because his pictures could be depended upon to make money without too much being spent on them. Now they are going to spend it.



Historical Films Increasing: Hays

Historical and biographical films will comprise seven per cent of the current season's production output, as compared with one per cent last year, with "a very large increase in the number of films to be made from the great classics of literature and the stage and from books that have won a place in the hearts of millions of readers," Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, told a regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors at the New York office last week.

Making no direct reference to the recent church campaign against "off-color" pictures, Mr. Hays said: "In this healthy period of discussion of the screen we have proposed to say it with pictures. That policy commends itself through results to date. We have done much more than substantially strengthen safeguards for Production Code observance."

In a survey of 279 features planned for the new season, exclusive of westerns and films not titled, Mr. Hays noted, in addition to the increases in historical material and filmed classics, 34 musical shows, with such names as Victor Herbert and Franz Lehar in the list. Of the total 22 are "straight" comedies, 24 detective and mystery films, 16 adventure and six aviation pictures, he reported.

"We will continue to welcome all criticism and to safeguard Code observance, properly treating strong dramatic themes and remembering that entertainment is in itself a vital, necessary purpose," he said.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of twelve key cities during September, 1934, with the receipts from each of the same cities during th preceding two years. The white bars are for 1932; the shaded, for 1933; and the black, for 1934. In each city the 1932 figure is taken as 100%.

New Color Process For Commercials

A new process known as "Natural Color," utilizing ordinary black and white film stock and relying for its color reproduction upon three primal color filters reposing within a projector lens, made its appearance in the commercial market this week. E. S. Brockway Co., Inc., producers and distributors of the process, announced the color would be used exclusively for industrial and commercial sales promotion. The film used, President Brockway said, requires no special processes. The pictures can be photographed by any standard camera and projected on any standard projector. For the time being the company will produce on 16 mm. film only, although it was declared that satisfactory experiments have been conducted already by the company utilizing the 33 mm. film.

The entire process, it was explained, is in the lens and the method of photography. When a subject is being photographed under the "Natural Color" process, three separate shots are taken. When the films have been developed the three separate shots are superimposed in each film frame. Three primal color filters in the projector lens are aligned with the three pictures. In the front of the lens are three prisms aligned with the filters and the three pictures. These prisms "mix" the separate pictures and superimpose them as one picture on the ordinary screen.

The filters are made of gelatin and are encased in glass, Mr. Brockway said. The lens to be used for the 16 mm. projector is four inches in length and has a diameter of two inches.

"This color does not jump around," said Mr. Brockway. "There is no fringing or bleeding of any sort. Added to this, it is one of the few color processes which can be used on 16 mm. film without prohibitive cost."

The inventor is Merrill Waide, who at the time of his invention was president of Natural Color, Inc. By arrangement with the inventor, E. S. Brockway Co., Inc., vote the inventor's stock in Natural Color through an irrevocable 10-year proxy which gives them virtual control of the company's color process, acting as both producer and distributor. Directors include John W. Noble, John P. Booth, Alfred Jeuttner and Mr. Brockway.

John W. Noble is in charge of all actual production. He has been an actor and director since the early days of the motion picture, having acted and directed for Thanhouser, Biograph, Universal, Metro, Goldwyn, Educational, Selznick, Lyceum Film Bureau and others.

E. S. Brockway Co., Inc., maintains headquarters at 551 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

"INDUSTRY'S RESPONSE AIDS THEATRE RECEIPTS"

The editorial pages of the William Randolph Hearst newspapers Saturday said that motion picture theatre attendance during the first three months of the industry's response to the church campaign had increased approximately 20 per cent.

"Conditions in general have improved," commented the Hearst editors. "New moviegoers have been recruited from those persons who stayed away from films which offended them. Old moviegoers who had been alienated by the wave of morally reprehensible pictures have been coming back."

90 Per Cent of New Films Indorsed by Catholic Alumnae

Motion pictures have improved so much in character since midsummer that 90 per cent of those reviewed have been indorsed, the 500 delegates in New York for the eleventh biennial convention of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae were told by Mrs. Mary Harden Looram, chairman of the Federation's reviewing group. Since July 15 the reviewers had seen 160 pictures and had approved nine out of ten. Mrs. Looram explained that indorsed lists now appear in more than 300 Catholic and secular newspapers and in 150 magazines.

Hays Cites Improvement

Earlier the convention had heard read a letter from Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in which he said that the effort of the industry to improve pictures was meeting with "encouraging public response."

"You have been perhaps the most severe of all the groups in your appraisal of pictures," Mr. Hays wrote the Federation, "but always your criticism has been specific, and you have brought the weight of your opinion directly to the makers of pictures."

A telegram was received also from Joseph I. Breen, head of the Production Code Administration, who also praised the work of the Federation "in the cause of a finer, a more wholesome screen."

Church Boosts Film Gross

A 300 per cent increase in box office receipts resulted last week in New Orleans from what probably represented the first wholesale effort expended by the churches throughout an entire city on behalf of a motion picture showing after the exhibitor had charged the churches with having neglected to support him.

Some 450 of the clergy and religious leaders of New Orleans had locally indorsed the picture "Through the Centuries," distributed independently and purported to be "the history of the Catholic Church," but when it finally opened at the first-run St. Charles theatre, operated by A. Miles Pratt and Henry S. McLeod, grosses for Friday, Saturday and Sunday struck a low for 100 weeks at $560. Mr. McLeod and Leo Seicshnaydre, of the Bromberg exchange, appealed directly to the Reverend Father Greeley, dean of Loyola University, charging that the local Legion of Decency, which had been unusually militant during the church campaign, had missed its obligation to support the showing.

As a result parochial school teachers and the pastors were told to urge attendance. Business spurted to a gross of $2,207 for the last three days of the week. New Orleans newspapers took up the campaign and 6,000 persons stormed the doors on the final day, after 20,000 tickets had been contracted for in advance.

Arbitration Plea Upheld by Court In Exchange Suit

The legality of selling pictures before they are made and hence before they could be subject to state censorship was questioned by the losing side in a film contract suit decided last week by Justice John V. Maloney in supreme court in Buffalo.

Justice Maloney upheld a contract executed in October, 1932, between the Standard Film exchange of Buffalo and the Eastwood Amusement Co., Inc., of Syracuse, without ruling on the point raised by Sidney B. Pfeifer, counsel for Eastwood, in a brief described by fellow attorneys as brilliant.

Standard sued to force arbitration, as provided in the contract. It charged failure to play contracted pictures in the defendant's Palace theatre. In his argument before Justice Maloney on September 4 and in a subsequent brief, Mr. Pfeifer cited the censorship statute in force in 1932 and declared its terms made it unlawful to sell, lease or exhibit any picture not licensed by the censorship division of the state department of education.

Pictures not yet made obviously could not be censored, he contended, thus making the contract illegal and its terms void, since it dealt in uncensored films. Admitting that an amendment to the censorship law on April 21, 1933, removed prohibitions against making of advance contracts on films which would be censored before delivery, Mr. Pfeifer declared provisions of the amendment were not retroactive and hence contracts made prior to the amendment were invalid.

Herbert T. Silverberg, attorney for Standard, argued that the censorship laws were aimed at illegal traffic in uncensored films, not at the ordinary and legitimate transactions of the industry. If all contracts made prior to April, 1933, were to be invalidated, it would disrupt the industry and cause losses of vast sums of money, Mr. Silverberg declared. Arbitration was ordered.

'AUDIENCES, THE DEARS!'

Patrons Start With Challenge To Amuse, Then Are Afraid If It's New, Says H. G. Weinberg

Patrons who, before leaving home for the theatre steel themselves with the philosophy, "I dare you to amuse me," and then are stricken with fear when the screen shows them something that they do not understand, are the big problem of the exhibitor, as posed by Herman G. Weinberg, managing director of the Little Theatre in Baltimore.

When a picture of high standard in artistry comes out of Hollywood—Mr. Weinberg mentioned "Broken Lullaby" and "Twentieth Century"—and the public does not respond, production progress is impeded. Then may come a "flood of mediocre films that turn out, curiously enough, to be box-office hits"—and again advancement of the motion picture is checked. And the judges? "Audiences, the dears!—that contented group of smug, complacent, well-fed individuals who trek to the movies in the evening after dinner to be regaled—but not before they have placed a chip on both shoulders and metaphorically said: 'I dare you to amuse me!'"

Charming But Afraid

"I find many of these people charming in their simplicity, in their effervescent volubility," Mr. Weinberg explained. "They are even sophisticated, surprisingly so. But it is a sophistication that raises an eyebrow, that looks askance and a trifle worried about anything it does not understand. And then a peculiar thing happens; it becomes afraid.

"It is just that, the fact that the average theatre-goer or movie-goer is actually afraid (in its essential name) of anything he or she does not understand—and, being afraid, rejects or is bored by it, or shrugs it off in mirthless laughter.

"I have seen this happen time and again with certain exotic films I have shown in the Baltimore Little Theatre. I have seen it happen on the 'legitimate' stage and among audiences at 'Little Theatres' at the production of some new experimental play."

Nor is that psychological juggling confined to the Little Theatre patron, Mr. Weinberg insisted. "There never has been an audience, whether at a 'little theatre' or a 'big theatre' or concert hall, that has not on occasions met up with something it thought dull or pointless and without further ado set about condemning it to the collection of tripe that has cluttered up the world since the first dawn broke over a rather surprised earth.

Rationalized Prejudices

"It would never occur to these people to believe they were incapable of appreciating the author's intent. No, the dears brought their precious selves to the spectacles, they were not regaled, and for that the author is but fit food for the lions, a worthless fellow who is somewhat on the sunny side of lunacy. It never occurs to them that when a work of art, conceived as such by its creator, meets an individual or group of individuals assembled to pass judgment upon it, the fact that they do not like it may mean that the composition in question may be less at fault than themselves."

And there, in Mr. Weinberg's analysis, lies the chief obstacle to "educating the masses." "These pre-ordained prejudices they rationalize. Every one is a potential critic, but without background, historical perspective, there can be no such thing as criticism or appraisal, since these things are relative. If they would not criticize, if they would say, 'I don't care for this myself,' instead of saying, 'Well, of all the —— I ever saw, this takes the cake,' then the problem of educating them would be easier."

In the Little Theatre movement, he said, the handicap is greater than that of the stage, because "we have that other great and insidious influence to combat—that of the Hollywood movie, so perfect in its banality as to disarm all criticism."

Herman G. Weinberg, who comments upon the problem of audience fear of the new in motion pictures, is both a musician and a theatre manager. Born in New York in 1908, he attended the Institute of Musical Art of New York, studied violin under Svecenski, as well as harmony, theatre and counterpoint. First musical consultant of the Fifth Avenue Playhouse, he became publicity director for that and other "Little Theatres." It was in 1929 that he went to the Baltimore Little Theatre as managing director. He set musical scores to a number of silent pictures and has written for a number of magazines. Besides making two short experimental films and doing the scenario for the third, he now is working on his first novel.

A Perfect Week-End

Comedy-Melodrama

Action packed comedy melodrama is the essence of this show. Despite the rather romantic title, love interest, while important, is subordinate to other elements. Full of that smack-'em-around quality of which theatre-goers have demonstrated their approval in Cagney pictures, the show is exciting and fast moving. While not an attraction especially for the classes, the brawlish manner of its presentation is particularly for the masses.

As a bit of novelty, the quick-fisted Cagney refrains from swinging his dukes; instead he uses his head, both to think with and to butt his antagonists into oblivion. For the butting it was all right, for thinking it simply got him into the trouble that makes the picture's entertainment.

Making no essay at pretentiousness or sophistication, the yarn has Kennedy and Buck as a couple of truck drivers on the St. Louis-Chicago run. When Ann's tin lizzie rams their van, the boys talk themselves into a melee with Brown, much to that worthy's eventual discomfort. Eventually, however, they make the calaboose. Warden Messeldopp, a genial host, supplies his guests with beer. When the trial comes up, Kennedy, having heard of the milk war in which the farmers are engaged, pleads their cause and is released. The first signs of his romance with Ann become apparent. It's not long before he's up for assault and battery while trying to run the farmers' barricade. Given ten days this time, he manages to slip out at night for a romantic foray with Ann.

With Kennedy back in jail, Farmer Benson is killed. Accused of the murder because of previous threats, and learning that Ann has disappeared, he escapes and comes back to St. Louis. Using a ruse to get track of the racketeers he suspects, he rescues Ann from their hideout and from then on it's not difficult for the authorities to round up the real killers and exonerate him. The picture's finish is quick and funny. The hotel detective, disputing the legitimacy of the "Mr. and Mrs." signature, precipitates another brawl in which Ann takes a hand, and both are behind the bars for a perfect weekend honeymoon.

Where they like this comically atmosphered slam-bang brand of entertainment, "A Perfect Week-End" should give a good account of itself.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

A Man's Game

(Columbia)

Action Drama

True to type, this action-filled picture offers plenty of excitement and lively punch to satisfy the appetite of all the youngsters, and at the same time afford a short hour's entertainment for those among the adult patrons who still like action without too much regard for the depths of the concoction. As such, and to those older and especially younger patrons, the picture should be sold.

That it centers its action about the dangerous job of the big city firemen offers an opportunity for the exhibitor to sell it in cooperation with the local fire department.

Once again Tim McCoy, who has considerable following, steps out of the chaps and sombrero of the riding and scrapping motion picture west, into the fireman's uniform of the heavily tenanted east. Since it is that kind of action film, and with McCoy providing most of the excitement in his usual effective style, the picture obviously is best played in the weekend position. With McCoy are Evalyn Knapp, providing the feminine romantic interest, and Ward Bond, as McCoy's best friend.

When McCoy is arrested for speeding after racing with a stranger, Bond, his father, head of a large company, tells him he will give him no more money until he indicates his readiness to settle down. He meets Bond, and McCoy is taunted into joining Bond in his entrance into the fire department, of which Bond's father is chief. After the schooling, which should be found exciting by the youngsters, they rescue Miss Knapp, both falling in love with her, McCoy, by his superior wit, out-distancing Bond romantically.

They contrive to get her a job in McCoy's father's office, where she is made the goat of a payroll stealing by the cashier, and is kidnaped. The two firemen manage via a trail she leaves for their attention, to combine fire fighting heroics with detective work, saving the girl and seeing to the arrest of the conspirators. Bond renounces the girl to McCoy, who is ready to settle down with Miss Knapp.—Aaronson, New York.

Great Expectations

(Universal)

Romantic Drama

While there is undeniable entertainment merit to this attraction, popularizing it to a degree that it will be profitably supported by both the classes and masses is not going to be an easy task. Commercially, there is much in the picture's favor. First, it is a Charles Dickens story, an asset justifying enthusiastic publicity. In the spirit of its story it is finely acted and intelligently directed. In Henry Hull and Jane Wyatt it brings two exceptionally talented artists to the screen. The other important principals as well the supporting cast provide many familiar names. While the time of the story is about 1850 and its locales rural England and London, it deals in elements that are uniquely modern. Essentially the story is drama, both character and theatric, contrasted by unique love interest.

The story opens in a fog-shrouded graveyard. Young Pip (played by George Breakston), through childish fear and sympathy, befriends the escaped convict, Magwitch. The convict recaptured and transported to Australia, the boy's life is anything but pleasant at home as he is nagged by his aunt, Mrs. Joe.

Several years later, Pip becomes the charge of Miss Havisham. Pip and Estella (Ann Howard) are made the objects of the woman's irony, who in the children's unhappiness seeks to find revenge for a blighted romance.

A decade passes and Pip (Phillips Holmes) now the object of some strange benefactor's munificence, moves to London to become a gentleman of the times, under the sponsorship of Lawyer Jaggers. Also Estella (Jane Wyatt) comes. The love they knew in childhood is re-created for Pip, but conflict is engendered as she seems to favor Drummle. Comes Herbert, his wife now dead, to be set up in business by the boy. Then while Pip is an influencing factor in the lives of many, the escaped fugitive Magwitch again appears. At first unrecognized, Magwitch's actions conjure up a dim vision of the night long ago in the graveyard and the boy knows him. As he tells his life story it is revealed that Estella is his daughter. But Pip's task is to keep his now known benefactor out of the law's grasp. Again Magwitch and Compeyson, the cause of all his tragedy and avowed enemy, meet. There is a struggle. Compeyson is drowned and Magwitch captured. Natural death, however, cheats the gallows. Pip and Estella are reunited.

It is to be expected that the lovers of Dickens literature will want to see this picture, likewise the more intelligent patrons. The problem is creating mass interest. Exploit it with unusual means, contact libraries, schools, clubs, and seek editorial commendation.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

I Sell Anything

(Warner)

Comedy

While this is an attraction calling for tricky gag exploitation, its entertainment quality hardly justifies any too great enthusiasm. A topical yarn, given a broad comedy flair but only a modicum of love interest, it deals with the inside workings of the "auction sale" racket. It is not an exposure, because almost everybody is wise to the tricks upon which it throws the searchlight, but rather it convincingly portrays the auctioneer as anything but the smart gentleman he thinks himself.

Modern in atmosphere, heavily dialogued to the detriment of smash action, the story has its opening locale in a side street auction shop. Uncovering the tricks of the trade as the "shills" bait the suckers, Spot Cash pulls a fast one on himself when he sells a valuable bit of jewelry for a song. Discovering his error, he traces the purchaser, to find that she is an adventuress in her own right. Millicent wants him to go in for high class stuff, but he prefers to stick by his old pals and the girl he plucked off the side street.

However, Millicent does sell Spot Cash the idea of going into the phoney antique sale racket. A mansion is hired, loaded with fake furniture, art objects and so on. As Spot Cash hypnotizes the society folk, who fall all over each other in their attempts to buy his wares, business is great. Again, however, the glib tongued genius outsmarts himself. Barbara has been hiding the sale's proceeds in an antique chest. In the height of his enthusiasm, Spot Cash sells the chest. Chasing it, when he learns of the tragedy, he finds that his erstwhile co-partner, Millicent, has beaten him to the money, and as he waves her a fond goodby as she departs via boat to Europe, he returns to his old stamping ground, his shill pals, and romance with Barbara.

In title and story content, "I Sell Anything" suggests many unique exploitation thoughts. Also it's an unusual attraction for special nights such as giveaway and bargain nights. As it offers little of particular appeal to any one group, it should be presented as a regular run o' the mill program attraction.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Robert Florey. Story by Albert J. Cohen and Robert T. Shannon. Screen play by Brown Holmes and Sidney Sutherland. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Running time when seen in Hollywood, 65 minutes. Release date, October 20, 1934.

Among the Missing

(Columbia)

Drama

There are elements of entertainment in this forthright little drama of the manner in which an elderly lady, accidentally coming into contact with the situation, steers a young boy away from a life of crime and toward completion of a romance. The names are fairly strong for the marquee.

Since the film has its inception in a problem presented to the police bureau of missing persons, and out of which the story develops, there is an opportunity for an exhibitor tieup which may prove fruitful. The theme or aspects of the situation which finds the elderly woman unknowingly acting as servant for a crook and his henchmen, learning the truth and then saving the boy, almost at the sacrifice of her own liberty, opens the way for effective copy lines.

In the lead is young Richard Cromwell, as the boy, and his performance, as usual, is definitely satisfactory. Henrietta Crosman, highly competent character actress, is the elderly woman, and Arthur Hohl and Ivan Simpson are familiar names. Billie Seward, the object of Cromwell's affection, is more or less a newcomer and is both attractive and natural in her performance.

Miss Crosman is reported missing by her son and daughter-in-law, and is seen wearily resting on a park bench, suitcase beside her. A police hunt stirs the neighborhood, and Cromwell and Hohl, the hunted thieves, put in an appearance. Cromwell seeks refuge beside Miss Crosman, and when the police are about to search him, he slips the stolen jewels into her coat pocket. He and Hohl take her with them to the antique shop operated by Hohl as a blind for his thefts and where he acts as his own fence. They recover the jewels and Hohl engages her as cook and housekeeper, seeing in her a good "front" for his headquarters.

She does what she can to foster the budding romance between Cromwell and the girl next door, Miss Seward, and accidentally learns of the criminal activity of Hohl and Simpson. Her efforts to turn Cromwell in another direction are rebuffed, but eventually her admonitions take effect. She overhears plans for a jewel-stealing job, which Cromwell insists will be his last. They leave and she follows to the scene of the crime, a jewelry company. When the burglar alarm is set off, she takes the jewels from Cromwell, allowing him to escape, is apprehended and "sweated" by the police. Hohl and Simpson make a getaway, leaving Cromwell bound and gagged in the shop. Miss Seward frees him, and at police headquarters, they release Miss Crosman, cause the arrest of Hohl and Simpson and strike for the straight and narrow under the pleased eye of Miss Crosman.

The picture perhaps is best played in a mid-week position.—Aaronson, New York.

Little Friend

(Gaumont-British)

Drama

In its adaptation to the screen of the novel by Ernest Lothar, Gaumont-British presents, in her initial motion picture performance, a new child actress, Nova Pilbeam, who, by virtue of her role and to a large extent her dramatic ability, is far and away the leading player of the cast. It is almost entirely her picture, and as the innocent victim of a marital tangle, which carries her through nervous strain to the verge of suicide, she gives evidence of an ability which should make her future appearances a matter of definite interest. An exhibitor buildup of her name should be a worthwhile selling effort.

The selling problems which present themselves to the exhibitor, in so far as merchandising the picture in this country is concerned, are of two forms, one an outgrowth of the production origin of the picture, the other of the story itself. There are, on the one hand, no names in the cast which will be known to the regular run of motion picture patrons in this country, and, on the other, the fact that all the lines are spoken with what has come to be called the accent of the King's English. It is for the individual exhibitor himself to determine to just what extent this factor will affect his selling of the film.

The story problem arises out of the fact that the child, in her position, is almost constantly stalked by an ever-increasing weight of what to her is the direst tragedy, as she sees her mother and father drawing further and further apart, with a consequent wrecking of her child's feeling of domestic security. The reconciliation of the parents, with which the picture concludes, brought about entirely as a result of the child's reactions to what is going on, in a measure offsets the vein of tragedy.

There may be selling value in the object lesson, with particular reference to children caught in the divorce web, which the picture conveys, and as such, the film is, of course, strictly adult fare.

The child of wealthy parents, almost entirely in the care of a governess, but definitely attached to both of them, becomes aware of a growing coldness between her parents and is immediately and seriously affected thereby. She catches her mother in several lies, keeps her own counsel and comes to understand that the trouble centers about Hilliard, matinee idol, with whom her mother has become infatuated. When the child's father discovers the state of affairs, he leaves the house.

The child, left more to herself, passes from one stage of bitter disappointment to another, until, going to Hilliard's home one night alone, she finds her mother's coat. Divorce proceedings are brought by the husband and the child is forced to testify against her mother. Her frantic efforts to lie to save her mother are unavailing, and the child is taken from the court. At home she attempts suicide, and when word reaches the courtroom, the suit is abandoned, a reconciliation taking place at the bedside of the recovering child.—Aaronson, New York.

Musical director, Louis Levy. Associate producer, Robert Stevenson. Photographed by G. Krampf. Art director, Alfred Junge. Editor, Ian Dalrymple. Recorded by A. Birch. Gowns, Schiaparelli. Wake Up and Dream

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama

With the rather time-honored theme of three more or less down-and-out vaudeville players, combined with a triangular romance, this production offers lively and engaging if not outstanding entertainment. With the appearance, in the leading role, of the late Russ Columbo, radio singer, the exhibitor has an obvious selling point. It may be said that, in addition to several melodious song numbers, effectively given, Columbo performed dramatically in at least competent fashion.

The comedy is a predominating element in the story, with the Italian-accented Henry Armetta, of the lop-sided walk and head slapping proclivities, providing the larger part of that comedy, and Andy Devine contributing a smaller measure. The old friends are in love with the same girl. One, on discovering he is not the object of the girl's affections, sees to it that his friend finds happiness with her. This is a thematic note which might be effectively used via copy lines.

In addition to Columbo and Armetta, there are the reasonably good drawing names of Roger Pryor and June Knight, the girl in the case. Loud speakers in the lobby to reproduce some of the Columbo vocalization might well be effective. Too much ballyhoo of Columbo's appearance might perhaps not be in the best of taste in the minds of certain of the patrons, but it would be well to indicate this as his last screen appearance. Music, comedy and romance are the three elements of the picture which warrant selling emphasis.

The three, out of jobs and cash, rely on the nimble wits of Pryor to extricate them from a bad situation. He is in love with Miss Knight, and Columbo attempts to hide his feeling for her in order not to jeopardize his friendship with Prior. When Pryor practically kidnaps a leading man in a tryout town for a musical show, the three escape as the police appear at the theatre. They live a hunted existence, in a New York boarding house, finding no work, while the producer is scouring the country for Columbo, who had made a hit in his tryout.

Armetta, an Italian cousin of Columbo, arrives unexpectedly, from abroad, without money and all set to live on the money he assumes Columbo has. The four leave for Hollywood, where, as Armetta is amusingly pursued by a crystal-globe reader, Columbo gets his chance by accident, is a hit in his first picture, and is the object of the attention of the leading woman, Wini Shaw. When Pryor realizes that Miss Knight is actually in love with Columbo rather than himself, he sees to it that the couple discover their mutual feeling, while he plays the courageous friend.

It is lively, clean-cut, entertaining, with Columbo perhaps the film's chief selling asset. It may be played almost any time in the week.—AARONSON, New York.

Songs by Bernie Grossman, Jack Stern and Grace Hamilton. P. C. A. Certificate No. 179. Running time, 78 minutes. Release date, October 1, 1934.

Girls Will be Boys

Comedy

Dolly Haas, well known Continental interpreter of boy-girl roles, is the center of attraction in a story specially written to exploit her type of act.

You can safely promise good situations and skillful skating over thin ice in such scenes as those in which she shares a bath with a male instructor and listens, embarrassed, to the broad humors of a bachelor dinner party.

"Pat" Calverly, granddaughter of the woman-hating Duke of Bridgewater, brings herself to his notice by a letter in which she encloses a portrait of herself in the male attire she wears as a revue artiste in Paris, and thereby commits herself to maintaining the imposture.

Arrived at the ancestral estates, she falls in love with Geoffrey Dawson, the Duke's manager, who is entrusted by his employer with the task of "making a man" of the new arrival. He discovers her sex and returns her affection and then there is the problem of letting the Duke know the truth. When Pat receives a guest in the attire proper to her real sex the old man thinks it is a case of imposture, but at last he is amusingly convinced and all ends well.

Slight as the plot is, it is made most amusing by the predicaments, obvious enough but skillfully presented, to which the sex imposture is bound to lead and by the general good level of the acting. Dolly Haas is high-spirited and convincing, and both her sweetheart (by Esmond Knight) and the Duke (by Cyril Maude) are very amusingly presented.

The exploitation angles are promising, with the boxing instruction scenes and the embarrassment of the maiden at the "stag" dinner party obvious highlights.—ALLAN, London.

Crime on the Hill

(B.I.P.-Metzger)

Mystery

A mystery which keeps the identity of the perpetrator of the crime sufficiently well under cover to make discovery by the audience practically impossible, this British-produced picture, distributed in this country by Lou Metzger, maintains suspense to the end, despite several slow spots and a somewhat unconvincing revelation of the criminal. At least two of the leading players should be reasonably well known in this country.

There is an interesting aspect to the story, which is set entirely at a country estate in a quiet village somewhere in England, in that the local vicar, a man of keen intelligence, actually pieces evidence together to unearth the identity of the murderer while a Scotland Yard detective, completely baffled, gets nowhere.

The known names here are Anthony Bushell, one of the most strongly suspected of those involved, and Sally Blane, fiancee of Bushell, and ward of the elderly master of the estate, who is the first victim of the murderer.

Three slayings serve to step up the progress of the story, the last two perpetrated as self-defense measures by the criminal. The fact that he is the least likely to be the criminal of all involved indicates the value of challenging the audience to attempt to solve the case.

When the estate owner is found dead in his library chair, Scotland Yard discovers that he has been poisoned. Involved are Miss Blane, Bushell, the vicar, a visiting woman who, it is revealed, was secretly married to the victim a short time before; the neighborhood doctor, a great friend of the vicar; the butler and a maid. Bushell had quarreled with the master, and immediately is suspected. Just as the maid is about to give damaging evidence to the detective, she is killed, stabbed through a door against which she was leaning. When it is learned that Bushell had had an affair with the maid before he met Miss Blane, the case becomes even stronger against him. He is indicted and jailed.

Later, the first victim's wife is stabbed and killed at a bazaar on the estate, and the doctor is wounded with the same knife. The situation is thereby further complicated, until the vicar, piecing bits of evidence together, discovers the murderer to be the doctor, who had wounded himself to divert any possible suspicion. Bushell and Miss Blane are reunited. Marriage with the victim's wife after his murder, and acquisition of his wealth was the motive, the woman's death becoming necessary to his safety when she was about to tell too much.—AARONSON, New York.

My Song Goes Round the World

(Associated British)

Musical

The story here is just a vehicle for the exploitation of the personality of Joseph Schmidt, "the pocket tenor," and selling tactics should be based on the fact that one of the world's big tenor voices is the possession of a singer who can almost be described as a midget.

Schmidt's really remarkable voice is skillfully used; there is no suggestion that any of his numbers are "dragged in"; the vocalism is part of a quite plausible plot.

The picture figures Schmidt in the role of Ricardo, a singer handicapped by his lack of stature, as one of a trio of bosom friends; the others are Rigo, a clown (John Loder), and Simoni (Jack Barty), who had the role of admiring chorus. All are down on their luck.

Ricardo finally crashes a broadcasting studio and, unseen, obtains for his voice the recognition it deserves. Gramophone records increase his popularity and inspire a beautiful girl, Nina (Charlotte Anders), with an admiration for him which unfortunately is less than her infatuation for Rigo's physical attractions.

Learning the truth, Ricardo almost misses his first public appearance, but, turning up at the last minute, scores a big success which partly consoles him for his failure in love.

There is an effective blend of pathos and humor in the direction of Richard Ostwald, and the Viennese settings are attractive, but the thing to sell is Schmidt's voice, which is heard in the most popular operatic tenor numbers.—ALLAN, London.

Gentlemen Are Born

(Warner)

Drama

This picture is topical drama of a very well understood present-day condition. It is the story of four young college graduates who, in actual experience, find the realities of life sternly different from academic illusions. Keynoted to a light yet serious pitch, it accentuates familiar realism. Contrasting the primary element are love interest episodes, both tinged with relative comedy. Essentially the picture is entertainment, which as it assumes a deep human interest motif becomes an illuminating preachment.

Because of its nature, markedly different from the ordinary, it has an appeal which properly publicized should excite interest of the young moderns, the more mature adults and the older juveniles. While the story faithfully mirrors life as it has been experienced by many during recent years, there should be no fear of its realism, which is sometimes grimly impressive. In short, as the picture deflates the egos of its characters, it may have value in similarly influencing others who believe that the world owes them a fat living regardless.

Here's what happens. Four boys—Bob, Tom, Fred and Smudge—are graduated from college confident that the world shall be their oyster. Fred is set. He goes into his father's brokerage office. Bob aspires to be a newspaper man. Smudge wants to be a football coach. Tom seeks to be an architect. Together in New York, life is exciting but not kind to them. Romance comes. Tom marries Trudy. Bob, in love with Fred's wealthy sister, feels that their stations are too far apart to think of marriage yet. Space rate writing is all that Bob can get. Smudge, unable to click, goes in for prizefighting, is walloped, found by Bob. Reunited with his pals, he marries Susan, who was responsible for bringing all the friends together.

Then ensues the tragedy of life. Smudge is killed when, hungry, he attempts to force a pawnbroker into buying an article. Sent to Mr. Harper's office to get the details of a bank-failure story, Bob talks with Fred as his father leaps from a window. Tom and Trudy are just plugging along and a baby is born to them. Joan is visiting there, having recovered from the effects of her father's death, when Bob arrives to have the proud and enthusiastic Tom tell them the way is clear for their marriage.

Whether this picture attains the popular appreciation to which its merits entitle it is a question that only the exhibitors who play it will decide. It's not a great picture, by any means, but it is an interesting one. It is well acted and intelligently directed. There is plenty of appeal, but it's the kind that seeps in rather than being smashed home. Exert every effort possible to get a big house for the opening performances and it is quite possible that word-of-mouth advertising will do more for this attraction than could be expected from any other channel.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Red Republic
(RKO Radio)
Interesting

The excellent photography which characterizes the work of Miss Margaret Bourke-White, camera specialist, is visible in this silent record of Soviet Russia, with, of course, an appropriate explanatory accompaniment. Seen are the famous oil fields of Baku, owned, as is everything else in Russia, by the state; the great vineyards of Georgia, and the tremendous Dnieper Dam, the work of the American engineer, Colonel Cooper. There are enlightening pictures of the elderly mother of dictator Joseph Stalin and the people at home, at work and on parade. An interesting subject, well photographed.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Life's Last Laughs
(Columbia)
Novelty

There is a definitely novel flavor in this, the second of a new Columbia series, produced by C. S. Clancy, in which the unusual and often amusing epitaphs appearing on tombstones form the basis of the subject. The number has entertainment quality of a different sort.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction (No. 2)
(Universal)
Likable

There's something for everyone who likes travelogues in this issue of the series edited by Allyn Butterfield, with Alois Havrilla, radio announcer, doing the describing. Sharing the space and time are views of the making of candy out of cactus, the many-faced Lierre clock, an artist who propels his painting brush with his teeth, church services on horseback, a pygmy hippo pet, a blacksmith's inventive genius, a Palace of Depression built of junked auto parts, women with skirts 100 yards long (assembled by pleating), electricity drawn from a cat's fur to pick up gold lead, and a maimed carpenter's curious stick for playing the piano.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Katnips of 1940
(Columbia)
Good

One of the Krazy Kat cartoon series, produced by Charles Mintz for Columbia release, this subject is good entertainment of the animated variety. Telling the story of the would-be musical comedy star who gets her chance when the real star becomes suddenly indisposed, the number is amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Songs of the Colleges
(RKO Radio)
Timely Subject

There is a definite timeliness, which becomes its strongest asset, in this Headliner subject. The popular and for most part well known songs of 13 of the country's leading colleges, such as Army, Navy, Harvard, Cornell, Southern California, Notre Dame, are played effectively by Hal Roberts and his Trojan Band of Southern California, while as a background are pictured scenes on the campuses, and of the athletes in action, with a large part of the background devoted to shots of major football games, which accounts for the timeliness of the subject.—Running time, 15 minutes.

Trapeze Artist
(Columbia)
Entertaining

The by now famous "man on the flying trapeze" is here done in animated cartoon fashion, with considerable entertainment resulting. The musical accompaniment is, of course, the riotous song itself. The subject, one of the Charles Mintz-produced Krazy Kat series, is clever and entertaining.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Dumb-Bell Letters
(RKO Radio)
Laughs

The third in this series is another group of letters, supposedly authentic, sent to various business houses, and taken from the collection, "Dumb Belles Lettres," of Juliet Lowell. Very short, the subject, in its reproduction of the actual letters, is nevertheless almost certain to provide a laugh or two for almost any audience.—Running time, 4 minutes.

Laughing with Medbury In the Arctic
(Columbia)

In this number of the series produced by Walter Futter for Columbia release, John P. Medbury offers his intended amusing explanatory dialogue in accompaniment to a series of stock shots of the Arctic regions. A fair subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Grandfather's Clock
(RKO Radio)
Amusing Novelty

There is entertainment, especially for the youngsters, in this new series of Toddle Tale cartoons, which feature a combination of screened tots and animated material. In this subject, two infants are playing with an alarm clock when the grandfather's clock reprimands them and tells them the story of the clocks, which is animatedly reproduced. An engaging and entertaining novelty subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Marching With Science
(Fox)
Good

Somewhat lacking in the breath-taking thrill of the earlier numbers of this series, by reason of the subject matter, this is nevertheless of definite interest, as the newsreel cameraman records the efforts of science to learn the secrets of nature and apply them to the needs of man. Highly effective is the closing sequence which pictures the naturally expert maneuvering of the lowly spider, as he spins his perfect web, ensnares unwary insects, and binds them fast. An interesting subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Bric-a-Brac
(RKO Radio)
Fair Comedy

For those among the audience who find a special kind of enjoyment in the trials and tribulations of the hen-pecked and short tempered Edgar Kennedy, this will probably be found entertaining. In general the laughs are occasional, the comedy fair, as Kennedy, forced by chattering wife Florence Lake and annoying mother-in-law Dot Farley, aided and abetted by brother-in-law, tries to build a cabin in the mountains, with a fireplace of his own design, with the expected disastrous results.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Men in Black
(Columbia)
Fair Burlesque

In the nature of a burlesque on the medicos in a hospital, this number of the Broadway Comedies series has as its principal players and entertainers the three Ted Healy stooges, Larry Fine and Jerry and Moe Howard, as internes in a hospital. Their ridiculous antics are occasionally amusing, the short rating as a fair comedy.—Running time, 19 minutes.

If This Isn't Love
(RKO Radio)
Melodious

Considerable attractive melody, and a trivial story make up this short subject, featuring Walter Wolfe, some time of the New York musical stage, and the possessor of an effective singing voice. As the musical star beset by clamoring femininity, Wolfe accidentally meets Hazel Forbes and pursues her with much song but little success. To spite her, he indulges in an intrigue with Dorothy Lee, gets mixed with her husband, but finally explains satisfactorily to Miss Forbes. It is fairly entertaining. —Running time, 22 minutes.

Polo Thrills
(Columbia)
Lively Action

There is plenty of action in this number of the World of Sport series, picturing the training of the amazingly clever ponies used in polo and those same animals later in action on the field. The closing sequences show parts of a match between teams representing the United States and Great Britain in a fast international scrap. A good subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Pastry Town Wedding
(RKO Radio)
Good

One of the Rainbow Parade, all-color cartoons, this subject should be found especially entertaining by the children, with its clever and conspicuously colored pictures of the tiny inhabitants of Pastry Town busily at work baking. When one saves a girl from an angry bee, she consents to marry him and the small makers prepare an enormous cake for the occasion. An entertaining cartoon, made more effective by the lavish use of color.—Running time, 8 minutes.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

TRIBUTE PAID EMANUEL COHEN

15 FILMS FINISHED, SIX STARTED

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

The banquet to Emanuel Cohen, given by Paramounteers last Friday night at the Ambassador, broke or bent many Hollywood precedents so badly that it's now being referred to as an event instead of just news.

The first tradition blasted was that the studio toilers flung the festival for and to Mr. Cohen, and each attending paid for the privilege. Hollywood custom, prior to this, has dictated that a chieftain summon the help "by royal command."

Then there was the panning and toasting of Mr. Cohen in the manner of Washington's Gridiron soirees. From all appearances, Mr. Cohen took a genuine delight in the sly humor and agile thrusts. He paid a sincere tribute to his co-workers.

Beneath a veil of DeMillian humor, Cecil Blount recounted Cohen's three years leadership of Paramount Productions.

A. M. Botsford, who acted as toastmaster, made Hollywood conscious, as New York long has known, that he is one of the wittiest of after dinner speakers in the industry.

When the "Pictureless Newsreel" was being heard, with gags aimed at the guest of honor, a columnist ventured that the Cohen dinner might start a new cycle of banquets to act as "Hollywood safety-valves," where roasting, as well as toasting, would supersede panegyrics and puffs, although all at the table agreed that most of Hollywood executives "can't take it" as Mr. Cohen did.

15 Features Completed

Rapidly transforming Hollywood's recent production spurt into screen merchandise, fifteen features were completed in the past week as only six were started. In the unusual clean up Columbia is credited with four; Paramount three; Warner two and Fox, MGM, Radio, Monogram, Invincible and Walter Wanger Productions one each. Of the new pictures MGM has two, as has Warner, with Paramount and Fox one each.

First of the Columbia features completed was "Spring 3100," in which Nancy Carroll, George Murphy, Donald Cook, Inez Courtney, Arthur Hohl and Raymond Walburn are featured. "Fugitive Lady," presenting Neil Hamilton, Florence Rice, Donald Cook, Clara Blandick and Nella Walker, was next in line. "State Out" features Bruce Cabot and Judith Allen. Last of the quartet, "White Lies," presents Walter Connolly, Fay Wray, Victor Jory, Leslie Fenton and Irene Hervey.

Of the new Paramounts, two are musical comedy romances and the third is a straight comedy. "Here Is My Heart" again teams Bing Crosby and Kitty Carlisle, with Alison Skipworth, Roland Young, Reginald Owen, William Frawley and Cecilia Parker in support. In "College Rhythm" Joe Penner, radio and vaudeville notable, is introduced in a cast that features Lanny Ross, Jack Oakie, Helen Mack, Lyda Roberti, Mary Brian, George Barbier and Franklin Pangborn. "It's a Gift" again teams W. C. Fields and Baby LeRoy and presents Kathleen Howard, Jean Rouveral, Spencer Charters and Tammany Young.

"Concealment," starring Barbara Stanwyck with Warren William, was completed at Warner. The supporting cast includes Douglas Dumbrille, Glenda Farrell, Henry O'Neill and Grant Mitchell. Also transferred to the cutting room was "Racing Luck," the cast of which includes Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor, Roscoe Karns, Henry Kolker, Frankie Darro, Gavin Gordon, Clarence Muse and Bradley Page.

At Fox, "Hell in the Heavens," featuring Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro, Herbert Mundin, J. Carrol Naish, Ralph Morgan and Russell Hardie, was finished.

MGM's contribution to the completed quota was "Evelyn Prentice," starring Myrna Loy and William Powell, with Una Merkel, Isabel Jewel, Henry Stephenson and Ed Brophy heading the supporting cast.

Radio checked in with "Girl of the Islands." In this Steffi Duna, Regis Toomey and Lionel Belmore are featured, and Mitchell Lewis, Raymond Hatton, Gilbert Emery and Charles Middleton also will be seen.

At Monogram "Sing Sing Nights" joined the parade with a cast that lists Conway Tearle, Hardie Albright, Boots Mallory, Mary Doran, Berton Churchill and Ferdinand Gottschalk. Matching this independent activity was Invincible with "The Port of Lost Dreams." This picture's cast is headed by Bill Boyd, Lola Lane, Ed Gargan and Harold Huber.

The last of the fifteen came from the newly formed Wanger Productions, Paramount release, when "The President Vanishes" was finished. The cast is very extensive. Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin, Edward Arnold, Andy Devine and Irene Franklin are among the principals.

Better Than Usual

Though few, all the newly started productions appear to be in the unusual entertainment class. At MGM "The Night Is Young" started. The cast is made up of Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye, Edward Everett Horton, Charles Butterworth, Stuart Erwin, Rosalind Russell, Una Merkel, Cecilia Parker, Donald Cook, Henry Stephenson and Herman Bing. At the same time "Backfield" got underway with Robert Young, Ted Healy, Leo Carrillo, Stuart Erwin, Preston Foster, Maureen O'Sullivan and Russell Hardie.

Both the new Warners are musicals. "Golddiggers of 1935" features Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart, Frank McHugh, Winifred Shaw, Hugh Herbert, Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dare and Glenda Farrell. "Sweet Music" stars Rudy Vallee, with Ann Dvorak, Ned Sparks, Joseph Cawthorn, Allen Jenkins, Alice White, Al Shean, Helen Morgan and Robert Armstrong included.

Paramount's new vehicle is "Father Brown, Detective." The cast includes Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas, Gertrude Michael, Robert Lorraine, Una O'Connor and E. E. Clive. At Fox, "Bright Eyes" went before the cameras. Shirley Temple is the natural big number in this, although the cast numbers James Dunn, Judith Allen, Lois Wilson, Dorothy Christy, Theodore Von Eltz and Jane Withers.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

WHITE LIES

Columbia

This is a story of screaming newspaper headlines. Triumphs for their publisher, they bring catastrophe as his daughter is charged with murder, only to have the man upon whom the publisher not only has vent his ire but made the beneficiary of his influence, unravel the mystery and save the ink-maniac from being scooped.

The original story and screen play are by Harold Shumate, previously credited with the scenarios on "Crime of Helen Stanley," "Hell Bent for Love," "One Is Guilty" and "Voice in the Night." Direction is by Leo Bulgakov, who directed "One Sunday Afternoon" on the New York stage, making his first Hollywood effort.

The five principal players are Walter Connolly, currently in "The Captain Hates the Sea" and "Whom the Gods Destroy;" Fay Wray, now in "Affairs of Cellini," her latest Columbia picture "Black Moon"; Victor Jory, seen in many Fox pictures; Leslie Fenton, in "I Believed in You," and Irene Hervey, in "Three On a Honeymoon." Other players are Robert Allen, William Demarest, Oscar Apfel, Mary Foy, Kathrine Ward and Harry C. Bradley.

The story calling for plenty of excitement and thrill, along with a rather novel romantic angle, not only offers a good title with which to work, but the current popularity of Walter Connolly serves as a valuable asset for name purposes. One punch sequence which can be commercially capitalized, is the situation which finds the publisher tempted to sacrifice his fetish for scareheads when his own daughter would be their subject.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS

Warner

From the title it is easily gleaned that this story is one of mystery melodrama in the skies. Involving situations fraught with intense excitement, breath-taking suspense, vivid sequences of aerial acrobatics, liberal dashes of hokus-pokus comedy, and a companionate love interest angle, it is not only a yarn of several murders but an action adventure crowded with high theatre.

The story and screen play are by Roy Chanslor, who wrote "Hi, Nellie," and Dore Schary, scenarist on "Fog," "Fury of the Jungle" and "He Couldn't Take It." Direction is by D. Ross Lederman, a specialist in producing exciting entertainment.

The cast is composed of familiar Warner players. Lyle Talbot, currently in "The Case of the Howling Dog," and Ann Dvorak, now in "Gentlemen Are Born," have the leads. In support roles corresponding to their established screen characters, are Gordon Wescott, Charles Wilson, George Cooper, Arthur Pierson, Henry O'Neill, Russell Hicks, Clay Clement, Edward McWade, Wheeler Oakman and Robert Light.

Promising to be an unsual attraction for those who like the fast moving, mystery shrouded, exciting color of dirty work at the aerial crossroads, the story mixes its heroes and villains in amazing fashion. A tube containing a secret super-TNT explosive is the cause of it all. As such, the picture calls for a brand of excitement provoking showmanship in publicity and gag exploitation that not only consolidates the interest of the youngsters, but also that of the lovers of thrill-adventure entertainment as well.

FUGITIVE LADY

Columbia

Dramatic romance is given a unique twist in this story. A girl, her dream of love blighted by an unusual circumstance, is sentenced to jail for a crime of which she has no knowledge. The train is wrecked, she is believed dead, only to live as another woman whirled into an amazing situation, in which the menaces to her first love appear again to threaten her happiness.

The original story and screen play are by Herbert Asbury and Fred Niblo, Jr. Niblo was associated with "Whom the Gods Destroy" and "The Hell Cat." The director, Al Rogell, recently made "Fog," "Hell Cat" and "No More Women."

A newcomer, Florence Rice, daughter of Grantland Rice, the noted sports writer, makes her screen debut in the heroine role opposite Neil Hamilton. Supporting players include Donald Coo, Clara Blandick, Nella Walker, William Demarest, Matt McHugh, Wade Boteler, Ernest Wood, Rita LeRoy and Rita Gould.

Story content and situations afford possibilities for unusual exploitation. Outstanding is the railroad wreck sequence in which the heroine, believed killed by authorities, lives to be accepted in the place of an adventuress as the hero's wife. There are also the closing sequences in which the girl frustrates a robbery that would disclose her real identity and does throw the man who was responsible for her trouble into the hands of the law.

SING SING NIGHTS

Monogram

On paper this production promises to be an unusual showmanship feature. A rather careful examination indicates that the story itself, rather than personnel, writing or directorial credits, is the peg upon which much unusual interest creating material can be hung.

"Sing Sing Nights" is probably the most widely read work of Harry Stephen Keeler, who has a score or more of mystery fiction novels to his credit. The screen play is by Marion Orth, recently associated with "Charlie Chan's Greatest Case," and Charles Logue. The director, Lew Collins, has specialized in production of thrilling melodramas.

The names in the cast are essentially of screen personalities, as Conway Tearle, Hardie Albright, Boots Mallory, Jameson Thomas, Mary Doran, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Berton Churchill, Lotus Long, Henry Kolker, Richard Tucker and George Baxter are listed.

Actually the yarn is three stories in one. Three men confess a murder and are sentenced to death. As is obvious from the story each tells, public feeling runs high and an investigation is demanded, as it can only be that one is guilty and two innocent. Then, with retrospect the medium, the three stories are told. Sing Sing death house being the primary locale, the story reverts to a revolution-torn South American country where one of the condemned tells that he killed the famous correspondent because he had stolen his wife. The latest scientific crime detection apparatus being used, retrospect takes the story to the interior of China where the second accused confesses that he killed because the dead man had ruined his Oriental romance. Flashbacks to death row bring the story to the realm of big business, where the third maintains he killed because his love likewise had been stolen.

The climax leaves the audience to decide which is actually guilty as they know each one's motive. From the standpoint of radical departure from formula, the curiosity that is aroused by the title opens the doors wide to a different and effective line of exploitation whose only limit is ingenuity.

EAST RIVER

Fox

Much that is of unique interest is readily evident in this production. Primarily the story is a different type adventure dramatic romance thriller in which there is a potent appeal to women. It's a story of he-men who pursue the dangerous calling of driving and building tunnels under river beds; the drama of men constantly facing death and the women they love who help them forget.

It is adapted from a novel by Borden Chase, in collaboration with Edward J. Doherty, which is appearing currently as a serial in Argosy Magazine. The screen play is by Chase, assisted by Howard Irving Young, who is credited with the screen play of the forthcoming Fox feature, "Music in the Air." Direction is by Raoul Walsh, who handled the picture's stars, Edward Lowe and Victor McLaglen, in their first big picture, "What Price Glory," and is noted for many other outstanding productions.

With Lowe and McLaglen teamed in a somewhat different association, the supporting cast of principals includes Marjorie Rambeau, Charles Bickford, Grace Bradley, George Regas, Roger Imhof, the veteran star of the silents, George Walsh, Warner Richmond, Olin Howland, Jack Wallace and James Donlan. Hundreds of extras also appear.

The story is a graphic portrayal of thrill drama. The chief setting is an authentic reproduction of a tunnel being bored under the East River. The menace is the river itself. All the scientific and mechanical paraphernalia and its use to insure safety are demonstrated. The dangers to which the "sandhogs" are subject are dramatically portrayed, as there are fires, blows when water seeps through weak strata to flood the chamber, compression and depression chambers, emergency man-locks, the "boils," the bends.

Against this background the romantic story is told; that of men who find that the joy, love, laughter and music of feminine companionship is the only thing making life worth living.

THE WHITE PARADE

Fox - Jesse Lasky

The title of this story only vaguely hints its character. While there have been previous nurse-hospital stories, this is the realistic romance and drama of the embryo nurse, dealing with the training period of her career, during which she comes face to face with the beginning of life and its end and all the pathos, tragedy, joy and triumph in between. Yet it is a love story, promising unusual feminine appeal, in which the principal character's desire to serve humanity comes into conflict with the natural human, womanly emotions.

The story is adapted from a recently published novel by Rian James. While this has been widely read, it is well to remember that many deletions and alterations have been made in the screen play, which is by James and Jesse Lasky Jr. The adaptation is by Sonya Levien, who collaborated on "State Fair," "Cavalcade," "Berkeley Square" and "Change of Heart," and Ernest Pascal, who was associated similarly with "As the Earth Turns." Direction is by Irving Cummings, maker of the recent "Mad Game" and "I Believed In You."

Loretta Young, currently in "Caravan" and "Rothschild," is teamed with John Boles in the leading roles. Supporting players are well-known with only minor exceptions. Listed are Dorothy Wilson, recently in "His Greatest Gamble," Muriel Kirkland, in "Nana," "Little Man, What Now" and "Sailor Beware"; Astrid Allwyn, now in "Servants' Entrance," Frank Conroy, Jane Darwell, now appearing in "Happiness Ahead," Frank Melton, seen in many Will Rogers pictures, Walter Johnson, a newcomer, Sarah Haden, Joyce Compton and June Gittleson.

Angles worthy of showmanship note are the facts that the picture is dedicated to Florence Nightingale and has the endorsement of the American Nurses Association.

SWEET ADELINE

Warner

This is another elaborate and spectacular musical, for which this company is noted. It is taken from the Broadway musical comedy hit by Oscar Hammerstein II and Jerome Kern. Motivated by a charming love story, it runs the gamut of rollicking comedy, thrilling episodes, conflicting romance and colorful new spectacle features in which hundreds of girls take part in dances staged by Bobby Connolly.

The screen play is by Erwin Gelsey, who adapted "Gold Diggers of 1933" and "Flying Down to Rio." Direction is by Mervyn LeRoy, who made "Gold Diggers." The show is packed with catchy music and songs. Irene Dunne, whose singing in "Stingaree" created a memorable impression, is starred, presenting five Jerome Kern song numbers. In support will be seen Donald Woods, who appeared in several recent Warner pictures; Hugh Herbert, Ned Sparks, Joseph Cawthorn, Louis Calhern, Winifred Shaw, Nydia Westman, Dorothy Dare, seen in "Happiness Ahead" and featured as she solos "Do the Polka, Dot"; and Phil Regan, alone singing "Molly O'Donoghue" and with Miss Dunne in two numbers.

The story, not that of the song "Sweet Adeline," is located in a Hoboken beer garden in 1898. It's a comedy yarn of complicated romance in which the love that should be eventually triumphs. Three extravagant spectacles are featured: "Lonely Feet," a swing number and the Irish atmosphered "Molly O'Donoghue." All have as background elaborate and new sets and glow with the glamour of hundreds of dancing girls.

Every indication is that there will be plenty in this production with which to work. Potentially it promises to be a showmanship attraction with interest creating possibilities rivaling any previously presented.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

With Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery headlining this production's cast, there seems to be name value enough for anyone. The story, intriguing comedy romance drama, is of the character that patrons currently are demonstrating as a favorite. The combination should make the task of creating wide popular interest a simple job.

"Forsaking All Others" is adapted from a successful stage play by Frank Cavett and Edward Roberts. The screen play is by Joseph Manciewicz, recently credited with "Manhattan Melodrama." William S. Van Dyke, maker of the surprisingly popular "The Thin Man," is the director.

Records of the starring trio needing no detailing, attention should be paid to the supporting players. Billie Burke and Charles Butterworth, currently in "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back," are featured. Included among the other players are such wellknown performers as Ted Healy, Ed Brophy, Rosalind Russell, Louise Henry and Arthur Treacher. Others are Forrester Harvey, Lillian Harmer, Greta Mayer, Tom Ricketts, Clarence Wilson and Sydney Bracey.

In the story, Montgomery, who has beaten Gable to their mutual goal, runs out on Joan Crawford on their wedding night. In marrying another, he leaves the deserted bride to the solace of Gable's platonic but affectionately ambitious friendship. Getting no bargain, he returns to Miss Crawford after his divorce and the old spark flames anew. Again their marriage is scheduled. This time, however, it's the girl who has a change of heart and leaves the bridegroom at the altar to dash after Gable, who is returning to Europe.

A smart story is enacted by a cast sparkling with outstanding names.

Brient Quits Loew's, Is With Thalhimer in Richmond

Elmer H. Brient has resigned as manager of Loew's theatre in Richmond and has joined the Morton G. Thalhimer interests now operating the Capitol and State, first runs, and the Grand, Venus and Bonton, subsequents. George Arthur Jones, formerly at Loew's in Wilmington, has replaced Mr. Brient.

Samuel Craver, of Norfolk, operating a circuit in Virginia, is figuring in a deal which will give him operation of the Lyric in Richmond, with a 15-cent admission planned. The deal has called a halt to proposed admission boosts in the city, with the possibility that reductions, instead, are now in order.

STAR SEAT-SALESMEN

Stories and Titles that Appeal to the Multitude —Young and Old— alike—

World Famous Fantasies with the "Personality" of Centuries of Popularity

Judgment in buying pictures that "SELL" seats — is the REAL SECRET of box office profits — The CONTROL of profits is in the hands of the film buyer.

Exhibitors are really NOT in the motion picture business — They're in the SEAT SELLING business. Pictures are, in effect, their "SALES FORCE" — and the IDEAL theatre sales force is NOT a double-feature or a triple-feature, but an "ALL-FEATURE" program — EVERY picture a definite, "SEAT-SELLING" ATTRACTION — regardless of price, brand name or footage.

Footage doesn't make "features" — "PERSONALITY" in a picture is far more important than footage — SINGLE reel subjects with a "PERSONALITY" that appeals to vast numbers of people, are "Features" in FACT.

For "ALL-FEATURE" programs we present:
Pictures with "Personality" that are "Features" in FACT.

What the Picture Did For Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Chesterfield

IN LOVE WITH LIFE: Onslow Stevens, Dickie Moore—Thanks to Chesterfield for having pointed this Invincible picture to me. Will compare favorably with many the majors would praise to us. The recording was very good, as also the acting. If anything, Lila Lee did not help very much. Plot very good. It pleased the extra special many who came. Business top. Running time, 68 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, New York. General patronage.

Columbia

BLIND DATE: Ann Sothern—A picture that should be double billed. It passed fairly well in this community, and the patrons were apparently satisfied. Running time, 75 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—The Western fans turned out and gave us the best business of the month. Played Sept. 22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

KING OF WILD HORSES: Rex, William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—A very good Western picture with plenty of horses and action. However, the dialogue was very poor, and but very few words could be undersood.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—Here is one of the rare pictures. We played "Lady for a Day" some months ago to better than average business. Pleased 100 per cent plus. For this reason we brought the attraction back for two nights, and did better than regulation business. Everybody more than pleased. Played Oct. 3-4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

NAME THE WOMAN: Richard Cromwell, Arline Judge—They don't make them any better. An ace picture for action and entertainment. A newspaper story intermingled with political racketeering, and murder. National Screen's talking trailer on this one calls for a lot of praise. The get-up and action shown in the trailer sure made our fans talk for a week in advance. Running time, 63 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—Delightful entertainment. As a musical romance, it is the best without any exception. Lovers of music have long yearned for something like this on the screen and they were satisfied. Played Oct. 1-2.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—Nice little show that will probably please most of the patrons. True to life play, of a timid son who supported his family until he declared the Party's Over. Played Sept. 25-26.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—Gave general satisfaction to our usual Saturday night crowd. Played Oct. 6.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—My patrons liked this picture very much and told me so. Business above average. No kicks. Running time, six reels. Played Sept. 29.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN: Elissa Landi, Frank Morgan, Joseph Schildkraut—Personally, I thought it was a very good program picture, but it pleased very few; there really wasn't much to it. Running time, 70 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Kay Francis, Leslie Howard—A beautiful picture. Excellent in every detail. Not so good at the box office, as Leslie Howard has fooled my patrons in his last two, but he makes up for them here and now. Play it and step on it. Running time, seven reels. Played Sept. 23-24-25.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—One of Brown's best box office faies. Clean all the way through. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Sept. 16-17-18.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—A very splendid detective mystery type. Well made and extra good even at the box office. This is worthy of your best selling efforts. Running time, seven reels. Played Sept. 28-29.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck, Frank Morgan, Lyle Talbot, Ricardo Cortez—One of the finest pictures I have ever seen. Everyone liked it and the mouth-to-ear advertising certainly did wonders, as I had tough competition but a 30 per cent increase at the box office for the three days. Superb acting. Heart interest and everything good in this one. Running time, seven reels. Played Sept. 30-Oct. 1-2.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown, Jean Muir, Johnny Mack Brown, Thelma Todd—Played this 8 months after release and did a swell business; laughs every moment all the way through. The finishing reel isn't especially clever, but gets over with most of the fans. Running time, 73 minutes.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—While this is not up to Joe's standard, it did a fair Sunday business and seemed to please the crowd. Played Sept. 30.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Fox

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES: Hugh Williams, Helen Twelvetrees—A poor picture that kills entertainment value. The English atmosphere, which spells poison at our box-office, is broken up by dividing the locale of the story between Italy and England. This picture must be double-billed, or better yet, where possible, should be chucked into a red hot furnace and forgotten. Running time, 77 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—The people came back to see Shirley, and I liked her. The greatest criticism of all came when the gangster was about to kidnap Shirley. I honestly believe that because this girl star symbolizes something full of cleanliness, purity and innocence, she should be starred only in vehicles devoid of gangsters and other objectionable elements. Running time, 73 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Record crowd, and all liked it. More like this and maybe the producers will know how good clean pictures are. Hope we get more like it.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

CALL IT LUCK: "Pat" Paterson—Clean comedy. Patrons enjoyed this little picture and told us so. Played on double bill. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Sept. 21-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Lloyd in a real story and swell picture. Receipts were disappointing with business only average. Played Sept. 20-22.—Hoolis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—100 minutes with many amusing moments, but don't expect too much. They'll like it, but it isn't "wonderful." Running time, 100 minutes. Played Sept. 30 and Oct. 1-2.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor—Janet Gaynor pleases our crowd. Not as big a draw at the box office as her other pictures but perhaps we played it too old. Played Oct. 6-7.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor—Janet Gaynor has always been a drawing card for us up to now. This picture did not get the money. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Sept. 23-24-25.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—In my opinion the best of the Chan series for a long time. Plot is well laid with identity of real criminal cleverly withheld until the last. Running time, 77 minutes. Payed Oct. 1.—J. R. Partlow, Ohio Theatre, Tippecanoe City, Ohio. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—These Oland-Chan pictures are always good. Took in a little extra money on it, so it shows the people like them. Good story and clean picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Sept. 21-22.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland—Our Saturday night crowd liked it.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond, Alison Skipworth—Just so much film wasted. No interest to my patrons. Have been holding it back, but Fox made me play it before I got "Handy Andy," so I had to. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Just made for Rogers. Plenty of laughs in this one. Consider it one of his best, but this is a good Rogers town. If your patrons like Rogers, build it big and you will do some nice biz. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Sept. 30, Oct. 1-2.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—Sweet little picture for the whole family with a beautiful music score. Played Sept. 23-24.—J. Glen Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—This picture did not do any business but we had several to tell us it was one of the best pictures we have had lately. Beautiful musical score. Get out and advertise it. Running time, eight reels. Played Sept. 26-27.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN TRINIDAD: Heather Angel, Victor Jory—Good murder mystery. Well liked. Played on double bill. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 21-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor—A nice, little, typical Gaynor offering. Audience reaction neutral. Played Sept. 27-29.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—Ayres better with Gaynor than Farrell, but the picture fell down after all-day Sunday run. A Swedish romance that is decidedly American, but they liked it with good short subject program. If they like Gaynor, this won't disappoint. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Sept. 23-24-25.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—This is one that has real entertainment in it. Mitchell and Durant nearly steal the show with their comedy antics. The picture has a nice little sailor romance that has been done a thousand times, but it is still good with this feature—good for any day in the week. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Sept. 28-29.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Woods, Ralph Morgan—I was fooled on this one. Nice feature and nice work by cast. They will like it. For mid-week. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Sept. 19-20.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley, Will James—

Although we played this old, everyone seemed to enjoy it. It has a story that seems to get the audience. Played on bargain nights to fair business. Jory does the best acting in this picture since he has been on the screen. Running time, 69 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY: Otto Kruger, Nancy Carroll—Just another picture which should have been shelved. Very poor entertainment. At any rate Fox is filling its quota of pictures for the season, but at a loss to the exhibitor. Running time, 73 minutes. —Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Shirley Temple, Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, James Dunn, John Boles, Sylvia Froos—A very good musical picture with a splendid cast. Not enough of Shirley Temple, though I believe that the spot she and James Dunn had was one of the best in the picture. Running time, 80 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: All-star musical—Have heard a lot of bad reports on this but our patrons thought it fine. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10-11.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—Good picture for the Baxter fans. Not a draw. Poor business. Played Sept. 5-6.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter, Rosemary Ames, Rochelle Hudson, Mona Barrie, Henrietta Crosman, Irving Pichel—A fair picture. Baxter good as usual, although this is not the type for him. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Oct. 1-2.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Johnny Mack Brown—Zasu Pitts always draws for us. Lots of laughs in this one. We believe people come to our theatre to be entertained and not just listen to a lot of talk. Fox seems to please here. Played Sept. 26-27.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—Personally, thought it a good show, but just a little too long and it seemed to have a double climax. Sort of a "House of Rothschild" story. Quite a bit of world war and the scenes are good. Some patrons remarked that it was a fine show, but not their kind. Madeleine Carroll as well as Franchot Tone are good. Carroll looks like a comer. It seemed to please the older patrons more. Played Sept. 27-28.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—Good picture. Would have been improved by cutting several of its 10 reels. However, it was well liked by the usual crowd. Played Oct. 1-3.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—Another heavy romance similar to "Pilgrimage," with a story like "House of Rothschild," but no draw for small towns. Stars not well established, and needs plenty of star shorts to help it out. They liked it, those who came, but! Running time, 110 minutes. Played Sept. 16-17.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Franchot Tone, Madeleine Carroll—Another of the "epic" series, very well carried out, although slightly long. Patrons' comments ran from "splendid" to "rotten," all of which means, what? Played Sept. 19-20.—J. R. Partlow, Ohio Theatre, Tippecanoe City, Ohio. General patronage.

MGM

CHAINED: Joan Crawford—An average Crawford. Average business. Good cast.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans, Nat Pendleton, Ted Healy, Paul Kelly —This is what will please the average patron. Has plenty of comedy, thrills and mystery. A baseball story, but it doesn't matter when you play it. Good entertainment that will not tax the brain and that seems to be what the folks want. Played Sept. 29.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Lewis Stone, Patsy Kelly—If you judge from the box-office, this picture was not very well liked. Sold to me as a special, but it is everything but that. It seems that they still remember "Bombshell," which wasn't so hot, so they stayed away.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI: Jean Harlow—My patrons liked this one. Drew average business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 24-25.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House Theatre, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Madge Evans—I consider this a good picture, but it did not get much business for me. Running time, eight reels. Played Sept. 28. —J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—Had several people to tell me there was no connection in the story, therefore they were unable to get the straight of it. On the other hand had several to say that it was the best picture of its kind we have shown in the past year. Personally, thought it just a program picture, with too many kisses and not enough action. Running time, 90 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—One of the best pictures of the year, and our patrons did not hesitate to tell us so. Everyone enjoyed it very much. One person told me after the last show that he saw it twice and was coming again the next day. Myrna Loy was good in "Penthouse," but she is twice as good in this picture. Step on it. It is worth everything you can give it. Hope MGM will give us some more like this one. Running time, 94 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger, Lewis Stone, Nigel Bruce, Chic Sale—A swell show from start to finish. Wallace Beery was extra good in "Viva Villa," but he is even better in this picture. This is the type of picture that will appeal to both young and old. It is worth an extra boost.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Louise Dresser, Ralph Morgan, H. B. Walthall—Broke the all-time attendance record for Thursday, Friday, Saturday week-end. They liked the picture. If the independents will give us human pictures from famous novelists, they will have the field to themselves. While the alleged great producing companies were busy making Viennese pictures and Hungarian pictures, all of which flopped and continue to flop, the independent stole the biggest seller ever known. Why don't one make "Shore Acres?" There are acres of room at the top always for producers. Let the alleged great producing companies turn out their long lists of poor program pictures, using huge studios. What this business needs is more producers to replace producers gone exhibitor and forgetting their real business. Running time, 76 minutes.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Louise Dresser, Ralph Morgan—A worthwhile picture for any class house. It is clean. The human interest element is pleasing. Play this and give your patrons a treat. The favorable comments heard around the lobby make you feel glad you are in the business. Drew mostly the young people. Played Oct. 8-9.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

JANE EYRE: Colin Clive, Virginia Bruce—Drew the older people mostly and they settled back with an air of satisfaction when the soft strains of "Sweet and Low" came from the screen, sensing they would not be disappointed, and they were not. It is good and follows the story very well. Played Sept. 19-20. —Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—A nice western, very entertaining, big rodeo show and lots of action. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Town and rural patronage.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Dixie Lee, Robert Armstrong—A nice little picture that everyone enjoyed. Due to a large church meeting, we did not get film rental, but it was no fault of the picture. This is something different from the usual run of pictures and should please in any mid-week spot.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MONEY MEANS NOTHING: Wallace Ford, Gloria Shea—My estimate of this picture is give Monogram a little push and you will see them up among the top-notchers. The only trouble with that will be that we will have then another company demanding percentage and preferred playing time. But more power to Monogram for all of that. Business satisfying. Running time, 70 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

OLIVER TWIST: Dickie Moore, Irving Pichel—Played this old, but the few that came to see it knew what it was going to be, so they seemed to enjoy it. Should have tied in with the schools, but as they had just opened, it wouldn't have helped very much. Would advise exhibitors to tie up with the schools to put this one over. Running time, 80 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Paramount

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino, Monte Blue, Lona Andre—Will please the light thinkers and that takes in about 90 per cent of our patrons. Personally, I thought some of it very, very good and parts of it very, very dumb, especially the girl-marine scenes. If you have seen it you know what I mean. Final rating just average. Gave this a lot of extra advertising, as I used it to open a new serial but got only average business. Running time, 68 minutes.—Mr. L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ELMER AND ELSIE: George Bancroft, Frances Fuller—Just an average program picture that got by.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town partonage.

GREAT FLIRTATION, THE: Adolphe Menjou—Two degrees less than nothing as far as entertainment is concerned. Played only one day and was I glad. Not worth paying express on.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley, Patricia Ellis—Just fair. Funny in spots. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 29-30.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—Pretty light stuff, with the Wampas Baby Stars. Many women will think it "amusing," but the men will say "blah," all of them! Running time, 70 minutes. Played Sept. 18-19.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen, Guy Lombardo—Played this on Sunday. People who saw it in the afternoon plugged it plenty for me and they came in droves after supper. Gracie Allen stood every patron up and made them shout. She is just plain "goofy" in this one, and George Burns is forced to marry her. That makes it worse until Burns gets paid $10,000 per mile to take her away from her father. Running time, 60 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen—A scream from start to finish. Drew a little extra business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 7-8.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle—A dandy picture killed by the word "murder" in the title. Will please if you can get them in. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3-4.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael —A fast moving jewel thief story. Has plenty of comedy situations. Should do business. A general and natural slump here kept them away, though.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael —Oh why, oh why, didn't Paramount put someone in this good picture to make box office appeal. No one to sell, consequently no business and a pity, too, for this is a good picture. Running time, seven reels. Played Sept. 21-22.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—For some unaccountable reason this attraction did less than normal business. However, it gave satisfaction. Played Sept. 12-13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

PRIVATE SCANDAL: Mary Brian, Phillips Holmes—A sleeper for us. We had it spotted in mid-week and it proved to be a really funny comedy. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 12-13.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Ben Bernie, Jack Oakie—This gave general satisfaction to nearly normal business. Played Sept. 19-20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Tom Keene—A good western to good Saturday business. If I could get them like this about twice a month I could forget the depression. Played Sept. 28-29.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Splendid program picture but business off but not through fault of picture. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 26-27.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—A blacklist picture that pleased all who saw it. I haven't been able yet to find on what grounds this picture has been "blacklisted," unless it may be the fact that one brother took the other brother's girl away from him or because of an evening ride in the cool moonlight. Surely a picture for fair entertainment. Running time, 72 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—A very unusual picture. For the better class.

Well liked and many favorable comments. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 7-8.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, Larry "Buster" Crabbe, Adrienne Ames—Pleased the most of anything we have run since "David Harum"—Best Fields show to date. In many ways like a Will Rogers show. A tent show for opposition hurt business on this plenty. The golf scene in the last reel was too drawn out, and to some people very tiresome. In spite of that, it is swell entertainment for the whole family. Running time, 70 minutes.—Mr. L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

RKO

ADVENTURE GIRL: Joan Lowell—This title pulled them in, but it was a disappointment, as the characters do not talk. It's more of a travelogue than anything else. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 3-4.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Thelma Todd, Dorothy Lee, Noah Beery—This is a very good picture of the comedy type and will please all comedy fans. It is typical Wheeler and Woolsey entertainment with plenty of spicy dialogue and comedy situations. The story is located in England in the 15th Century and is a costume picture. This is one of the best pictures this team has made and pleased our audience. Business average. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Sept. 29, 10:45 show.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR, THE: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley, Nils Asther—From every standpoint except B. O. this is one of RKO's best pictures for the 1933-34 season. Kruger has a great part and puts it over like a million. Here is a show that will entertain all classes and plenty of everything in it. The recording is excellent. You don't have to look for your "hide-out" when the patrons come out after seeing this.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix, Tom Brown, Rochelle Hudson—Good chain gang picture; a little old but all right for mid-week. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Sept. 26-27.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—Good father and daughter story; however, they like Dix in more virile roles. Dix has been slipping. Give us another "Cimarron," or air story, or big action story for Dix. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Sept. 26-27.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Boris Karloff, Reginald Denny, Wallace Ford—Tiresome—oh! so tiresome! Brother exhibitors, this is positively the poorest entertainment we have thrown on our sheet this year, and this goes for a longer period than 1934, lots longer. Walkouts—plenty of them—a lot of "blimey" English that the Scandinavians around here couldn't understand. The title brought them in and the total gross was above average, but!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Boris Karloff, Victor McLaglen—A highly exciting production but rather shocking to many of the fair sex. Normal business. Played Sept. 29.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN: Zasu Pitts, Bert Kelton—Most of our audience were pleased. Probably ten per cent were pained because Zasu Pitts sang so many times. Business fair. Played Sept. 26-27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—This was good for the thinking few who go in for character study. For the average theatre patron it was not liked. Running time, 83 minutes. —Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—Here is one reason why our farmers love the "big, handsome shoot-'em-up cowboys" and why the same people come 20 or 30 miles to witness a western. Give us a good western and we need extra ushers. That's my opinion of RKO's two-year old "Renegades of the West."—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, Edward Everett Horton—Our crowd said terrible. I hid as they came out.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn, Ralph Bellamy, Robert Young—Hepburn is rather hard to understand in places, in this somewhat unusual show. Picture drew a nice business and will please most of your patrons. However, this cannot be classed as mass entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez—My people panned this one, and I can't blame them. If it had been as funny as it was noisy, it would be a world beater. Jimmy Durante works hard, but he is not very amusing, and the story is a dud. Played Oct. 7-8.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez—Not what our audience liked. Too much yelling about nothing.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante—Opinion was divided on this one. Good business. Played Sept. 15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown—Another one of those damn going-to-have-a-"babie" pictures. Tell them to keep it if you are lucky enough to have escaped it so far. Played Oct. 2-3.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Constance Bennett, Fredric March—A pleasing costume romance which did not draw enough to justify a Sunday playdate. Seems to be rather sophisticated for a small town. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Oct. 1.—J. R. Partlow, Ohio Theatre, Tippecanoe City, Ohio. General patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford, Leslie Howard—Old, but still good for mid-week. Nice clean feature with a charming love story and plenty of action. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Sept. 12-13.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

Universal

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT: Lew Ayres—A very fine war picture but did not have the drawing power for children. Not so good for them but the adults liked it very much indeed. If one can advertise it in the one right way, I do not see why it should not go over in a very satisfactory way. Print good. Also recording good. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Not much of a picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, Alice White, June Knight—Went over very well. A dandy entertainment—chock full of laughs. One of the best from Universal this year. Not a murder mystery, as the killing is shown. The theme is very light, but that is what most people want. Play it by all means. —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marion Nixon—A good comedy. Nothing big but it was clean and entertaining. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

GLAMOUR: Constance Cummings, Paul Lukas—Gross for two nights $16.85. Nuff sed! Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 19-20.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

GUN JUSTICE: Ken Maynard—Average western. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HUMAN SIDE, THE: Adolphe Menjou—A real picture. Clean and entertaining. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 28-29. —A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Tracy as a United Press correspondent is sent on news-gathering missions all over the world. He helps save a country on two different occasions and winds up by marrying the Queen. Plenty of action and should do well on any date played.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Fair, but just program type. Good for mid-week. No drawing power. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 16-17-18.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

LET'S TALK IT OVER: Chester Morris—This is a fairly entertaining picture, but it didn't do much business. Played October 2-3.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery—Not a small town picture. Business fell off after first night.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale, Donna Damedell—Terrible. Played on double bill and still had complaints. Worst we have run for a long time. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard—Strange as it seems, this was well received, many complimenting it. Personally, I thought it terrible. Very slow and filled with English dialogue. But the patrons were pleased. So I am, too. Played Sept. 24-26.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edward Everett Horton, Edna May Oliver, Andy Devine, Leila Hyams, Thelma Todd—Just an average program picture; pretty slow for the first three reels, then it begins to pick up. Our patrons (the few that saw it) thought Andy Devine the best in the cast. Played on bargain nights to poor business. Running time, 65 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—After a lot of sorry pictures from Universal we finally got one that pleased. Nothing big in it, but has some good comedy bits. Played Sept. 29-30.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Esther Ralston, Victor Moore—This is a good little picture, but not the special it was sold for. It is a comedy romance and one that will please all who see it. There are no drawing names in the cast and therefore it will draw only fair business. We were forced to play this two days, because it was a percentage picture and did not make expenses for the run. Universal has never made money for us. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 27-28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—This is a good one. Most everybody likes Ken Maynard. Played October 5-6.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

UNCERTAIN LADY: Genevieve Tobin—Terrible and smutty. Theme vulgar. I was ashamed to face the customers at the end of the show. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 28-29.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—The trained goose and steer in this one are very good. Indian raids, a big storm and a buffalo stampede make it a mighty good western. Played Oct. 3-4.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Not nearly as good as "Gun Justice" or "Strawberry Roan" and didn't draw as much as either, but at that, business was above average. Too many dark scenes in this. Maynard has surpassed Buck Jones here as a drawing card.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Warner

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William—A pretty little number. I guess people like howling dogs, for they sure came out for this one. Every one liked it and it surely was a "limelight" at the box-office. Running time, eight reels. Played Oct. 5-6.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

DAMES: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell—Another beautiful musical from the wonder company. Three hundred per cent increase at box office and every one goes home smiling. And that is something. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 16-17-18. —Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Another good musical from Warners, not quite as spectacular as "Footlight Parade," but did a good business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 3-4-5-6.—J. R. Partlow, Ohio Theatre, Tippecanoe City, Ohio. General patronage.

DR. MONICA: Kay Francis, Warren William—Splendid picture of type. Business good. Advertised as adult entertainment. Running time, 52 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27-28.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Bette Davis, Donald Woods, Margaret Lindsay, Lyle Talbot—This is a good picture that is fast-moving and full of action. There is a touch of crime and gangsterism, but in spite of this, it will please the average movie fan. It is the story of a thrill-hunting wealthy girl and her criminal activity. Hugh Herbert supplies the necessary comedy. The trailer sold the show for us and we played one day to good business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HE WAS HER MAN: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—This is only fair entertainment of the dramatic type. It deals with a very unpleasant subject and is therefore strictly adult entertainment. It is a story of a girl who finds her man, and gets him, but can't hold him. Cagney is miscast in the role he plays in this picture. One day is enough, if you must play it. The trailer will sell the show. Business only fair.

Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 26, 1934. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JIMMY, THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis, Alice White, Allen Jenkins—Again Jimmy Cagney delivers a picture full of excitement, action and wisecracks that only he could get by with. A good supporting cast of well-known featured players. Running time, 67 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

REGISTERED NURSE: Bebe Daniels, Lyle Talbot —Another splendid picture by Vitagraph. Story interesting and acting of stars and all the cast fine. I could see not a thing offensive in the picture and it gave good satisfaction to all. Running time, 62 minutes.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN SONORA: John Wayne—The western fans seemed to enjoy this picture, although like the usual run of westerns. It will get by; has a little more action than the average western.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

UPPERWORLD: Warren William, Mary Astor, Ginger Rogers, Dickie Moore—The biggest kick we had was that Ginger Rogers was killed in place of Mary Astor. Had heard several bum reports on this picture, but it wasn't so bad, after all. The few that saw it seemed to like it.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MICKEY'S RESCUE: Mickey McGuire and his gang—I don't believe this little crowd has ever made a short that wasn't enjoyed. They draw the kids. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Town and rural patronage.

Educational

DOG-GONE BABIES: Ernest Truex—Not much to it. Was not even funny; at least it did not get many laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

DOWN ON THE LEVEE: Terry-Toons—Better than average Terry-Toon. Running time, six minutes. —J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DREAM WORLD: Romantic Journey—Very good color, but sound recording poor. Could not get the desired volume out of the print. Liked by all. Running time, 16 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

GOLD GHOST, THE: Buster Keaton—Very good. It brought plenty of laughs.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOOD LUCK—BEST WISHES: Pickens Sisters—Several good laughs and agreeable harmony by the girls. Running time, two reels.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

HALF BAKED RELATIONS: Andy Clyde comedy —Best Clyde I have had for some time. Kept my audience laughing from start to finish. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Tom Patricola, Buster West—A really great two-reeler. The gobs and marines in a grand melee of fun with a dash of clever dancing. Running time, two reels.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

LOST RACE, THE: Romantic Journeys Series—A beautiful single reel in color. Wonderful scenery.—Held C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Song Hit Stories—An excellent "Song Story" subject. Hillbilly songs and music with burlesque comedy settings. Running time, 10 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

OIL CAN MYSTERY: Terry-Toons—Liked by all and the children wanted it to be shown over. Running time, six minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

SUNNY SOUTH, THE: Terry-Toons Series—Fair cartoon. Not as good as some Terry-Toons. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

THREE BEARS, THE: Terry-Toon Series—A good cartoon. Running time, six minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

FILMING THE FASHIONS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—A good single reeler and the men liked it. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MAN'S MANIA FOR SPEED: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—A number of good speed "shots" that are attention holding. Running time, 10 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

OUTDOING THE DAREDEVILS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Great. A single reel that should be welcome on any program. Running time, nine reels.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

APPLES TO YOU: Musical Comedy—Not up to the standard, but O. K.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

APPLES TO YOU: Musical Comedies—One of the worst musical comedies from Metro this year. There is nothing to it. No one liked it. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

CITADELS OF THE MEDITERRANEAN: Fitz-Patrick Traveltalks—I consider these subjects the greatest educational reel on the market. My people like them very much and so do I. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

FOUR PARTS: Charley Chase—This is one of the best shorts Chase has ever made and one that will keep any audience laughing. It is something new. Chase plays four parts in this and he is a scream. Let's have more of these good comedies that please the cash customers. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GOING BYE-BYE: Laurel & Hardy -Good Laurel and Hardy comedy. Will please.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES—No. 3: This is another one-reeler that would be better left on the shelf. Why do the producers continue to push such trash as this off on the exhibitors? The code should do something about this. The remarks by Pete Smith are good, but the scenes are terrible. Pete, I sympathize with you, because I know this is not your idea of good entertainment. Make Metro give you better subjects that will please your audience. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES—NO 3: If your patrons like a lot of crazy, goofy stuff, they will like this. The best thing about this was when the fade-out came on saying, "The End."—Running time, 10 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES—No. 5: Pete Smith—As good as the others in this series; the patrons seem to like 'em. —J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S TRIAL: Betty Boop Cartoons—Another good cartoon. Clever and funny. Running time, seven minutes.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

CAN YOU TAKE IT: Popeye, the Sailor—This is absolutely one of the best cartoons of the year. I had more comments on this short than I receive on most features, and they were all good. Paramount certainly takes the lead for cartoons with Popeye. Better than Mickey Mouse or any other. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE—No. 7: Poor recording. Fair entertainment. Running time, 11 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MADHOUSE MOVIES: Paramount Varieties—Somewhat similar to Universal's "Goofytone News," but with a fake foreign version of a scene from Mae West's "She Done Him Wrong"—which may, or may not, mean anything in your advertising. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colorado. General patronage.

OIL'S WELL: Chic Sale—Fair comedy. Few laughs and clean. Running time, 22 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

RKO

BUBBLING OVER: Ethel Waters—This is only fair entertainment, but typical product from RKO. It is 100 per cent talking, but the action is missing. Ethel Waters is the whole show and she sings several selections that put this over. RKO should produce better shorts if they want to sell. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HENRY, THE APE: Bert Lahr—Terrible. No laughs and too many lines with double meaning. Pulled it after first show. Running time, two reels.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

PATHE REVIEW—No. 1: An interesting novelty reel and a good filler. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SOUTHERN STYLE: Ruth Etting—A good comedy. —Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BUGS IN LOVE: Silly Symphonies—An old Silly Symphony. Not as good as the new ones. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

GRASSHOPPER AND THE ANT, THE: Silly Symphonies—Another beautiful "Silly Symphony." Running time, eight minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S STEAMROLLER: Mickey Mouse—A very clever mouse; one of the best to date. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

STEEPLE CHASE: Mickey Mouse—Another good cartoon from Mickey. You'll like it. Running time, seven minutes.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

WISE LITTLE HEN, THE: Silly Symphonies Series—The story of the industrious hen planting and harvesting corn with the lazy pig and duck. Very good in color.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

ANNIE MOVED AWAY: Oswald Cartoons—Not up to the average, Oswald. Running time, seven minutes. —A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

BEAUTY ON BROADWAY: Walter Winchell—A musical comedy that seemed to please. Had several old-timers to tell us they were glad to see Sally O'Neil again. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BUDDY'S GARAGE: Looney Tunes—Average Buddy cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

GIRL TROUBLE: Broadway Brevities—Very pleasing short subject.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'VE GOT TO SING A TORCH SONG: Merrie Melodies—Very good cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

PAUL REVERE, JR.: Gus Shy—Be careful where you spot this. Paul Revere, Jr., will make the present generation lose faith in their historical idols; he's drunk and so are his friends, in a night club musical that's fair. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

PENNY A PEEP: Pepper Pot Series—Old-time shots seen through a Penny Arcade. If you need another reel to make it last till 9 o'clock, then all right. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

PUGS AND KISSES: Charles Judels—The title alone shows it's for Saturday only. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

USE YOUR IMAGINATION: Broadway Brevities Series: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Good musical short. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BURN 'EM UP BARNES: Frankie Darro—First three episodes played. Looks like a dandy serial so far. Crammed with action that the kids just eat up. Running time, two reels.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

VANISHING SHADOW, THE, NO. 8: Onslow Stevens, Ada Ince—Is pleasing the serial fans.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Boone, Iowa

DEAR HERALD:

This place was just a prairie when Daniel Boone used to hunt 'coon along the Des Moines and Coon rivers, that's how the place came to get its name, but it is quite a town now. We stopped here overnight for several reasons, one thing being this is the town where Bill Weaver used to play the piano for Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Anderson at their Princess theatre at night and catch bullheads in the Des Moines river during the day. Another reason was that we wanted to meet Mr. and Mrs. Anderson again, because they are a couple of mighty swell people, and we also wanted to meet Bill's father and mother, whom we have met before, but we learned that they had moved to Clinton, Iowa. Bill, you know, is not on the HERALD now, but is editing the Chicagoan, another Quigley publication. It's another mighty fine publication; it has to be if Bill edits it. He is the one who was responsible for the original institution of the department "What the Picture Did for Me" in the former EXHIBITOR'S HERALD. Well, now you can see why Boone is such an important city, and why we wanted to stop there.

Independence is the town where the woman who bakes our pancakes was born. That was away back when we were caught there for two nights on account of rain. You see the trees were shedding a lot of water and we didn't want to get wet, although there weren't many trees around there.

Then there was another reason why we stopped there, and that was to meet Mr. Hagerman, who operates the theatre. We met him and we had a very fine visit with him. He invited us to see his show, "Here Comes the Groom." We saw it and we are still wondering where the Legion of Decency was when this one got by. We also met D. H. O'Conner, who is the operator for Mr. Hagerman. D. H. told us of his experiences in the theatre business. He says he used to operate for our old friend John Piller of Valley City, North Dakota. He also operated at Minot, Fargo and Grand Forks as well as a number of other points. Somehow these operators are generally pretty good friends of ours.

We stopped at Dunlap to see our old friend Bill Bowker and we found that Bill had sold his theatre and had gone to the southern part of Iowa. We didn't know what he went there for, because there is no fishing down there, and Bill seldom goes anywhere but on some fishing trip. Anyhow, we were sorry not to see him.

We called on Mr. Middleton, who operates the Rex theatre at Iowa Falls. He's a reason all by himself why Iowa Falls has good shows.

At Jefferson we met Mr. Parkinson, who operates the theatre there, and Mr. McKinnan, who runs the theatre at Perry, Iowa. Both of these theatres belong to Finkelstein and Rubin of Minneapolis. We didn't visit these boys very long because they were just starting for Carrol to attend a district meeting of managers.

Omaha

Almost the first highwayman we met here when we went down on Film Row was our old friend Mr. Ringler. The last time we saw Mr. Ringler was when we toured together in western Kansas several years ago. At that time he was selling film for United Artists and he says we helped him sell a number of contracts. Maybe we did, but we never could imagine ourself selling film. It takes an honest man to sell film. Well, you boys know what we mean.

Mr. Ringler is now the district manager here in Omaha for Mid-West Film Corporation, and we are glad to learn this because he is a mighty swell fellow and is surely deserving of the job. There are a lot of excellent and honest district managers here in Omaha, but if you boys want to meet another we will introduce you to Mr. Ringler.

He invited us to attend a screening of "Girl of the Limberlost," with Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan, Louise Dresser and Henry B. Walthall. You will remember the story was by Gene Stratton Porter.

We were especially anxious to see this picture, because Leo Meehan, who is a son-in-law of the late Gene Stratton Porter, told us when we were in Hollywood that he intended to make pictures of all of her stories and we were very anxious to see what he did with this one especially. If the Legion of Decency, and other organizations that want clean pictures, will get behind this one they can make their demands much more effective than staying away from socalled bad ones, for this one is as clean as can be desired by the most exacting. We are going to make a kick right here, and we want Hollywood to understand it, and that is because it put Louise Dresser in a hard-boiled mother's part. She doesn't belong in hard-boiled parts, but oh boy, how she did play it. Maybe we like her all the better for it. Anyhow, Hollywood won't pay any attention to what we think about it. Then again, they had Henry Walthall in the picture, and when he is in a picture we don't care if there is nothing else in it but the bulldog, it will be good enough for us, for we remember how he can shoot grouse. If you want to give your customers a satisfying performance you better get "Girl of the Limberlost," for everybody remembers the story and will want to see the picture. This isn't "the biggest picture ever made," as some salesmen might try to tell you, but it is good enough for anybody, and you know that "The Biggest Picture Ever Made" only comes once in about 25 years. We believe this one will satisfy both the audience and the box offices.

While we were at supper tonight in a cafe we heard some crooner crying a song over the radio which sounded like "right from the shoulder and right from the heart." It was so touching that we broke down and wept until the waitress brought us a bath towel to cry in. The nearest music to a crooner that we know of is a fellow filing a cross-cut saw or a sow squealing for swill, or a jazz orchestra playing "Soapsuds Over the Fence."

IMAGINATION HUNTS IN NEW PICTURES

Another reason for the upturn in theatre business is advanced by Arthur Caesar, who jocosely rises to remark that quite a few are going to pictures to figure out what was cut out of them. He says, "It gives 'em a chance to use their imagination."

Ten Winners Announced In Warner Cast Contest

Warner announced early this week the names of 10 winners in the "Anthony Adverse" casting contest, sponsored by Warner, Photoplay Magazine and Farrar and Rinehart, publisher of the Hervey Allen novel. The 10 announced have been awarded free airplane trips to the World's Fair in Chicago. These winners were announced ahead of the full list because the Fair will close at the end of this month. United Air Lines is sponsoring the trips to Chicago.

Oregon Firms Merge

The Willamette Amusement Company has been adopted as the new name of the merged interests of J. J. Parker Theatres and the Evergreen Theatre Company in Oregon, which will operate the Music Box in Portland after alterations are made.

Zapp with Trendle

Henry Zapp, partner in Monarch Films, Detroit, has joined United Detroit Booking Service as buyer, succeeding Arthur M. Elliott, who resigned recently. George W. Trendle heads the Booking Service.

Weinberg Takes Two Houses

Harry Weinberg, nephew of A. H. Blank, has leased two theatres in York, Neb. He has an interest in 14 Iowa and Nebraska houses, independent of Central State Theatres and the A. H. Blank theatres.

Dr. Krauss Resigns

Dr. L. Lee Krauss, who has acted as efficiency expert for the Jacob Schreiber theatres in Detroit since last July, has resigned.

Sophie Tucker to Be Dined

Sophie Tucker will be honored at a banquet of the American Federation of Actors at Mecca Temple Casino, New York, November 3.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 244.—(A) Is inefficiency in a motor-generator set necessarily or even usually the fault of the machine itself? (B) Where should a motor-generator set be installed. (C) For what reasons is a basement or other location removed from the projection room objectionable. (D) Tell us just what points you would consider of prime importance in installing a motor-generator set.

Answer to Question No. 238

Bluebook School Question No. 238 was: (A) How would you calculate the amount of keystone distortion, projection distance and projection angle being known? (B) How would you determine the amount of distortion due to side view of screen, angle of view being known? (C) How would you calculate the added height of screen image due to projection angle, projection angle and distance being known?

This one did not get over so well. Here are those who squeezed through:

C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; C. Oldham; R. J. Arnston; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; C. E. Wainscott; D. Breaston and H. Haber; N. L. Simms; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; E. Hodson; J. Wentworth; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; T. N. Onby; T. Turk; F. H. and L. Klar; D. Johnson; P. and L. Felt; O. Allbright; M. F. Fallon; M. and J. DeVoy; B. R. Walker; L. Grant and R. Geddings; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; R. and K. Wells; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti; B. L. Patterson; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; L. B. and D. T. Palmer; G. Lathrope and N. L. Tomlinson; L. R. O'Leary.

I'm surprised that so very many got all tangled up on a very simple problem that is clearly explained in the Bluebook. It is merely a matter of finding out how much the light spreads per foot of projection distance, and how much farther it must travel to reach the bottom of the screen than the top.

For the reason that not one of all the hundreds of answers make all points sufficiently clear, I will answer Section A myself, borrowing the drawing which accompanied the answer of Friend Wainscott.

Assuming we have a 110-foot projection distance, measured from lens to center of screen, a screen image 16 by 12 feet, if undistorted, and a projection angle of 15 degrees: First having obtained a sheet of blank paper 30 inches long by any convenient width not less than 18 inches, pin it down to a table top and draw the line AB (Figure 1), adopting a scale, say, of one-quarter of an inch to the foot. The line will then be more than four inches long.

Establishing point Z one-half the height of an undistorted screen image of the width under consideration from its top, draw a line, ZY, exactly at right angle to the line AB. Then with a protractor, lay it with its straight edge against the line Ab, with the 90-degree mark of the protractor exactly on line ZY, and counting 15 degrees (the angle of projection), upward from the 90-degree mark, a point is established opposite the 105 mark.

Next, lay a straight-edge on both point Z and the 105 mark just made, and draw the line, XZ, and 27.5 inches (110 divided by one-fourth equals 27.5) out from Z, establish point X, which is our projection lens.

Now draw lines XA and XB exactly at right angles, to which is then drawn line AB', and thus the layout is complete. We now have only to measure the distance from B' to B in quarters of an inch, and multiply that by the spread of the light beam in inches, per foot, to have the answer.

The spread is established by dividing the width of the screen image, in inches, by the projection distance in feet. The result will be the spread of the beam, in inches, for each foot of projection distance.

Wainscott sends a drawing that explains Section B very clearly. In it (Figure 2), AB is the screen, CD the width of some object on the screen (maybe a fat lady, what?), Y a theatre seat, and Z the viewing angle, in this case about 60 degrees. Laid out to scale, as with Figure 1 illustrating Section A, and measuring from C to E, the answer is provided. Foreshortening would be as C compares to E.

(C) The answer to Section A provides the answer to this question, at least very largely. It is only necessary to calculate the dimensions of an undistorted picture of the width under consideration, and measure line AB as shown in Figure 1, and subtracting one from the other to have an exact answer.

Knowledge of how such things are done is valuable when a new theatre is being built or planned and the exhibitor or manager asks the projectionist how high a picture of given width will be with the projection room in a given location. To be unable to answer is to confess lack of knowledge of an important item in one's profession. To be able to answer correctly certainly adds to the exhibitor's respect for you.

Stage Shows Returning To New York Paramount

Stage shows will come back at the New York Paramount in Thanksgiving week or at Christmas, contingent upon the runs of pictures now booked, according to Boris Morros, managing director. The same policy is expected to follow at the Brooklyn Paramount, which Si Fabian is operating under a pooling arrangement.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THOSE PERNICIOUS STARS

No more pertinent commentary on the weaknesses of the star-rating system has yet been offered than that spoken by Round Tabler Fred Hinds who states that out of eleven four-star features thus "honored" by Liberty, but two proved successful at his box office. In his challenging article published on a following page, the skipper of the Whitewater, Wisconsin, Strand Theatre gives yet further proof that the "star business" besides influencing grosses unjustly is not conducive to the strengthening of theatre prestige. Says Fred:

"Lacking a daily newspaper in this situation, we have repeatedly been requested for box office failures because 'they got four stars in Liberty'. When advised, as was often the case, that the picture was under contract and was being paid for but not exhibited because it could only be done at a financial sacrifice, the inquirer looked askance. . . . "

Surprising, isn't it, that the motion picture industry has allowed to flourish a system so pernicious that theatremen book with trepidation those pictures whose four-star ratings are supposed, but fail lamentably, to guarantee grosses?

WASHINGTON EXPLOITS

And now the Federal Housing Administration to stimulate progress of the Better Housing movement is sending out to the managers various exploitation suggestions to be effected in cooperation with local organizations. Prominent citizens have been requested to participate, advertising material is available, and in general the sincere attempt to inject showmanship into this very constructive national plan is to be commended.

However, in the exploitation story forwarded by the Housing publicists to this department for publication is incorporated a reminiscent line, i. e., that a certain tieup is "sure to bring extra business to your house".

For the information of Mr. Moffett's bright young men, your venerable Chairman opines there is no stunt that carries the seal of ticket selling surety. Good product still remains the most dependable "idea" for securing higher grosses.

Vic Shapiro tells us that a flock of studioites are now roaming the highways and byways to discuss with showmen ways and mean of bettering pictures. So-o-o, if one of these bright mornings a stranger barges in and starts firing, remember that it is now permissible under the code to ask him to join in singing "The Man On the Flying Trapeze."

NOT "WHO" BUT "WHAT"

In the course of your Chairman's recent week-end visit to Pittsburgh, it was gratifying to learn the sentiment of those theatremen we encountered who favor the general lack of emphasis in these pages of the pat-on-the-back school of reporting.

Praise words affect us humans pleasurably and the stimulus of appreciation is not to be derided. However, as we stated in addressing the Pittsburgh city managers of Harry Kalmine's Warner division, the readability of the Managers' Round Table section depends to a great extent on stressing the manager's exploitation and advertising ideas rather than his personal virtues. And by so doing, we are now receiving campaigns from showmen who have not previously contributed for fear of being charged with the crime of "three sheeting."

When the occasion arises, we are prompt to suggest the spotlight for those contributors displaying unusual showmanship, but for the most part, ladies and gentlemen, the platform of your Club is not "who," but "what."

SOME FUN, HEH?

For one of those Ripley believe-it-or-nots, we refer you folks to Jim Cunningham's Code Question Box on page 54, of the October 13 issue, Query No. 78, wherein a doorman, who, to judge from his complaint, has been doing everything around the place but produce the pictures, states that he is entitled by the calibre of his duties to receive what he mistakenly assumes to be the code-designated minimum executive salary of $35 instead of the $16 he now gets.

We refer you further to this misplaced theatreman's refreshing statement regarding the manager, who it seems appears at the theatre for about a half hour each day, giving the doorman the run of the house otherwise, but refusing to give him anything else. In other words, a marvelous showman on the job, but just another hand on the payroll.

Well, if Jim Cunningham cares to sound us out on the merits of the case, we think that the manager is an awful sucker to even argue the question. Any showman fortunate enough to have captured so rare a treasure should place him under lock and key and go fishin'.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Two-Color "Love" Flash

Mike Newman, who does the exploiting for Columbia Pictures on the West Coast, takes the bows for a half-page eight-column full, two-color smash on "One Night of Love" at the New Spreckles, San Diego, Cal. The ad took the form of a giant billboard in front of which were drawn interested crowds, board containing circular half-tone of Grace Moore, accompanying copy reverse white on red.

Anna Bell Ward Makes Woolsey Kentucky Colonel

With this contribution, we welcome Anna Bell Ward, Phoenix Amusement Co., Lexington, Ky., back to the club pages after her recent illness. The accompanying photo shows George Stevens, director; Col. C. C. Pettijohn, Robert Woolsey and a "stand-in" for Anna Bell.

The occasion is the appointment of both Wheeler and Woolsey as colonels on Governor Laffoon's staff. Incidentally this is ace exploitation on "Kentucky Kernels."

Woolsey Becomes a Kentucky Colonel

"Happiness Week" Planned On "Happiness Ahead"

That's quite a thorough job that Charlie Einfeld's ad crew has done in turning out the commendable press book on Warners' "Happiness Ahead," the main feature of the exploitation being built around a detailed outline for a "Happiness Week" which is due to break about the time of the picture's national release date. The idea includes a pledge cards distributed by exhibitors in which patrons will be urged to perform some deed that will spread happiness.

Other interesting exploitation includes complete layout for co-op page, four national tieups and a score of other angles to further the campaigns that have already been planned in many different spots.

Also of interest, especially at this time, is an unemployed campaign fostered by the theatremen in conjunction with various local organizations and should receive further encouragement from the many better housing movements to which it might be attached.

Field Ties Schools On "Limberlost"

A tie-up put over by acting manager Seth Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine, for "Girl of Limberlost," resulted in high school students submitting as their English assignment a written review of either the movie or the book. Special poster was planted in study room.

Another grammar school tieup permitted the dismissal of classes one-half hour earlier to catch show with school busses, which called for children after break.

Bannered truck with foliage trim toured streets with boys distributing weekly programs and public library used theatre announcements on tables in reading rooms.

"Peck" Book Front Attracts At Roxy

To emphasize the lasting popularity of the story from which the picture was adapted, Morris Kinzler's Roxy theatre publicists, under the supervision of Managing Director Irving Lesser, executed two 36-foot displays for the front, done in the manner of an open book (see photo) with endorsement of Jackie Cooper in boyish scroll.

Two weeks in advance of the opening, life-sized enlargements and 40 by 60 sepia photos were displayed in the foyer and a week ahead, Sol Lesser, the producer, was host at a dinner and press preview. Broadcasting over the regular Roxy hour and tieup with the R. H. Macy Boys' Club also helped to spread the word.

Through arrangement with the local Hays office, a special preview was also put on for members of important P. T. A. and church organizations. In addition a party was staged for the Boys' Club of New York, bulletins to this effect being carried in all local branches.

As an extra lobby attraction on the opening three days, free candy was promoted and distributed to each child attending and a clown act was also arranged for the lobby crowds waiting for seats. Displays of the miniature editions of the book were also made by various ten cent stores.

With the cooperation of the Salvation Army, an old clothes matinee for children was planned and other practical ideas scheduled were orphans' parties and a "father and son" banquet, the strength of the general campaign being credited for the hold over of the picture.

Endorsement Used As Ad on "Cristo"

The local endorsement slant was given another twist in Richmond, Va., a short time ago, when General Manager O'Brien of Wilmer and Vincent received a strong plug in letter form on "Count of Monte Cristo" from a well known local automobile executive.

The letter spoke of the writer's appreciation on viewing the picture in another city and expressed his pleasure on learning it was to be shown at the National in Richmond, not neglecting to mention the date. The communication was reproduced as a newspaper ad with no further comment.

Different and effective.

JAMES M. TOTMAN

Star Aids Totman On "Dames" Contest

Among the excellent ideas put over by Jimmy Totman for his Quigley prize winning campaign on "Dames" at the Warner, Erie, Pa., no doubt the most unusual was the 11-day contest put on with one of his papers in which the winning girl was sent to Pittsburgh to interview Dick Powell, appearing at the Stanley Theatre there.

Trip was offered for the best 50-word letter on why girls wanted to be motion picture writers and desired to make trip to Pittsburgh. Paper broke two-column stories every day, and after winner interviewed Powell ran front page, three-column cut of girl and star plus by-line story, all of which tied into the date at the Warner. Besides this smart break, Jimmy also connected for two other contests, one a classified and the other the musical memory idea. Advance advertising was also well handled with underline for 12 days ahead and advance gratis publicity and cuts landed daily during this length of time. Old Gold and Borden snipes were planted on many windows, doorknob hangars and heralds distributed, badges worn by house employees two weeks ahead and cashiers put in a plug for the date at the end of every phone call.

Secures Elaborate Float

Radio broadcasts at various times were secured and Totman further employed the air by having bannered planes fly over town dropping heralds. Prominently spotted windows were also arranged.

Totman also exercised ingenuity in obtaining an elaborate float used by local company in recent parade to celebrate discovery of Pennsylvania oil. The bally was borrowed, refashioned at a cost of a few dollars, and excited lots of admiration. The lobby display was also in keeping.

The above are the highlights of this ace campaign topping raft of other commendable stunts that covered most every possible angle and boosted Jimmy's final rating.

CELEBRITIES ATTEND AWARD CEREMONIES

Joe E. Brown Presents Plaque to James M. Totman Before Annual Variety Club Banquet

by A-MIKE VOGEL

With the generous cooperation of Harry M. Kalmine, Johnny Harris, Joe Feldman, Harold Lund and a host of other well-wishers, the Quigley Award for September was presented to Manager James M. Totman by Joe E. Brown in a ceremony that took place before the annual Variety Club banquet in Pittsburgh on Sunday night, October 14.

In the presence of a host of motion picture prominents and celebrities from other fields, the famed Warner star congratulated Jimmy on his determination that brought him the big prize on his fourth entry in the Quigley competitions.

Unusual was the setting of the September presentation, marking the first time that so many names of the industry were on hand to honor a Quigley winner. In addition to Mr. Brown the following were present: Messrs. Joseph Bernhard, General Managar, Warner Theatres; Harry M. Kalmine, Pittsburgh Warner Theatres zone director and past-president, Variety Club; William Rogers, Sales Manager, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures; Bert Wheeler and Regis Toomey, RKO Radio stars; James "Rip" Collins, of the St. Louis Cardinals; Louis Nizer, well known film attorney, and Tom Fordham, Warner Theatres' Northwest Pennsylvania chief, in whose district the winner is located.

Looking on were many theatremen from Pittsburgh and the surrounding area who hastened to add their congratulations to the barrage of handshakes Jimmy received from almost everyone present. To judge from the buzz of comment, it was a highly enjoyed event and a high spot in Totman's theatre career.

Pittsburgh District Visited

The presentation, though important, was but part of our program in the Pittsburgh area where we covered lots of territory in addition to attending the Variety Club party. Meeting up with Joe Feldman at the Warner Theatres' headquarters on the Friday morning previous to the dinner, we had the long deferred pleasure of meeting Harry Kalmine, and that worthy in turn introduced us to the assemblage of managers at a gathering that was called to allow us the privilege of addressing the members.

Among those present were C. J. Latta, District Manager, Warner city theatres; Harry Kendricks, Bill Schell, Paul Schell, Cress Smith, Sid Jacobs, Sam Gould, Harry Koch, Bill Hock, Ed Siegel, J. A. MacDonald, Bill Barron, Eddie Johns, Joe Blowitz and Dick Brown. We renewed acquaintances with a number of these members and also had the pleasure of greeting others whom we had met through these pages.

Discussing the Quigley Awards, in answer to a query by Mr. Latta, we assured the members that equal consideration is given by the judges to all entries regardless of how they are presented. In this respect, attention was called to the fact that the campaigns of a number of winners had been submitted with little or no thought to their artistic layout.

Then came a stop at Joe Feldman's publicity department, where, aided by Don Wermuth and artist Sam Stern, Joe keeps the advertising heat turned on for the 60 odd theatres in the division. To lunch, then, after a pause at the deluxe Stanley, where we met up with Bill Scott.

In the afternoon, popped in on Johnny Harris to talk over old times and to arrange details of the Award presentation. Then to Loew's Penn to greet old friend Mike Cullen, to Johnny Harris' newly opened Alvin to see Round Tabler George Tyson, and then to our old stamping ground, the Paramount Exchange, to greet Eddie Fontaine, Harry Goldstein, Dave Kimmelman, Ed Stuve and other showmen on Film Row.

The Variety Club party, of course, gave us the opportunity of greeting many of the members from out of town that otherwise we could not have met, and among those were Ken Grimes, George Sarvis, Tom Whyte, Dick England, Fuzzy Knight, Tory Cavallo, Abe Halle, Bill Decker, Sam De Fassio, Bill Leggiero and Herman Stahl. We also saw and chatted with Karl Krug, Pittsburgh Press picture editor, and Harold Cohen, who handles the screen and stage for the Post-Gazette.

Of course there were scores of others, but in this large assemblage they were hard to find and to them we express our regrets. See you all the next time.

DEADLINE FOR OCTOBER ENTRIES

Contestants in this month's Quigley Awards competition receive the benefit of an extra day's grace due to Election Day, which moves back the deadline for October campaigns to midnight of Thursday, November 8. This means that all entries to receive consideration must be at Quigley headquarters at or before that time and should be mailed early.

In a tiein with a leading Cleveland radio station, Frank Harpster, Ohio, Mansfield, Ohio, worked with one of his local papers to successfully put over a radio talent contest for two nights at the theatre, winners landing trip to Cleveland and audition at station.

Frank secured excellent front page breaks in advance and during the trials from the theatre stage where contestants did their acts over a microphone. Over 100 were said to have entered, six winners being chosen.

Weiss Ties Song Hit To Hardware Display

That was a very smart campaign put over by Manager Al Weiss, on "Dames" at the Olympia, Miami, Fla., an indication of which was in ingenious tieup with a hardware store on the songs in the picture. Al took the "Girl at the Ironing Board" number and tied it up by planting a girl at an actual ironing board in the hardware window (see photo) with music broadcast from attached P. A. system and loud speakers.

In addition to a number of the national press book tieups, Al planted banners on awnings of all important corners and intersections and as a further street bally had two carloads of attractive girls driven around the city, cars carrying theatre banners.

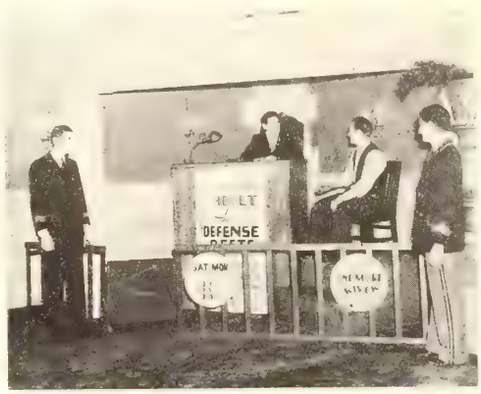
Bostonians Pose With Lloyd Cutout

For those who wanted to have their pictures taken with Harold Lloyd, Harry Brown, Jr., and Martin Glazer, who handled the "Cat's Paw" date at the Paramount and Fenway, Boston, provided a commendable substitute with a life size cutout of the comic. Adults as well as juveniles hastened to accept the invite (see photo) all wearing the trick glasses that were distributed as novelties.



Effective also was the street bally of a truck on which were mounted heads of the stars and caricature cutouts of cats, all of which moved with the motion of the truck. Children were further contacted at playgrounds with a contest herald in which they were invited to draw Lloyd's head from number to number as designated. The gag was also helped along by the newspapers. Bus promoted from one of the big companies was used to carry patrons to theatre free of charge, the bannered bus making different sections each day.

Reported to have been one of the most profitable campaigns in the entire zone was Frank Boucher's drive on "Here Comes the Navy," at the Maryland, Hagerstown, in which Frank availed himself of the State Convention of Elks being held at that time to make a special plug for attendance from the members of the order.

Decorated float was placed in Elks' parade and commented upon in newspaper stores. Beechnut drops were also promoted and distributed by uniformed girls, and, too, in costume was Boucher's entire house staff. Western Union was also tied in by use of inserts in all outgoing messages and booth in lobby (see photo) in which patrons were invited to send wires locally telling friends how much they enjoyed the picture.

"Extra" Plugs Navy

Manager Floyd Fitzsimmons, Grove, Freeport, Long Island, had front page of local newspapers over-printed in red letters on "Here Comes the Navy." Employing the loudest newsboy yellers, he had them shouting "Extra," and distributing papers in all sections of city. Since the Morro Castle disaster became known that morning, people connected the idea and grabbed the papers. These of course were free, being week old issues.

Tubbert Invites Teachers To "Cristo" Premiere

For his premiere of "Count of Monte Cristo," William Tubbert, Keith's Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., sent special invitations to the English department heads of all local high schools and the university.

Tie-up with schools and libraries resulted in distribution of book marks; special cards were circulated in house to house canvass and others placed in parked autos. Postcards were mailed to school teachers recommending "Cristo" as an excellent picture and one worthy of discussion in classrooms.

ADVISES "DO IT YOURSELF"

Personal Constant Supervision Of Manager Vitally Important In Successful House Operation

by LIONEL H. KEENE
Loew's Southern Representative

There is a very old, but true saying to the effect if you want anything well done you must do it yourself, and it applies directly to the theatre manager, who must give his house his personal supervision and attention if he wishes it to become successful in the highest degree.

I have been of the impression since the decentralization of the larger theatre organizations, the term "Managing Director" had again become Manager, in the sense the theatre operation was now receiving his personal attention; that he is actually working. I am obviously laboring under a misapprehension as I discover a manager now and then who knows all the answers as to what is wrong with show business, even the reason why his theatre is in the red, but does nothing to try improve his situation. "Give me the pictures, and I'll give you some business," is his final retort. I really feel sorry for this type of Manager—he is a detriment to his company.

Is Against "One Man" Operation

One chap brags he has perfected such a splendid personnel, there is little for him to do—other than direct. "I get to the theatre early each morning," says he, "get everyone of the organization set as to their duties for the day—and play golf in the afternoon. The 'boss' wants me to do it. Why, do you know, I can accomplish more for my firm in eighteen holes than I could putting in this time at the theatre."

The manager was right in one respect—organization is most important. Individual service on the part of each employee should be encouraged. Every department of theatre operation should be efficient. Each one of the theatre's personnel should be assigned certain daily duties, and held accountable for the results. True, a theatre manager should not be a "one man organization." But there are so many minute details that appeal to his experienced eye, and so many minor matters which he, by his close observation, becomes cognizant of, that it is of vital importance he give his house his personal supervision constantly.

It is also true in many instances, these affairs are, when taken up, individually, of small consequence, but collectively they represent the difference between success and failure, and it is by giving each and every one of them the actual amount of attention that is due, that the manager is enabled to offer his patrons a nearly perfect theatre operation, eliminating and remedying those manifold little defects and objections which are sure to appear with unceasing regularity.

The manager who is—or should be—in closest touch with his patrons, wisely exerts his strenuous efforts to provide them with perfect pleasure, in which there shall not be the slightest flaw or shortcoming to mar their unalloyed enjoyment. This, indeed, is perhaps the greater part of his labors and study, and is generally his highest ambition. When he is able to see for himself that everything is right, and is satisfied in his own mind that his house is being conducted in the best possible manner, and is providing the best program possible, properly presented, his gratification is complete and his greatest capability reached.

Laxness Fault of Manager

Permit here the relation of an incident between a theatre circuit head and one of his representatives. The representative was suddenly taken ill on the opening of a theatre at which the owner was present. Confined to his room, abed, the owner, always sympathetic, and appeciative of splended service, suggested this representative take a vacation in the interest of good health—perhaps a boat trip. The representative would have none of it—there was much to do! Theatre head remarked certainly there must be some one of his organization who could carry on in his absence, but the representative just would not have it that way. The owner retorted: "Then, all I can say is, you're just a bad manager." To shorten the story, the representative took the trip—the work was well done—proving he did have an efficient organization.

Good organization is important! Good organization isn't possible, however, without the constant surveillance of the guiding head. It requires constant application on the part of the Manager to every little detail of his theatre operation. He must set an example for the rest of the personnel. A lax employee is the cue for a lax manager. You can, in most instances, tell whether the manager is on the job when you walk into his theatre. And you dislike the type of operation where it is necessary to give your name, and state the nature of your business before you can see the manager, who should be available to all callers at all times.

You read in a theatre's campaign where the manager had a number of window tie-ups—let's say, on books or music. It sounds great in type, but here's actually in one instance what it was: for illustration, a book tieup. The books were in the window all right, but the announcement consisted of a piece of cardboard, about 11x14, with rough copy by the lobby artist to the effect "Read the Book—then see such and such picture, at so and so theatre." If I recall correctly, the book publishers got out a card the theatre could have used for this purpose. If it was not available, then certainly the window tieup deserved more consideration. Merchants will not be interested in cooperative tieups unless their class is in keeping with their business. So the next time you contact this merchant, he politely declines, but doesn't tell you the real reason.

Wolfe Starts "Pals Clubs" in Canada

J. S. Wolfe, of B. & F. Theatres, Toronto, Canada, who has been publicized before in these columns on his success with children's clubs, now reports on the details of his new "Pals. Club" which have been introduced profitably in eleven B. & F. theatres, especially in regaining the confidence of parents who have been keeping children away from the theatre.

The object behind the forming of this club was twofold, Wolfe states, to devote a Saturday matinee performance for children, and secondly to show special educational features in conjunction with juvenile programs. In this respect, great care is taken to revamp the weekend program or any portion not suited to this purpose.

To wear the button of the club, children are requested to pledge themselves to six rulings, intended to inculcate the principles of righteous living and thinking, and violators are placed on probation. Membership cards are punched each week and those having a perfect ten-week attendance are to be invited to a big free Christmas party.

In conjunction with the showings, many educational withal interesting contests are put on, such as spelling bees, history or geography contests in addition to the usual talent shows promoted from local dancing classes. Pet shows, model airplane contests and doll shows are also slated to keep the club activities interesting to the members.

Wolfe has further planned to invite speakers from home and school clubs, service organizations, juvenile court officials, local scout masters and other sources.

Worthy projects such as canned goods and vegetable matinees with proceeds to the poor and cod liver oil purchased with a percentage of the matinee receipts on allotted days and distributed through such organizations as the Lions Club will also be undertaken. The Club is counting on the cooperation of Scouts and Cubs, home and school clubs and others.

An incentive to regular attendance at the Club meetings will be the privilege of regular members to invite their parents as guests of the Club to evening performances at the theatre from time to time.

Bernfield Arranges Juvenile Air Show

What has become an excellent exclusive buildup for United Artists' features in the Kansas City, Mo., territory is the radio tieup effected by Bernie Bernfield, U. A. publicist in that area. Sponsored by a local department store, each Saturday morning 15-minute programs are put on by the store's troupe, called the Joanne Taylor Strolling Juvenile Players, the broadcasts being composed from material supplied by Bernie.

The group range in age from 9 to 12 and present their version of the United Artists' features shown at Johnny McManus' Midland Theatre. Silly Symphonies are also utilized, permission for their inclusion having been obtained from Walt Disney.

Bernfield reports that the cast was only four at the start, but since then the popularity of the program has necessitated the addition of many other players. Extra entertainment is provided by a group of young singers and players.

Fan mail received indicates the growing popularity of this broadcast and as the programs are timed to coincide with the pictures shown at the Midland, credit has been given the idea for adding to the grosses of these showings.

Waterson Ties Up Store On "Treasure" Hunt

R. W. Waterson, Rivoli Theatre, Michigan City, Ind., arranged a tieup with a local department store on "Treasure Island" whereby each child received a gigantic (14x22) colored ticket carrying theatre copy, merchant plug and instructions re the treasure hunt on one side and the reverse, free admission.

Only restrictions were that the ticket was not to be folded, thereby insuring a walking ad as kids marched to theatre with their "admissions" prominently displayed. Store paid five cents towards each child's ticket.

Waterson also sold officials of local amusement park on reducing admission for children the day of the hunt and further promoted prizes from the park.

HINDS SCORES STAR-RATING

Majority of Pictures Receiving Four-Star Ratings Fail to Click, States Wisconsin Round Tabler

by FRED HINDS
Strand, Whitewater, Wisconsin

Bill Shakespeare opined quite a number of years ago that "the play's the thing." While movies were not very well known in William's youth and, in spite of the fact that they wore short pants, men were still running things, the bard's statement is just as true today as then. The great American difficulty seems to be in knowing just when the proper play is playing. About the poorest place to find out is the written words of an individual commentator on a daily newspaper or a magazine. They're not critics . . .

It takes a lion's share of egotism to set oneself up as a guide to proper screen fare. Exhibitors know a great deal more about it than critics. So do producers. We admit we are not capable . . . uutil after the film has shown. Most professional critics will not admit it even when the nation's box-offices have proven them decidedly wrong.

If we ever met a "down-to-earth" reviewer . . . one who keeps the movie masses in mind . . . the shock might be serious. The vast majority of criticisms are directed to the intelligentsia . . . who never read them. This element comprises less than five per cent of theatre patronage. It is obvious the other ninety-five per cent are more interested . . . but nobody is writing reviews for them!

Says Stars Penalize Pictures

Coming down to cases, Liberty's star system of rating seems to be popular. Dozens of other publications have copied it. It has its value to exhibitors, when properly deduced. For instance, when the critic gives a picture one, two or three stars, we have reason to expect some box-office success. When a subject is awarded four stars we approach its opening play date with trepidation. The current Liberty lists eleven four-star features. Among them are but two box-office successes. Our ten-year-old daughter could strike as good an average. There is no reliable guide to motion pictures, including the entire industry itself, except the opinion of the great American public, as expressed by their payment of money to see popular treatises. While Liberty's critic, like others, caters to what showmen call the "high-brow" element, that magazine's circulation most emphatically does not.

Lacking a daily newspaper in this situation, we have repeatedly been requested for box-office failures because "they got four stars in Liberty." When advised, as was often the case, that the picture was under contract and was being paid for but not exhibited because it could only be done at a financial sacrifice, the inquirer looked askance — mentally reserving the number one padded cell for us at a leading Wisconsin institution.

It is readily contended that every reviewer endeavors to give an honest personal opinion. But it can only be one of millions . . . and not of any more significance. People who are guided in their selection of motion picture entertainment by an individual critic are to be pitied.

Some day some smart editor will discover that box-office reports, garnered from every corner of the country, from big cities, medium cities and small towns, are the accurate barometer to a picture's popularity — as trade publications have long since discovered. He will not have an individual opinion then; he will have the opinion of the nation!

This contributor is admittedly broad-minded in the matter of motion picture publicity. Advertising is still advertising . . . even though it may be a bit unfavorable at times. As the Senatorial candidate said to the newspaper editor: "I don't give a darn whether you boost me or knock me—but say something!" Ours is a curious world. Curiosity is the greatest single drawing factor the screen possesses. My theatre has not shown a single "banned" picture during the past four months that has not produced cash results considerably over the average.

Liberty's contention that their analytical department is a help to the industry is undoubtedly correct . . . purely from a standpoint of publicity. Their avowal that it is a guide to box-office value is extremely funny. One cannot help but be accidentally right once in a while. Consequently, ten per cent of their "four-star" pictures are four-star at the box-office. But it's kind of tough on the other ninety per cent. It causes theatre attaches to do so much explaining—most of which theatre patrons do not believe.

Metro's national advertising policy . . . which their agents are now placing and for which their exhibitor accounts are now paying . . . should prove a commendable enterprise. On so broad a scale it cannot help but create desire in the minds of potential patrons. It might, however, be a good suggestion to concentrate now and then on some of the lesser attractions. Their need of selling far outweighs that of "Treasure Island," "Chained" and "The Barretts of Wimpole Street."

Stars are essential to the motion picture industry on the silver sheet; they're rather ridiculous in connection with an attraction's value to its customers.

Helson's Cake Recipes

As an advance on his showing of "Servants' Entrance" at the Dickinson, Beloit, Kan., Manager R. S. Helson got up a clever novelty herald directed to women patrons, reading: "Ladies! LET THESE SERVICES HELP YOU REMODEL

MAINTENANCE TABS: This is one of the most valued departments in Better Theatres, since it deals with those details of physical operation confronting the theatre owner and manager every day. Conducted as a service by J. T. Knight, Jr., in conjunction with his regular feature articles on broader aspects of maintenance and operation, Maintenance Tabs cheerfully offers expert counsel in all problems concerning the physical functions of the theatre, and these are inevitably involved in many remodeling plans—particularly those carried out with a Federal Housing loan. Are you going to improve the ventilation of your theatre? Add cooling equipment? Install new plumbing? Make rearrangements for new apparatus? Mr. Knight will be glad to help you in all such matters. Merely write Better Theatres, giving full details concerning conditions affecting your problem, and your inquiry will be turned over to Mr. Knight for his immediate attention and an early answer.

J. T. Knight, Jr., is acknowledged to be one of America's leading building maintenance and operating engineers, and nearly fifteen years of his experience has been in the motion picture theatre field. He is an accredited engineer in mechanics, electricity and air conditioning, and has been in charge of all types and classes of theatres in every phase of their physical operation. Earlier he was also a theatre manager.

PLANNING THE THEATRE: This is an architectural service which has been used by hundreds of exhibitors and contractors—even by architects—in many parts of the world. It has been conducted for a number of years as a department in Better Theatres for the sole purpose of giving reliable, honest professional advice to those planning to build or to remodel motion picture theatres. The architect in charge—Peter M. Hulsken—is a member of the American Institute of Architects and a specialist in designing and constructing theatres. He is particularly well fitted to understand the problems met in planning or remodeling a theatre at the lowest possible cost because of his extensive experience in small communities. Mr. Hulsken will be happy to help you plan the remodeling you wish to undertake with a Federal Housing loan. Merely write Better Theatres. Only your initials will be used to identify Mr. Hulsken's reply appearing in the following issue.

Peter M. Hulsken studied Architecture in Amsterdam and Paris. He has been practicing his profession in the United States, however, for many years, during which time he has been associated with leading architectural firms in New York and Chicago. Since 1909 he has maintained his own office. Although the architect of many structures of varied purposes, he has specialized in theatre design.

Better Theatres

1790 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Efforts are being made by a number of industrial groups to have the government liberalize interpretations of the Federal Housing Act to permit loans for the purchase of a greater variety of equipment and furnishings. Rulings made on the basis that no loan can be made for the purchase of material that is "removable" have occasionally been guilty of some hair-splitting worthy of the most subtle academician, whereas what the government is after—what the nation is seeking—is a chance to stimulate business and at the same time to improve properties too long neglected.

The fact is, remodeling can scarcely be attempted without the important inclusion of new equipment and furnishings. Particularly is this true in the motion picture business, in which every function of the building integrally involves operating apparatus—in which improvement of any kind can scarcely be thought of without contemplating attendant changes in furnishings that, while removable in a sheerly physical sense, yet frequently must be fashioned precisely for a specific theatre.

In this respect, the motion picture theatre may differ substantially from other classes of buildings. If so, its points of difference should be taken into consideration in the application to it of the national housing program. Let clear-cut, real removability apply here as elsewhere, but it should not apply to equipment and furnishings which are functionally an indispensable attachment to the theatre property as an operating unit.

On the other hand, we need not minimize the potential benefits of the Housing Act in the theatre field. In the first place, the amount of money allowed each theatre is not large enough to cover a comprehensive remodeling effort, and with certain classes of equipment avowedly eligible already, an effective job can be done in a great many instances. And let theatre owners be assured that in taking out a loan they are not assuming the usual role of debtor. The government views the housing program as a co-operative venture for the benefit of all through its benefit to the individual. Viewing conditions that the Act is intended to meet, the FHA has declared:

"The situation presents an opportunity and a challenge. The opportunity is not merely to stop the destruction of property values, but also to provide employment for hundreds of thousands of those workers who have suffered most severly from the depression.

"Approximately 4,000,000 men and women, formerly employed either in the construction industry itself or in allied or contributing industries, are suffering from lack of employment in their accustomed fields. These millions of unemployed form a substantial portion of those who, during the first five months of 1934 through one form or another of relief and emergency employment, required the expenditure of many millions of public funds each month, all of which must be recouped by taxation.

"Normally, a large proportion of these millions of specialized workers would be hired directly or indirectly by property owners to maintain their property in good condition. If such work is undertaken at once, the effect on unemployment will be cumulative. Manufacturers of building materials and other durable goods will in turn employ additional workers; the transportation industry will receive its share in business revival, and purchasing power in general will be augmented. Such increased purchasing power, once circulating with requisite velocity, will mean increased business for banks, local merchants, professional groups, and others in service activities"—including, of course, theatres.

Continuing, the FHA has pointed out: "To date, adequate credit has been lacking. First, the liquid assets of property owners in general have been depleted. They, therefore, have been unable to provide collateral which would safeguard our banks and other financial institutions in extending them credit. Second, the current incomes of many property owners, while better assured than they were, may not be sufficiently assured to be accepted by financial institutions as a basis for credit in the absence of collateral. Third, unsecured personal loans, of adequate term for the purpose needed, even to bona fide property owners of highest integrity, have not provided sufficient liquidity to meet the proper requirements of good banking practice.

"The National Housing Act provides the means to bridge this gap. It enables financial institutions to make investments having the same degree of security and liquidity as is possessed by their best collateral loans. The plan thus makes it safe for financial institutions to provide the necessary credit for work of the greatest community and social value."

Whatever the conditions prompting this statement, they exist nowhere with greater force than in the motion picture theatre field—this by every acknowledgment within the industry itself. Then, too, few businesses feel so quickly and acutely a decrease in the purchasing power which follows quickly any recession in trade. We think the housing program credit offers the theatre business a twofold opportunity to help itself.—G. S.

SOME POINTERS ON RECONSTRUCTION

By S. CHARLES LEE

A leading theatre architect discusses an important phase of remodeling from the point of view of safe economy

IF YOU WANT to get something for nothing in your remodeling, don't read this article, because it's all about structural matters, which form the bugaboo of all remodeling programs. Wouldn't it be fine if foundations, supporting walls, posts and columns could be eliminated, and the building be supported by invisible hooks attached to stationary clouds? Then as an additional feature, have all walls and floors of an elastic material, so that when the attendance is small an intimate house could be obtained, and be converted for deluxe facilities on those rare nights when you present a film that lives up to the salesman's promises? As all of that is just an Utopian dream we will have to find a more substantial way of meeting conditions.

The main idea in most all building or rehabilitation programs is to create what I call "eye wash"—make nothing look like something—and I say that this is right. But every once in a while a building must be considered from the standpoint that a structural failure means a lawsuit, or that sometimes to make the building look right, structural changes must be considered. If such is the case, you had better reconcile yourself to the fact that you will, no doubt, exceed a $2,000 government loan unless you are extremely careful.

Before starting on any structural changes, take a tip and get an architect or structural engineer with plenty of structural experience to give you an opinion before doing any cutting. I recently saw a doorway cut through a wall that happened to be a combination reinforced concrete beam and dividing wall! The cutting of this simple doorway made it necessary to shore up a large building and replace the damaged girder. While the cost of cutting the doorway was only $25, it cost $75,000 to replace the damage, as the building had been undermined.

If you are doing only a small job, you can get such an opinion for $10 or $15 if there is no further work to be done, and even if apparently wasted, this is very cheap insurance.

Now, what structural changes are apt to be encountered in a remodeling program? I have run into many, some of which I list below:

(1) Increase Balcony Capacity.
(2) Change Stairways.
(3) Add Stage Capacity.
(4) Eliminate Orchestra Pits.
(5) Change Pitch of Balcony.
(6) Remove Columns from under Existing Balcony.
(7) Remove Columns in Fronts.
(8) Change Pitch of Main Floor.

Taking these items in the order in which I have mentioned them above, I will try and name some of the problems that develop with these changes.

ENLARGING BALCONY

We recently increased the capacity of two balconies, one a house of 50-foot width, and one 97 feet in width. The 50-foot house was relatively simple. I built a plate girder extending from one wall to the other, supported at either end by a new column set within the existing walls. This permitted the extension of the balcony by introducing short beams from the existing balcony construction, and I allowed the plate girder to be plastered in, making the front wall of the balcony rail. This was quite inexpensive and allowed the addition of three new rows to the balcony, which were valuable because of a new ordinance permitting smoking in the balcony.

Care, of course, must be taken in adding to a balcony front, to check the sightlines before any of this work begins. This can be done by setting a stick at the back row of the main floor and attaching a string to this stick at eye level, running the string to the upper part of the screen. This will tell you exactly whether the balcony will cut off the line of vision of the rear rows.

In the second case mentioned, where a wider house had a balcony addition, it became a very complicated procedure, for either columns had to be built under the balcony, or two trusses (running parallel with the back wall supporting new cantilever beams) were necessary in order to eliminate columns. Unless you have room under the balcony to gain sightlines with a considerable increase of balcony capacity, I would not recommend this type of alteration under average operating conditions.

CHANGING STAIRWAYS

It is not uncommon to change ramps to stairways, and in some cases stairways to ramps. If the construction of the building is not fireproof, where wood framing can be used on secondary supporting members, this is a relatively simple task, but if the building is of concrete construction, it involves quite an engineering complication, and in some cases a stairway, irrespective of height, must be carried from the ground up and have a separate footing for the stair itself.

ADDING TO STAGE

In this day increasing stage capacities is not a common occurrence, but we recently made a very satisfactory platform by extending the apron 8 feet forward. Of course, this did not give us increased scenic space, but it was a very economical procedure. A traveling curtain was made that operated on a circular track, closing in the entire projecting apron portion.

ELIMINATING PITS

Extending my sympathies to the musicians' union, I must admit that we have floored over many orchestra pits. In the average community we have been allowed to shore up with wood framing and floor the pit over with a wood floor. In addition to increasing seating capacity it eliminates an unattractive void space in front of the proscenium arch, which is usually nothing more than a rubbish collector.

CHANGING BALCONY PITCH

It is not uncommon to change the pitch of a balcony, and if the balcony is too flat, we have been allowed in most localities to frame a new wood floor over the old space. If your desire is to lower the pitch of the balcony, you are usually in trouble, as the cantilevers holding this construction are generally at the base of the space, and unless the balcony has been framed in of wood you are up against a structural problem that should be expertly handled.

REMOVING COLUMNS

Removing columns from under balconies is one of the most important changes required in old houses. Describing in general what construction this necessitates, I would say that the average condition would require a truss built from one side of the theatre to the other at the approximate same locations that the columns now exist. If you have depth enough from the lower side of the balcony to the under side of the space, you will be able to accomplish this alteration without unreasonable cost, as the truss could be shored in place, taking the same loads that the columns now support, and might not necessitate reframing of other parts of the balcony.

Many of the old houses have columns coming into the center of the lobby space, some of them passing through the box

DECIDING WHAT AN FHA LOAN CAN DO

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

An attempt to devise an inspection procedure that will show how to get the most out of $2,000

FOR THE LAST several years, in every talk or discussion with theatre operators, the ultimate inquiry has been, "How can we spend money on our theatres when the banks won't lend and we are barely grossing expenses?" Our government has answered that through the National Housing Act. Theatre owners have no alibi now for leaky roofs, noisy fans, inefficient and dangerous heating plants, cracked plaster and rusty marquees.

Now with $2,000 available the great question is how to spend it so as to get the greatest benefit from it? This confronts every manager, as well as owner, because the owner will to a great extent expect intelligent suggestions, supported by sound reason, from each of his managers. Of course, no one short of a genius can sit in a certain city and indicate to each theatre manager in this great country the most advantageous part of, or spot in, his theatre to bolster up. The ravages of wear and tear during the last three or four years have left many locations in each theatre that really need attention badly. The choice finally must follow a careful study of each particular theatre operation. I shall try to put myself in the manager's situation and outline the exact procedure that I would follow, in order to be sure that my decisions would be right.

FINDING OUT WHAT CAN BE DONE

First, I would inspect the theatre building from the structural point of view. Many contractors, through advertisements in town or neighborhood papers, have indicated their complete willingness to assist in making such surveys. I would call in such an individual to accompany me on an inspection trip. I would start in with the roof of the house tank and go right down to the lowest room in the basement, making careful note of every structural condition that came to my attention which to me was not a right condition. With the help of the contractor I would get a quick estimate of the cost of making the corrections necessary. I would get the contractor's opinion, which would be combined with my own judgment, as to which items might safely be disregarded for at least another year, which items were of secondary importance, and which items were of primary or urgent importance. Then, thank the contractor for his assistance and tell him that you will let him hear from you later.

Second, I would make the same sort of careful and detailed inspection of the entire theatre starting from the curb line on the sidewalk and going clear through to the back wall, listing every existing condition that could possibly be considered as hazardous, which might under any conditions endanger the life or limb of patrons of the theatre. In compiling this list I would check over all insurance liability reports for the past couple of years and include all of those important items which have appeared as rather expensive to comply with, and on which we have been stalling off the insurance companies. Try to estimate the cost involved in completing each of these items, and again, classify them as future, secondary and primary importance.

Third, inspect in detail to determine the painting that is necessary: (a) exterior painting, (b) interior painting. Price each item and grade them into the three classes as to importance.

Fourth, in detail, and in company with your electrician or an electrical contractor, inspect the electrical layout of the entire theatre, to include both light and power lines, distribution boxes, panel boxes, fuse boxes, switch boxes and boards, motors and generators. List, price and rate each item as to its importance.

Fifth, get hold of a plumber and with him follow the same procedure in inspecting the plumbing and sanitary conditions in the theatre. By this time the job will be sort of getting on your nerves, but don't give up. List each item, with its price, and its rating as to importance.

Sixth, Fixed (un-removable) equipment is the next classification. Take your engineer, or a steam fitter, or some outside engineer, and study the heating plant, the ventilating system, and the pumps—include every item of stationary equipment. Again, list, price and rate each item as to urgency or importance.

Seventh, comes the most interesting group—improvements. List and get prices on each of those things which you have so many times during these years of "no money" wished for in your theatre—for instance, glass draft breaks on top of the standee rail; moving the box office to the sidewalk line; new, permanently installed lobby frames, or maybe a new, built-in shadow box. Don't skip anything. For the moment, let yourself believe that you have ten times two thousand dollars to spend.

When you have completed the program thus far you will know more about your theatre than anyone else. From all your lists draw off all "urgent" items of all classifications.

Consider carefully these "urgent" items. You have estimated costs on them all, so total up the costs and let us assume that the total comes to $5,000. Obviously you can't have them all done for $2,000. We must analyze this list further. Indicate on the list the outstanding items that represent badly deteriorated physical or structural conditions. Then remember your obligation for the safety of your patrons, and designate those items of vital importance in eliminating hazards. Next your duty is toward building up your box office intake. Indicate which items definitely have box office value. Finally, consider the items that improve the comfort of your patrons and designate the most imperative ones.

Take the total cost of all the items that you have indicated as a result of this last process of elimination. We will assume that it now totals up to $3,200.

With this list of items I would refer the specific items to at least two contractors doing that kind of work and get exact, "upset" price bids. In view of the fact that the first estimates were quickly arrived at, it is possible that you will find that the formal bid will only total $2,600, say, instead of $3,200. (Of course, it can move upwards instead of down.) From this list you must scratch off sufficient items to bring the total down to $2,000.

If you approach your problem in this way, at all times seeking advice and help from engineers, contractors, architects and decorators, I am sure that you will be satisfied in your decision and in the final results of your spending. I can think of no other way of determining the relative importance of repairing the boiler as against painting the marquee; of installing an air washer as against redecorating the lobby. Otherwise there are going to be instances resulting where managers or owners are going to be dissatisfied with the final effect of the $2,000 on the theatre property. I hope those will be few and that the government's helping hand to theatres will be actually reflected in improved conditions of theatres throughout the country.

PLANNING THE JOB: AN EXAMPLE

RATHER THAN generalize, perhaps it would be of greater help to assume a single, specific condition and point out, for purposes of practical illustration,

AIR CONDITIONING (answering S. E. M.): With no atmospheric data given in your letter, I have assumed the following conditions: Outside average January conditions: 74° dry bulb, 75% relative humidity, with 64° F. dew point; and the following desirable conditions inside the theatre: 70° F. dry bulb, 55% relative humidity with 54° F. dew point.

From the sketches I have calculated, as accurately as possible, the cubical contents of the auditorium (only the auditorium, not the stage or foyer), which is: 203,849.72 cubic feet.

From the above I believe that you should have a fan system capable of handling 67,616.57 cubic feet of air per minute. This seems high, I admit, but I believe it justifiable in these calculations, due to the fact that I am trying to advise you when actually you did not give enough information to work on.

The seating capacity is 945, assuming there are four seats for each box. In good practice it is assumed that each person gives off 300 sensible B.T.U.'s per hour, and 140 latent B.T.U.'s, a total of 440 B.T.U.'s. On the basis of outside conditions and quantities of air 525.77 latent B.T.U.'s must be removed and 292,103.4 sensible B.T.U.'s to be removed. The sum of all the B.T.U.'s to be removed is 708,429.17 per hour. 12,000 B.T.U.'s removed is equivalent to a ton of refrigeration.

Hence to air-condition your theatre, using mechanical refrigeration, you will require exactly 59 tons, or practically a 60-ton machine. I believe that it would cost you about $500 per ton installed in Buenos Aires, which means a $30,000 investment.

In these calculations I have not taken into consideration losses due to heat transmission of walls, floors, ceiling, etc., or exposed walls and sun effect. I had hoped to compensate for that by the rather substantial computations on volume of air handled per minute.

The check of this finding by several practical rule-of-thumb methods indicates that it is a very fair estimate. However, I do not recommend mechanical refrigeration air conditioning for this theatre. I do recommend adequate ventilation, 65,000 c.f.m., with air washer, which I believe could be installed for $11,000. For information as to the results you could expect from this type of system, I refer you to an article entitled, "Summer Comfort through Ventilation" in Better Theatres of April 7, 1934.

RINSE MARBLE: Rinse all marble or other porous stone floors with clear clean water before applying any soluble cleaning compound. Such preliminary rinsing retards the absorption of the cleaning solution into the pores of the floor material. It is the absorbing and later crystallization of the cleaning material in the floor material that causes the real damage to fine floors.

STEAM TRAPS: By this time your engineer should have opened, cleaned out (and replaced parts where necessary) every trap connected to the radiators and heating coils in your theatre. If this has not been done, do it now. Waste in steam results from dirty, poorly seated or damaged traps.

HEATING EXPENSE: The manager and the engineer of an obsolete heating plant are confronted with serious problems. If this statement fits your case don't try to solve your problems by neglecting proper maintenance in order to bring the cost of the operation of the boiler room down to where you think it should be. Old heating plants can't compete in efficient operation at low cost with the newer and more modern installations, and the curtailing of proper maintenance will only aggravate your problems and build up larger repair bills next year.

what might be done. Let's consider a theatre that is structurally sound and has no outstanding or serious hazardous condition. This last hot summer played havoc with many theatres throughout the country. This assumed theatre has a fan system, but it's somewhat out of date. It was installed back in the days of silent pictures when the question of noise level was of no great importance. As a consequence, when the show is on, the fans can only be run at half- or quarter-speed. There is no air washer in the theatre.

The provision of adequate ventilation with an air washer will mean money in the box office next summer, and, of course, increased comfort for the theatre patrons. Whereas an air washer has a cooling effect in the summer time, it has a humidifying effect in the winter time. Hence the theatre becomes more comfortable and more healthy during the winter months. In addition to these points, the use of an air washer does remove a fair percentage of the dust entrained in the air, and it provides enough moisture in the theatre to retard the cracking and peeling of paint and the cracking and loosening of plaster —especially plaster ornament.

In some theatres it well may seem an excellent plan to spend the $2,000 on reconditioning the ventilating system and in providing an air washer.

DECIDING ON CHANGES

What, for example, can be done with the fan and the motor that drive it? Well, we can rebalance the fan and install new bearings, and to quiet it down we can install new pulleys with any one of the various types of multi-rope belts. The fan can be speeded up to give more air into the auditorium by simply selecting the proper sizes of pulleys, for the motor and the fan. Larger oil or grease cups can be installed to protect the new bearings. To further eliminate noise we will put both the fan and the motor on cork, rubber or spring bases to absorb vibration. We may learn that we need more horsepower to drive the fan, locate some dealer in secondhand motors and make arrangements to turn in the old motor for one of the proper horsepower.

What can be done to the duct work? We may enlarge it or make it more efficient by taking out sharp angular bends and install sweeping bends. If it is noisy it can be braced or strengthened, or lined with a sound absorbing material. It may be transmitting mechanical noises from the fan, so we will remove two or three feet of it near the fan and replace it with heavy canvas. The distribution of air to the auditorium may be improved by installing new branch ducts, and great winter economy may be created by arranging for recirculating ducts, ducts so laid out that the fan draws some air from the theatre and delivers it again to the auditorium.

In addition to all of the above we will install the air washer—we will arrange to install it between the heating coils and the fan. An air washer has these parts:

An enclosed, large sheet metal box with water-tight joints, generally of cross-section area, about 2½ to 3 times as large as the main air duct. The bottom of this box up to a height of 18 to 20 inches, forms a tank for the air washer water. This tank must be equipped with an overflow drain pipe, as protection against overflow and also as a means of draining the tank for cleaning or repairing. Inside this metal box and above the water line is located one or more banks or framework of water pipe, to which are connected, in more or less symmetrical pattern, brass or bronze spray nozzles. From the bottom of the tank a pipe line connects to a centrifugal

NEW SCHEMES IN MODERN REMODELING

By EUGENE CLUTE

More information concerning materials and many more ideas for their use from a leading writer on design

A THEATRE should be more than an assemblage of unrelated and meaningless decorative treatments. The entrance should be an invitation, the foyer and inner lobby should induce a mood of pleasurable anticipation, the auditorium decoration should be a suitable accompaniment to the enjoyment of the picture, and the patrons should carry away an impression of friendliness, dignity and cheerfulness.

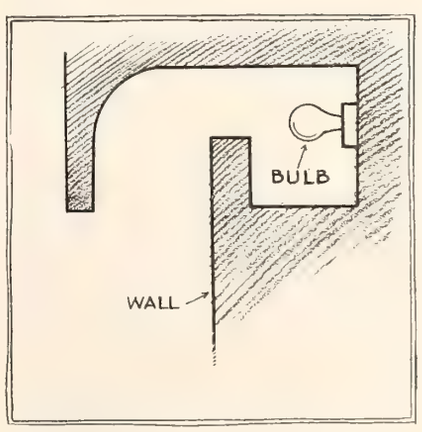
No matter how little you may spend for modernization, whatever you do should have the appeal of good advanced design. It is better to save on the materials than on the ideas. There are plenty of good, honest, inexpensive materials with which a capable designer can achieve distinctive effects far superior to the results usually obtained at much greater cost.

Cost has very little to do with it. Fine materials badly used are wasted. Cheap imitations look cheap and cost plenty. Simple materials and smart ideas make a fine combination.

The theatre owner should employ his own architect, designer or decorator whenever possible, and not rely for design service upon contractors or firms that sell materials. Too often such firms show flashy designs to catch the owner's eye, when what is needed is something that will draw the public. Also, since the owner is not usually represented by anyone to supervise the work in such cases, it often does not turn out quite as well as he probably anticipated.

In the previous installment of this article on modernization, in the September 22nd issue of BETTER THEATRES, I discussed at length the use of semi-permanent lobby schemes, and also touched on treatment of the outer, or entrance, lobby. Let us examine still other modern possibilities in the redesigning of these important auxiliary areas.

VERTICAL TREATMENT



An example of vertical treatment may be seen in the photograph of a portion of the entrance lobby of the Yorktown theatre in New York City, of which Boak & Paris were the architects. This is a modernized theatre. Here the walls of the ticket lobby are covered with black Formica, while bright mouldings of extruded aluminum run from top to bottom over the joints. These mouldings are put on after the wall covering is applied, concealing the nails or screws along the edges of the sheets and their own means of attachment is concealed. They are Wooster mouldings made to snap over bronze strips nailed to the wall. Note that the cheeks of this entrance are splayed, or slanted, so that they ease the public in.

PRE-FABRICATED INLAY

There is a new method by which ornament can be formed of pieces of thin sheet metal cut out and pressed into the face of a sheet of Formica during its manufacture, making a metal inlay flush with the surface. Ornamental friezes, pilasters and panels can be pre-fabricated in this way, ready to put in place. They can add to the interest and beauty of walls covered mainly with the plain or mottled material. Many colors are available in the metal including: red, green, blue, yellow, bronze and black, in addition to the silvery aluminum. They are brilliant and do not tarnish.

INLAY AND AIRBRUSH

Besides the very new inlay in metal described above, there is the type of inlay in Formica that is composed entirely of different colors of this material. This process of inlaying was used in pre-fabricating the red sheets with black edges used in the Midtown Theatre lobby referred to in the preceding installment. While ornamental designs of almost any degree of elaborateness can be made in this way, the possibilities that lie in using stripes, checkerboard and other simple, large-scale designs are especially interesting in connection with lobby decoration. Entirely different in method, the airbrush decoration done in the process of making the Formica sheet is so new that it has hardly been used at all.

Thalia trough-lighting plan. See text.

ASBESTOS BOARD

A very attractive and inexpensive material for a wall of modern style in the inner lobby or in the lounges or smoking rooms, is just being put on the market. It is known as J-M Flexboard, and is an asbestos cement composition in large sheets. It comes in three or four pleasing light colors, including: buff, yellow, and rose. It has a good texture effect produced by flakes of white asbestos fibre mingled with the colored cement.

GLEAMING METAL WALLS

A lobby lined entirely with metal is a novel idea. The Center theatre in Rockefeller Center has such a treatment in the ticket lobby. It is entirely of heavy golden bronze and is very costly. But there is a material with which walls can be given a substantial metal surface that is within the limit of cost for many theatres. This material is Haskelite Plymetl. It is composed of a sheet of metal cemented to a base of fire-resisting laminated wood. Any number of attractive schemes can be worked out by using it in combination with metal mouldings. The metal may be nickel-chrome steel, copper, bronze or aluminum. With the latter a smart touch might be introduced by using mouldings in Alumalite finish in some bright colors, such as red, blue or golden yellow. The sheets are 4 feet square, but the material can be furnished cut. Since the sheets are not long, a design of squares or oblongs seems more suitable than banding.

COLORED ALUMINUM

One of the things worth knowing about is the Alumalite finish for aluminum. It is a combination of electrolytic treatment and dyeing that can be applied to mouldings and that is used in coloring the metal for inlaying in Formica. There is a wide range of colors and they are lasting. This method also produces an enduring bright, silvery finish on aluminum for either indoor or outdoor use.

VENEERS ON LAMINATED BASE

Veneers of exotic woods, such as amboine and African mahogany, as well as veneers of walnut and mahogany, can be obtained cemented to a fire-resisting laminated wood base in Haskelite Phemaloid paneling material. It makes a rich genuine wood finish and can be used effectively on the walls of foyers, lounges or smoking rooms, preferably with ⅜-inch rounded strips of wood set in the joints, either to match the veneer or in ebonized finish.

STONE-LIKE TILE

There is a genuine stone that is furnished in thin slabs, ⅜-inch or ⅝-inch thick, in stock sizes up to 12 x 18 inches, ready to set like tile. It is a limestone with about the density and absorbency of marble. It can be polished or used in the crude or sand-rubbed finish. The color is a soft, light buff with pleasing variations, including yellow, bluish gray, and red orange, which add to its interest. For dados, where people come in contact with them, the polished finish would probably be best as least likely to show soil. For floors, the sand-rubbed finish is usually the most suitable. Elsewhere the crude finish, which has a velvety texture and displays the richness of the varied coloring to advantage, may well be used. This material is known as Martstone.

COST OF MATERIALS

As an aid in determining whether or not any one of the materials mentioned above is within the limit of cost for any particular job, approximate prices are given as follows: Plain Formica, 36c a square foot, and inlaid or airbrushed, about 50c to 60c a square foot; Wooster mouldings of aluminum for use with Formica, 30c a running foot, or if in Alumalite finish, either white or in color, 40c a running foot; Flex-board, from 10c to 15c a square foot; Plymetl, $1 a square foot; Phemaloid with veneer of fine finish wood, $1.50 a square foot; Martstone, $1 a square foot, including setting.

OTHER MATERIALS

There are countless other materials, of course, that are widely useful in theatre modernization. Those mentioned above show new developments, or are new in this field. Salubra washable wall covering has been used extensively in some of the best theatre modernizations, on the walls of the inner lobby, and lounges particularly. Marble is much used, also black glass. Flexwood veneer has been applied to plaster walls in the foyers or auditoriums of many theatres with admirable effect, but the possibilities of these materials and most others are well known to architects and to owners of theatres.

ROLL WALL PAINT

Washable paint, either plain or in patterns, upon paper that can be applied to the plaster wall the same as wallpaper, is one of the best materials for decorating the inner lobby, lounge, smoking rooms or the auditorium of a theatre. It is known as Salubra. In addition to simple large designs suitable for such rooms, there are plain tints with which very smart effects can be produced. For example, plain gray Salubra can be had in three shades, medium, light and very light, which can be used together on the same wall. In a lobby, lounge or smoking room it might be applied in horizontal strips, the medium gray in a strip about 15 inches wide, next above the dado, the light gray about 15 inches wide above that, and the very light tint in horizontal strips all the way to the ceiling. In taller rooms the two lower strips should be the full 31 inches, instead of half-widths. This will make the decoration grade from dark to light up the wall.

With this wall covering a plain silver finish Salubra may be used for the dado, or part of the wall below a narrow, black chair rail. A 5 x ⅞-inch plain board painted black, with its edge painted in some bright color, may be nailed on around the walls next to the ceiling. For the touch of bright color, either vermilion, jade green, or ultramarine blue would be good, and this color should then be used for the upholstery of any chairs in the room and should appear in the pattern of the draperies, the principal color of which should be gray in varied tones, perhaps with silver metal in the weave. The pattern should be in the modern style. Care should be taken to match the gray of the wall decoration, so that a cold bluish gray will not be used with a warm brownish gray. Small touches of the bright accent color could be used in lamp shades and other accessories. The carpet should be of modern design in tones of gray. The furniture in such a room may well be of the modern type, made of bent metal tubes in bright chrome finish.

The colors that come in three graded tones of plain Salubra are gray, buff, yellow, green and blue. Plain Salubra costs from 21c to 27c a square foot, but is sold and priced by the roll like wallpaper. It is 31 inches wide, trimmed. Salubra is applied with paste by a paperhanger. It has the appearance of a good flat paint without gloss, holds its color, and can be cleaned with water.

Another washable wall covering material is known as Tekko. It is in satin or metallic effects, and many of the designs are suitable for theatre decoration. It is considerably higher in price than Salubra.

PLASTER WALLS

Plain, painted plaster walls, relieved where necessary with some well designed decoration, are much better in appearance and cost less than the offensively cheap effects produced with various inferior materials and seemingly miles of mouldings. Plain wall surfaces have an important part to play in an interior. They are quiet and Reproduction of a photograph of a model made from an auditorium design by the late Joseph Urban, which made bold use of color in large plain areas as a medium of pattern. The design calls for the side walls to be painted in chartreuse (light greenish yellow) from the front to a point where seating becomes elevated. There the walls are medium light blue-gray, at the rear they are violet blue. Doors are in Chinese vermilion, while chair upholstering is in medium light vermilion. The ceiling is painted ultramarine, except for a large central panel, which is white and cove-lighted. Walls are furred out in a series of overlapping columns that support the roof trusses and provide vertical pockets for electric lamps located in trough reflectors.

restful and they enhance the effectiveness of ornament by contrast. "Less and Better Decoration" would be a good slogan.

LIGHT AS DECORATION

One of the most effective mediums of decoration is not a material at all—it is light. It can transform a plain, painted plaster wall, or even an unfinished white plaster wall, into a thing of mysterious beauty. Decorations of light can be changed easily and in almost infinite variety. For the walls of the auditorium, light is very often the best decoration of all.

No very elaborate or costly equipment is needed, as has been demonstrated by the results obtained in lighting plain plaster auditorium walls with the light source shown in the accompanying diagram. This shows, in cross-section, the general scheme of the double-indirect lighting, partly recessed near the top of the walls of the auditorium in the Thalia theatre in New York City, and developed for this house by the architect, Ben Schlanger.

By reference to this sketch [see first page of this discussion] it will be seen that the light from the electric bulbs shines upon a curved plaster surface, which reflects it down along the wall. This cove is painted dull white. The light is very softly diffused, due to the double reflection. Such diffusion of the light is highly desirable in a room where motion pictures are projected, because it competes the least with the light on the screen, yet serves decorative and practical requirements. An important feature is that the lamp bulbs are not visible from any point in the room. The light simply pours down the wall from a slot running the whole length of the wall at the ceiling. Lamps of different colors on different circuits, connected through dimmers, make possible varied effects of coloring and of intensity. When the picture is on, the light can be reduced to a mere trickle. At other times the walls can be flooded with a glow of luminous colors.

There should be pleasant, interesting views from many points in a theatre. From the outer lobby, there should be a good vista through the entrance foyer into the inner lobby. When, as is often the case, the rear wall of the auditorium terminates this vista, there should not be the usual dead-end effect of running up against a practically blank wall. There should be some decorative feature of sufficient interest on the wall at this point. Perhaps the best thing in most instances would be a panel of carved glass with a good figure subject in relief and lights behind it. This would focus attention and it would not take any floor space.

The light might well be arranged to change color gradually. The illumination should be soft, and the glass should have a translucent frosted surface. A carved glass panel can be made to order for about $3 a square foot. One 3 x 4 feet would probably be about the right size for most theatres. The housing for lamps, wiring, labor of setting the panel, etc., need not bring the cost too high for a large number of theatres.

SPACIOUS APPEARANCE

Black or other dark-colored glass used as a wall facing often solves the problem of making a cramped-looking lobby or passage seem wider, or of relieving the bad impression where a line of travel comes up against a wall and patrons must turn to one side or the other. This material acts

MODERNIZING THE PROJECTION ROOM

By ROBERT O. BOLLER

The heart of a theatre comprehensively discussed in practical terms by a leading theatre architect in the light of current remodeling interests

EVER SINCE the first tent show wandered through the country side, directing its flickering wares from a hand-driven projector to a sheet hastily stretched between temporary supports, the location of the projection equipment, and attendant provisions, have been matters of continual interest to the motion picture exhibitor. In these early tent shows, the clicking machine, mounted on a tripod or other flimsy support at the rear of the audience, compelled the attention of patrons of a curious and mechanical turn of mind away from the hair-raising episodes of the films.

Sometimes the projectionist of that day hid his operations within a crude portable booth of asbestos board, situated toward the rear of the canvas inclosure. Here in this tiny box he sweltered without the benefit of ventilation, other than such doubtful breezes as might manage to creep in through a peephole in his range of vision toward the makeshift screen and the small opening through which he focused the rays of the projector.

THE "BOOTH" OF AN EARLIER DAY

When motion pictures became important enough to be adopted as a sort of step-child in vaudeville and legitimate theatres, the same primitive accommodations accompanied the projector to its new home. It was not until about 1908 that any serious consideration was given to the matter of a housing for the projection machinery. Then fire authorities began to become conscious of the needs and hazards of the public's new plaything, and booths of one thickness of galvanized iron, of sheet steel or of asbestos board, with not less than one 8-inch round ventilator, were required in larger communities. This was in the day of the single projector, and when additional spotlights or effects were needful, a second employe, sitting in the front of the balcony, manipulated the necessary mechanisms to produce the desired color-lighting schemes upon the stage.

In those earlier days the minimum space allowed for booths by law was 4x6 feet, with a stipulated height of not less than 6 feet. Since many of the theatre managers of that period showed films infrequently, and did not wish to sacrifice revenue-producing seats for what appeared to be a possible passing fad, booth floor dimensions were generally held down to the extreme minimum prescribed. Ceilings were kept down to the limit as well, without much thought being given to the matter. The result was a first-class oven, in which the projectionist baked himself and perspired profusely during the picture part of the entertainment.

It was in about 1914 that vaudeville won its contest for popularity over the legitimate stage and began to use "the movies," as they came to be called, more frequently in connection with its other featured acts. Newsreels and short comedies formed an opening wedge in the theatre program for this sort of entertainment.

As time went on, vaudeville found itself sharing honors with the new motion picture theatre, which was beginning to come into its own as a separate entity. During this period the second projection machine made its appearance in the better houses, and more thought was given to booth sizes. The minimum ordinance requirements set the booth dimensions at 8x8 feet, and rulings specified that the booth should be constructed of asbestos board on wood studs, or of metal on an angle-iron or wood frame. The matter of ventilation for the booth progressed no further than in previous laws.

THE PROJECTION ROOM

The years from 1914 to 1916 saw a remarkable demand for screen entertainment. As film product improved, the motion picture pushed vaudeville into a secondary position in more and more theatres. Film exhibitors were feeling their way cautiously away from the path followed by the older forms of dramatic amusement. Rulings as to booth sizes remained the same for a short time, later changing to a required floor space of 8x12 feet. Stage hands were gradually eliminated, switchboards controlling house lights and some of the stage lighting, spotlights, etc., were moved to the booth, and for the first time the art of projection became a full time profession, with the operator spending his entire working time in the projection room.

The projection rooms of this latter period generally remained in use until 1928, when the entrance of sound made revolutionary changes imperative in the entire industry. Then for the first time exhibitors suddenly became conscious of such things as acoustical defects, scuffling feet on uncarpeted floors, noisy motors, ventilating ducts that roared, and weird and extraneous noises from the projection quarters.

With the introduction of sound in 1928, the projection room at last demanded a full share of attention. It was subjected, along with every other portion of the modern theatre, to an intensive scrutiny and study calculated to remove the existing defects and to make it the efficient but self-effacing source of the highest form of screen entertainment.

PROJECTION ROOM LOCATIONS

A survey at this particular stage of affairs would have disclosed some five favored booth locations among theatres then in existence. (See diagrams.) Some of these locations, which for various reasons are not considered practical today, were, at the time they were chosen and under the conditions then existing, capable of giving even better results than those usually obtained with newer methods and changed location of projection.

For instance, Location A (at the rear of the first floor seating), or Location B (in the first rows of a very steep balcony) were considered exceptionally choice. It has always been conceded that Location A gives the most direct throw to the screen, while Location B made possible almost as direct a throw, and the possible arrangement of seating in the latter instance was such that vision lines from seats at the rear of the booth were in no way cut off. Obviously, the arrangement was not so workable in a balcony of easier ascent.

Location E was the space allotted to the projection room in the majority of theatres, but where the exhibitor desired every seat he could squeeze into the building, Locations C and D offered a last resort. In practically all of the older theatres using any of these plans, the generator room was located in the basement.

HAZARD FACTORS

A study of these varied locations disclosed that from the standpoint of excellent projection, there was no objection to Location A, as the direct throw from this advantageous spot made possible a clear picture with no possible keystone. On the other hand, with the projection room in this position, some of the most desirable first floor seats were sacrificed, and it was impossible for center section standees to see any part of the performance during an enforced wait. Perhaps an even more formidable drawback to this location was that in case of fire (which was more likely to occur in the projection room than in other parts of the theatre), the main body of the audience was forced to leave the theatre alongside the seat of trouble.

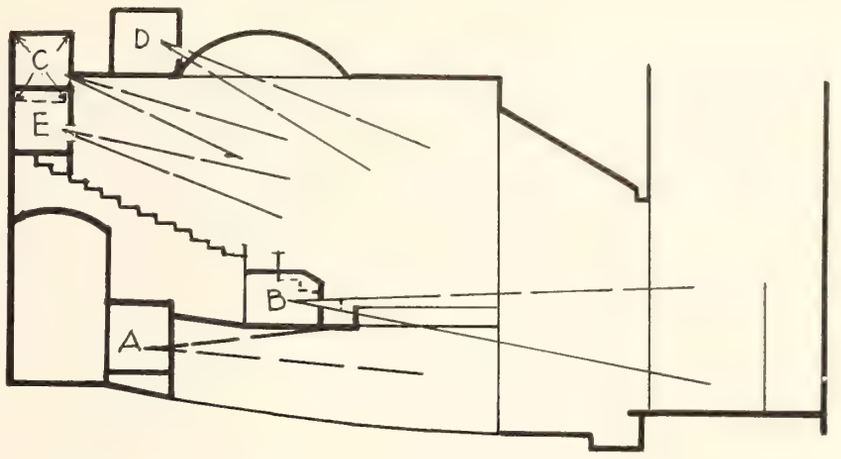
This recalls that some years ago an exhibitor, taking cognizance of the interest of the public in the projectionist and the equipment which made its screen fare possible, built a beautiful projection room on the main floor of his theatre, in Location A. On the side facing the foyer he placed a wire glass opening through which his patrons might obtain a clear view of the operator and his machinery. All went well for a time, and the townspeople were vastly "intrigued," till one night a film caught fire in the booth. It was at a late hour, the second show was nearly over, fortunately, and no one happened to be standing at a point where the fire was visible from the exterior of the projection room, otherwise a serious panic might have resulted. Early the next morning the owner ordered the construction of a solid partition between foyer and booth, wisely deciding that his patrons had better languish in unquenched curiosity the rest of their days than that a panic so narrowly escaped should ever be precipitated in his show house.

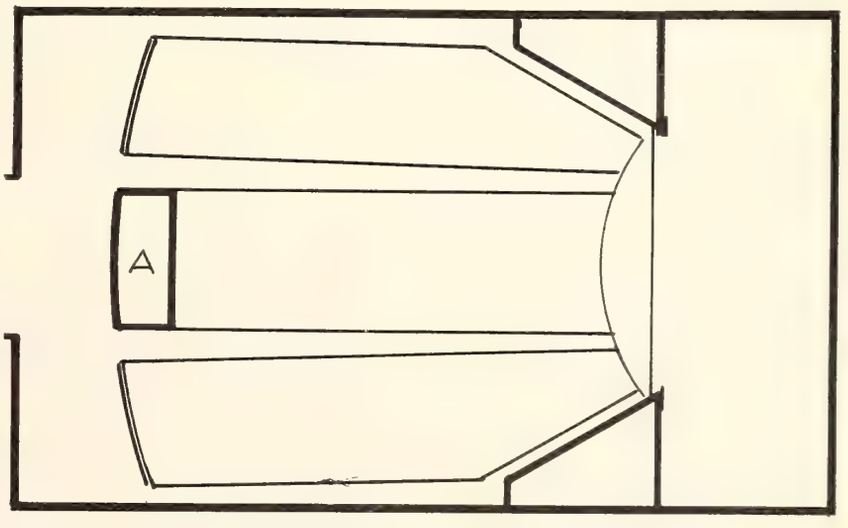


DISTORTION PROBLEMS

Location B, in a steep balcony, had many of the best features of Location A, inasmuch as a very small angle was necessary in the throw to the screen. But the loss in seating included not only the actual space taken up by the projection rooms, but some two choice rows immediately in front, and sometimes additional seats to the rear, depending upon the rise of the balcony. It was also necessary to crowd such a room down to the minimum height.

The projection room in Location C was generally built above the rear of the auditorium, so that the balcony seat rows continued to the front wall of the room itself, giving a maximum number of seats. The gain in chair space was the chief argument in favor of this position, as in projecting from this point great distortion took place and the results were highly unsatisfactory.

High up in the attic, or hidden behind ceiling beams or the dome (Location D) was the poorest and probably the rarest position for the projection booth. It proved popular with only a few exhibitors, although some of the larger circuits adopted it for practically all of their houses. In this case, the distortion was even worse than with a bad throw from Location C, and little could be said in defense of this lofty perch.



From the five projection room positions mentioned, Location E alone has retained a lasting workability. Many of these projection rooms are in use today, and will probably be found efficient for many years to come, provided they are altered and changed to meet the demands for increased size and modernization called for by new projection equipment and changing methods in theatre technique.

If an exhibitor is the possessor of a projection room located in spots A, B, C, or D, it is suggested without malice that he can best contribute to the progress of motion picture projection by sending his booth intact to the Smithsonian Institution, as a relic of the past, as these types are

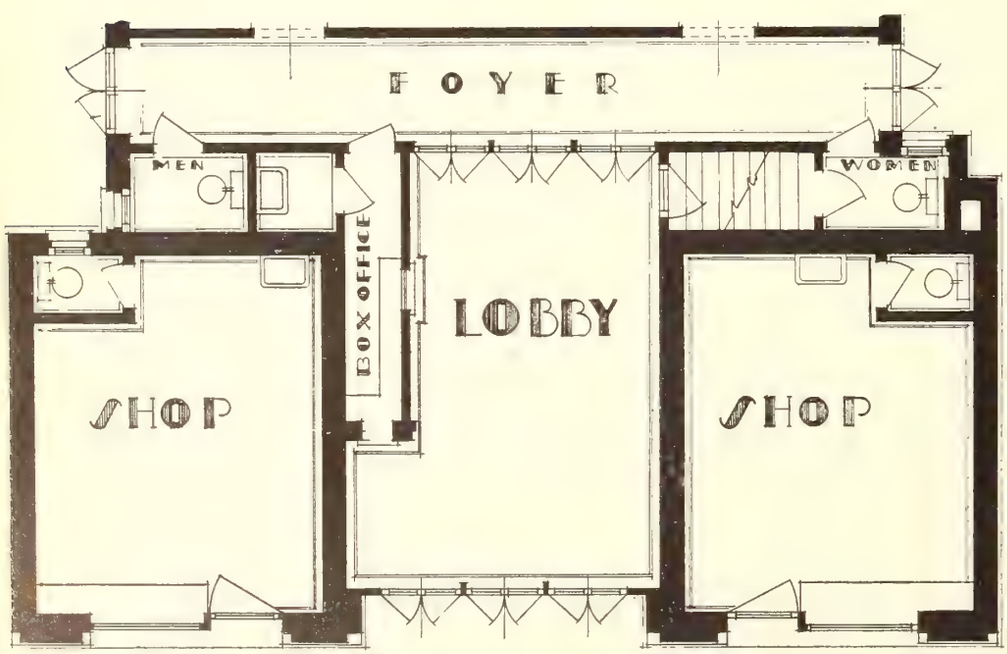
HOW STORE SPACE WAS USED IN A NEW FRONT SCHEME



REMODELING OF THE Austin theatre in that section of Chicago known as Austin (on the extreme West Side), represents an expenditure of $19,000. Austin is one of the city's better-type residential districts.

This project, involving a property thoroughly antiquated both inside and out, covered the entire theatre, but it was in the front portions of the building, including the exterior, that the greatest changes were made. The auditorium was newly decorated, and modern lighting fixtures were substituted for the old ones. The lobbies, however, and the entrance, store areas and adjoining parts were subjected to fundamental changes, which included the complete elimination of the shop areas.

The architects were Sobel & Drielsma of Chicago. The Austin is operated by Charles Stern.

The two flanking stores (see accompanying plans showing the layout before and after alteration) were closed up at the front and converted into lounges and toilet rooms. The box office was moved from the inside of the lobby to the sidewalk line, and the old secondary entrance doors were removed. The result is a larger lobby and one of regular shape. It is a focal point in the entire forward scheme, surrounded by the front, lounges and auditorium.

FLOOR PLAN BEFORE ALTERATIONS

FRONT

The front was radically changed from one of old-fashioned forms and materials to one of emphatically modern type. A complete new face of carrara glass was applied directly to the existing brick work.

The carrara glass facing has been laid on in two colors, black and gray. The courses are practically square and all joints are in a line. The colors are arranged to draw the eye to the center section, which is, of course, of greatest importance. Throughout the new front, architectural treatment has been concentrated on the central section, the two bays (see accompanying photographs) having only a color division in the carrara glass. This scheme was adopted as one conceived to draw the eye to the marquee, and then to the entrance doors and box office beneath.

MARQUEE

The marquee is dominated by sign work consisting in incandescent and neon tube lighting in combination on backgrounds of colored porcelain enamel and stainless steel. The entire soffit of the marquee is of an

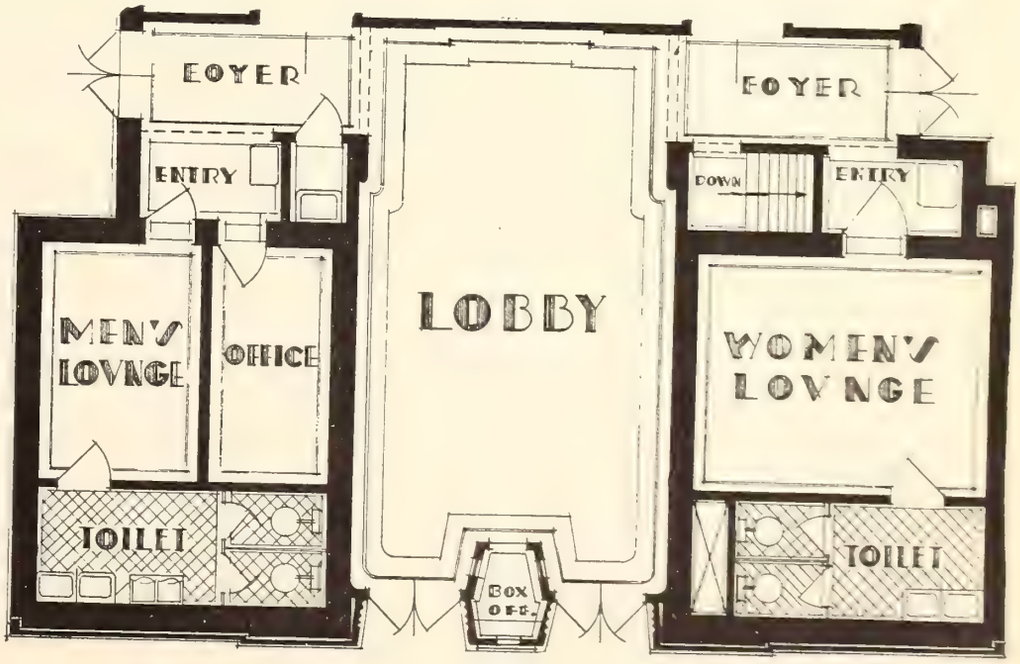
"alumilited" stainless steel giving a dull luster. This service is regarded as being practically immune to the effects of weather changes. The marquee lighting is on a flasher system.

Entrance doors and deep reveals are of "alumilited" aluminum, along with the circular opening of the box office. In the daytime this entrance treatment presents a pattern of black and gray tones (in carrara glass), with white metal along with various colors on the marquee.

LOBBY



The structural changes and general change in the forward floor plan has resulted in a much larger lobby. This room is simply treated with aluminum stripping terminating in a large circular mirror motif on the back wall of the auditorium (thus, according to the principles of the scheme, the patron is further drawn, optically, toward the auditorium). On the side walls of the auditorium are display cases framed in aluminum. The floor is of terrazzo in colors that form a pattern designed to follow in line the stripping on the walls. The lighting fixtures, which are of opal glass and aluminum, are so shaped as to conform in decorative effect to the seraph of the lobby.

FOYERS

The lobby is flanked by two small foyers, each of which contains a door entering the auditorium. These foyers are carpeted in a deep-pile weave of a rust color.

Adjoining each of the foyers is a lounge and toilet room. These have been fashioned from the space formerly occupied by the two stores at the sides of the entrance lobby. The lounges are appointed with furniture of a modern pattern and with a series of wall mirrors.

The lounges are reached through two foyers which now take the place of the single narrow foyer which formerly ran around the rear of the auditorium. Off the foyers are small anterooms giving direct access to the new lounges and toilet facilities—and also, in the case of the men's side, to the manager's office.

WRITTEN VERSUS VERBAL AGREEMENTS

By LEO T. PARKER

A discussion of legal practice in a matter, the misunderstanding of which frequently leads to litigation involving theatres

ONE OF THE oldest rules of the law is that verbal agreements, promises and contracts do not affect or change in the least the meaning of a valid written contract. Also, a printed statement or notice on a contract, receipt, billhead, bill of lading, order form, or letterhead, is not effective if the printed statement is contradictory to another portion of the contract.

It has been held, moreover, that a notification printed in small or inconspicuous type is not effective unless it is referred to in the body of the contract, or specifically directed to the attention of the other party. This same law applies alike to contracts by correspondence and various other kinds of written agreements.

When interpreting contracts it is a sound and well settled rule of the law that the court examines the whole instrument with a view of ascertaining and carrying into effect the purpose and object the parties had in view when the agreement was signed. Moreover, the courts never presume that parties intended to insert in their contract a written provision wholly incompatible and irreconcilable with printed portions. It is likewise a well settled rule that, as to instruments which are partly printed and partly typewritten, the typewritten part shall have the greater weight because obviously greater attention has been bestowed by the parties upon the typewritten parts of the contract.

CITATIONS

For instance, in 223 Fed. 704, New York, N. Y., the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in commenting on this point of the law, stated:

"It scarcely needs the citation of authority to support the well established rule that the printed portions of a contract, when repugnant, must be subordinated to those which are written, and that the latter are presumed, from the circumstances of their special and deliberate insertion to embrace the real intent and meaning."

With respect to the usual interpretation by the courts of a contract partly in writing and partly in printed form, it is interesting to observe that in 86 S. E. 671, Kanawha County, West Virginia, the court said:

"True there is a well established rule that where, as in the use of printed forms, a contract is partly printed and partly written, the writing will prevail if there is conflict between the printing and the writing. And the same is true where the contract is partly printed and partly typewritten. The written or typewritten part will prevail."

Occasionally, a contract contains parts printed, typewritten and pen written. A recent court held that pen-written portions always are first in importance; the typewritten portions are second; and the printed portions are last.

THE LAW OF FRAUD

STILL ANOTHER interesting point of the law is that printed stipulations in contracts of sale always are invalid where the intended purposes of the party inserting such clauses is to practice fraud on the other party.

CASE

For example, in Klinge (268 Pac. 748, Portland, Ore.), a seller orally agreed to supply merchandise of a high quality. In the written contract the quality of the goods was not clearly specified and at the end of the contract the following clause appeared:

"It is further specifically understood and agreed that no statements or representations other than those made in this contract shall be binding and no agreements or contracts not herein contained shall be binding upon either party hereto."

The buyer refused to accept delivery of the merchandise and sued the seller for damages, testifying that the quality of the goods did not equal that which was orally promised.

The seller argued that the above clause in the contract prevented the buyer from relying upon verbal statements. However, in view of the circumstances, the court held the seller liable.

IN ABSENCE OF FRAUD

IN THE ABSENCE of fraud or mistake, evidence of verbal agreements ordinally is not admissible to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from the terms of a valid written instrument. There are numerous exceptions to this rule—for instance, in writings that do not purport to set forth the entire contract—and therefore, it is necessary that the court listen to testimony from which to interpret the intended obligations of the contracting parties. However, in cases involving complete contracts signed by the parties thereto and which contain all of their promises, representations, and obligations, the rule is strictly applied.

CASE

For example, in Fox (17 P. [2d] 294, Ogden, Utah), it was shown that a film distributor agreed to supply certain films to a theatre owner. The contract between the parties did not specify whether or not the films should be the latest issues, but provided: "This contract is complete and no promises or representations have been made by either party to the other except as herein set forth."

Controversy developed, and the films were refused when the theatre operator complained that the films being supplied by the distributor were not the latest. The distributor filed suit to compel the theatre operator to accept and pay for the contracted films, and the theatre operator attempted to testify that the distributor's salesman verbally represented that the films would be the latest issues.

DECISION

Although the lower court held the theatre operator not liable on the contract, the higher court reversed the decision, saying:

"Direct oral evidence as to representations in the nature of warranties or as to statements that are in effect stipulations may not be received. . . . We are of the opinion that the trial court erred in admitting oral testimony to the effect that the salesman represented or agreed that the films should be the latest issues and . . . other statements and representations to the same effect."

LIMITATIONS OF CONTRACTS

AS ABOVE mentioned, the general law is established that a printed statement or notice on a contract, billhead, bill of lading or letterhead is not effective, particularly if the printed statement is contradictory to the statements contained in the body of the contract or letter. And a stipulation printed in small inconspicuous type is not effective, unless referred to in the body of the letter or contract.

There are, however, many variations of the law on this subject involving different forms of printed notifications on both ordinary contracts and contracts made by the passage of letters. The facts of a recent higher court case (64 S. E. 553, Richmond County, Ga.), interpret interesting information.

CASE

In the case it was disclosed that a distributor wrote a letter to a buyer offering to sell his product at a stipulated price. The letterhead of the seller contained the following notification printed in red ink: "Quotations subject to change without notice. All agreements are contingent upon strikes, accidents, and other delays beyond our control."

When the distributor failed to make the deliveries the purchaser filed suit. The counsel for the distributor argued that the notification printed in red ink on the latter's letterhead was due notice to the purchaser that the order was accepted only in consideration of the notice. However, in holding the seller liable for non-delivery irrespective of the notification, "all agreements are contingent upon strikes, accidents, and other delays beyond our control," the court said:

DECISION

"If a contract in writing is plain and clear and unambiguous in its terms, it is not subject to modification by a statement in a letterhead, printed at the top of the paper, which is not incorporated into the contract and is inconsistent with it. Even where a printed form of contract is used, but terms are written into it which are at variance with the printed matter, the writing will control."

CASE

Also, in another case (110 N. E. 619, New York, N. Y.), the question before the court was whether or not the following order for merchandise was binding: "Please deliver at once the following and send invoice with goods: (merchandise here specified)."

The following notification was printed on the order: "Goods of this order must be delivered when specified. In case you cannot comply, advise us by return mail stating earliest date of delivery you can make and await our further orders. The acceptance of this order which in any event you must promptly acknowledge will be considered by us as a guarantee on your part of prompt delivery within the specified time."

DECISION

The seller failed to acknowledge the order and the court held that the purchaser was not bound, explaining that under well established rules a contract is construed as a whole, and effect is to be given to every word or expression in it, where there is no irreconcilable conflict. In this case the printed notification was in large type and was more prominent than the written order. This court said:

"Where a contract contains two repugnant provisions the one printed and the other written, it is well settled that the latter must control the interpretation of the instrument, as it is presumed to express the latest intention of the parties. . . . The principle prevails that contracts should be so construed as to give effect to every word and expression contained therein."

In still another case where the printed notice was in large type, the court said:

"In the present case the printed clauses are to the left of the signature where they are printed in clear type larger than the type which caption plainly reads: 'Conditions on which the above order is given.' The printed clauses are at least as plain and as prominently displayed upon the face of the receipt as the written matter

LAW CONTROLLING PARTNERSHIPS

By M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

IN THE FINAL analysis, all business is owned and run by individuals. However, the form of ownership and operation varies. A person may conduct a business enterprise as an individual, or he may become associated with one or more other persons to form a partnership; or, as a stockholder, he may be one of a group of persons, who compose a corporation.

While a large proportion of business is today being conducted by corporations, the partnership relationship is still quite important, and no intelligent man of business should fail to have at least an elementary knowledge of partnership law. The present article and a number of others to follow, will deal with some of the more important aspects of this relationship.

A partnership may be defined as an association of two or more persons who have agreed to carry on a business for profit, as co-owners. An association of persons, not formed for profit making, such as a club, society, etc., is not a partnership. However, the mere fact that two persons share the profits of a business, is not in itself proof of the existence of a partnership between them. For example, Mr. A may share the profits of Mr. B's business as interest on a loan or in payment of rent or wages. It often is quite important to know whether or not a person is a member of a partnership, for if he is a partner, he becomes personally liable for any obligations of the firm.

Partnerships may be classified as general, special and limited. A general partnership is one formed to conduct some general line of business. If the business is that of buying, selling and manufacturing, it is known as a trading partnership. If the business is not that of manufacturing, but rather some form of activity such as the practice of law, the partnership is a non-trading one. A special partnership is one organized to transact a particular piece of business—for example, to buy and sell a parcel of real estate. A limited partnership is one formed in accordance with the provisions of a statute in existence in practically all the states of this country. Its chief characteristic is that one or more of the partners, known as special or limited partners, contribute a certain amount of money or goods to the capital of the firm, take no active part in its management, and are liable for the debts of the partnership only to the amount invested by them, instead of being fully personally liable for them as are the other partners. A limited partner must remain inactive, and if he takes an active part in the affairs of the firm, he loses his protection as a limited partner and becomes liable for partnership obligations as a general partner. The laws of the various states controlling special partnerships usually direct that notice of the formation of the partnerhip be given to the public by filing a certificate in a place of record, such as the county clerk's office, and in some states, by also publishing the certificate in local newspapers.

Partners may be either general, limited or dormant. A general partner, also known as an active partner, is one taking an active part in the running of the business, and is fully liable for the firm's debts. Before a general partner can withdraw from the firm and put an end to his general liability he must give notice of his retirement to all people with whom the partnership does business. A limited partner has already been described. A dormant partner is one whose association with the partnership is secret and who takes no active part in the running of the business. A dormant partner is as fully liable for partnership debts as a general partner if his connection is discovered.

A dormant partner need not give notice of his retirement from the firm, for since no one knew that he was a partner, no one gave the partnership credit because of him. A dormant partner must not be confused with a silent partner, who may be defined as one not active in the firm's business, but whose connection with the firm is not secret. A dormant partner is both silent and secret.

The partnerhip relationship may be entered into orally, but here too, as in every aspect of business, a written agreement is preferable. Such an agreement should set forth the contribution of each partner to the firm's capital the manner in which profits and losses will be divided between the partners, the powers and duties of each member of the firm, and should provide for the winding up of the firm's affairs on the death or withdrawal of a partner.

contained therein. Therefore, this printed notification was binding on both parties."

PARTIES HELD IN JOINT LIABILITY

WHEN CONSTRUING a written contract the court always endeavors to interpret the intended meaning of the contracting parties. Therefore, if certain parts of the agreement conflict with other parts the court will refer to other and all clauses when construing the contract as a whole.

CASE

For illustration, in American Theatre Company (291 Pac. 303, Salt Lake City, Utah), it was shown that a film distributor and a film manufacturer entered into a written contract by which the latter leased to the former a certain film and the distributor agreed to pay to the film manufacturer fifty per cent of the gross box-office receipts without any deductions whatsoever. Later the distributor assigned its contract to a theatre exhibitor under a contract which contained the following clause:

"It is mutually agreed that if the purchaser shall fail or neglect to perform or shall breach any of the terms and provisions of any of said contracts hereby agreed to be performed by said purchaser, the said exhibitor as well as the said purchaser shall be liable jointly and severally to the film manufacturer, or its assigns for any loss occasioned thereby."

DECISION

Later when the exhibitor failed to pay the film manufacturer the latter sued the distributor whose counsel argued that it could not be liable jointly with the exhibitor. However, the higher court said:

"The whole context is to be considered in ascertaining the intention of the parties, even though the immediate object of inquiry is the meaning of an isolated clause. Every word in the agreement must be taken to have been used for a purpose, and no word should be rejected as mere surplusage if the court can discover any reasonable purpose thereof which can be gathered from the whole instrument. The contract must be viewed from beginning to end and all its terms must pass in review; for one clause may modify, limit, illuminate the other. . . . Seeming contradictions must be harmonized if that course is reasonably possible. Each of its provisions must be considered in connection with the others, and if possible, effect must be given to all. A construction which entirely neutralizes one provision should not be adopted if the contract is susceptible of another effecting all of its provisions."

AUTHORITY OF AGENT

that an employer never is liable for the acts of his agent, unless the agent is placed by the employer in such position which implies that the agent has authority to do the act in question. Therefore, under ordinary circumstances, the intended meaning of a contract, whether written or oral, cannot be determined by reference to any agreement made with an agent.

For instance, it has been held that the sole implied authority of a salesman is to solicit orders and send them to his employer for acceptance. Moreover, either the buyer or the manufacturer may cancel a written or verbal order given to the manufacturer's agent, providing the cancellation is mailed before the salesman's employer accepts the order. Another important established rule of the law is that a purchaser cannot change or vary the obligations of a written contract of sale by introducing testimony showing that the salesman made an oral promise. This is particularly true, but not essential, if the order form contains a printed notification that the representative has limited authority.

CASE

For example, in Portland v. Whitmore (150 S. E. 607, Charles Town, W. Va.), it was disclosed that a traveling salesman approached a prospect and obtained a signed order on an order blank which had printed thereon the following: "Orders are not binding on this company unless accepted by the general office."

The purchaser refused to pay for the

YOUR STAGE A LIABILITY? MAKE IT AN ASSET!

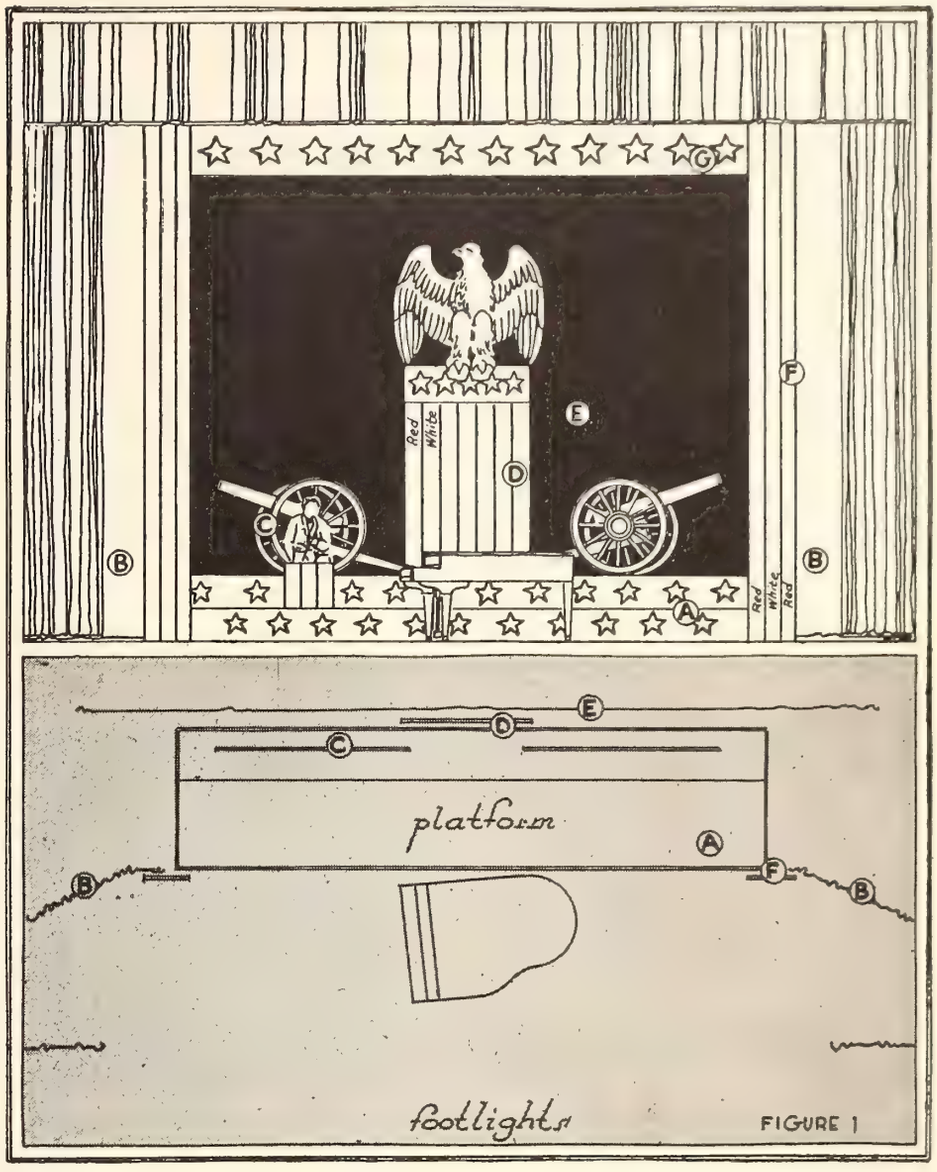

FIGURE 1

The first of a series by a practical showman on use of stage facilities to augment the screen program

By O. T. TAYLOR

EVERY EXHIBITOR very long in the business can look back and recall the "passing of vaudeville," as the more pessimistic put it, when sound became an acknowledged and undisputed fact. The vaudeville optimist on the other hand, prophesied an early return of vaudeville and stage attractions. Then depression dealt the final blow to the tottering vaudeville and stage show circuits. Stage policies were abandoned in all but a comparatively few theatres, and those few were located in the larger cities where talent is plentiful and shows could be built to suit requirements. In the large majority of stage-equipped theatres, however, the stage became a liability. Costly equipment, scenery, draperies, even musical instruments laid dormant, frequently remembered by the harassed manager only when figuring depreciation and taxes.

But why not use the stage occasionally? Why not dust off the equipment, chase the moths out of the draperies, give the theatre patron a change from the straight screen programs? The stage will help pay its way if properly exploited.

This article, and others to follow, are for the manager who wants to make his stage pay dividends by promoting home talent shows of various types—by staging shows sponsored by clubs, fraternal orders, school classes, civic organizations, dancing schools—as well as his own conceived and executed opportunity contests, kiddie shows, jamborees, frolics, style shows, etc. There is a "right idea" for every occasion, and every idea can be made to show a profit.

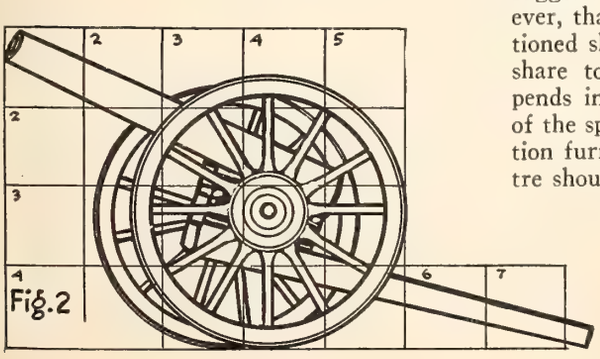

Fig.2

Road shows will not be considered in these articles. Road shows, though business stimulators for key spots and main line stops, are seldom available to the average theatre because of the necessarily high "nut." The ideas suggested in these articles are practical. Most of them have been produced by the author. And all those produced have been successful from financial and entertainment standpoints.

SPONSOR ARRANGEMENTS

The manager who finds it difficult to arrive at an equitable share basis for sponsored attractions may find the following suggestions useful. Bear in mind, however, that the percentages and figures mentioned should not be taken literally, as the share to which a sponsor is entitled depends in a large measure upon the efforts of the sponsor and the worth of the attraction furnished for the occasion. The theatre should, of course, be protected on first money to the extent of a fair average normal gross based upon the average receipts of the particular day of the week upon which the show is given. Naturally the day selected should not be a Saturday, Sunday or a holiday.

First money and split: On this basis the theatre takes first money as mentioned above. As an example, say that the theatre's average Wednesday business on a fair picture (not a special) is an even $100. This would then become the theatre's first money. The sponsor, furnishing the stage attraction in its entirety, shares fifty-fifty over and above first money. Supposing the gross for the evening is $360 (a conservative figure compared to average business), less first money to the theatre ($100), leaving $260 to be split into $130 to the sponsor and a like amount to the theatre. This amount, plus first money, makes the theatre's share $230. Allowing for the deduction of $40 from the theatre's share to cover the cost of stage hands, extra advertising, special stage effects, etc., the theatre's share is still $90 above its normal Wednesday which, particularly in these times, if not in any times, should be regarded as distinctly worthwhile.

Pupils of a local dancing school in a stage presentation.

Percentage on sponsor ticket sale: On this basis the sponsor handles all advance ticket sales on a percentage of from 35% to 50% to the sponsor. The theatre takes all of the box office receipts, and 50% or more on outside sales. This proposition is a good deal for service clubs and other organizations having an active membership that can be depended upon to push the ticket sale.

Then there are attractions in the receipts of which the sponsor does not share. Under this classification come the style show—music week programs, etc. Here the sponsor receives as his share, publicity for his business or good will for the organization.

INTANGIBLE BENEFITS

The foregoing suggestions relative to sharing in receipts by the sponsor of a stage attraction should by no means be considered hard and fast rules. Every theatre owner and manager has his own local conditions to meet and adjust himself to. He may even feel that the additional net receipts are not sufficient to compensate for the work and effort involved. The manager who takes this stand is either playing into his competitor's hands, or he is inviting competition, if he does not already have it.

Another angle to consider is the good will that co-operative, sponsor-sharing tie-ups build for the theatre. Enthusiastic co-operation and a willingness to meet a sponsor halfway with suggestions, and actual labor when occasions arise, go a long way toward building good will and a friendly feeling toward the theatre. It is well to remember that while the sponsor is here referred to in the singular, he may represent a club with a hundred members, or a fraternal order with a thousand, a class of pupils with an entire school behind it, or a dancing school with fifty young terpsichoreans backed by a hundred enthusiastic parents and their friends eager to see them publicly perform.

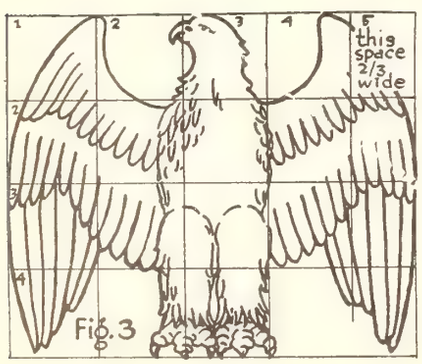
A MILITARY THEME

The show selected for this—the first in this series of discussions—is a militaristic conception—not because of the trend of the times, but because it is one of the actually proven ideas already referred to. Incidentally, very successfully presented for two days, it was the first local attraction to be offered for more than one day in the D. & R. Theatres' 1,500-seat D. & R. theatre at Aberdeen, Wash.

The sponsor in this case was the Marine Reserve Corps, the sponsor's share going to augment the mess fund for the corps summer camp. Consequently the show was advertised as "Marine Reserve Corps' Mess Fund Benefit." The fact that the Marine Reserves is a seaport organization need not deter an inland theatre from using this idea, as it is equally suitable for tie-ups with National Guard units, the American Legion, veterans' clubs—in fact, any military or patriotic organization. The program should preferably feature one or more numbers to tie it to the setting, as well as to suggest the sponsor.

The Aberdeen Marine Corps carried the idea out as a unit show, stressing comedy, with a master of ceremonies "clowning it" in a sloppy uniform. Each time he entered the stage he wore a different head-gear—overseas cap, fireman's helmet, silk hat, cap, straw hat, etc. After the third or fourth appearance he had the audience in a hilarious mood trying to guess what next.

The routine, which here is offered as a suggestion rather than for reproduction, follows:



> Dark stage following picture. Spot from projection room picked up master of ceremonies mounted on Shetland pony, center stage in front of drapes. He dismounted, made a short announcement of the purpose of the entertainment (incidentally putting in a plug for the theatre), and announced opening stage band number. Drapes opened on band in patriotic setting.

Following the short, snappy opening band number came a routine of singers, dancers, and musical specialty numbers, such as piano, accordions, guitars, etc. The closing number consisted of youthful dancers in military costumes, who come to attention after a tap routine, while a squad of eight marines went through a silent drill routine. At the close of the drill two guns fired in rapid sequence.

SET CONSTRUCTION

One of the specialty numbers merits special mention. As lights dimmed to a dark stage, a large picture frame with painting was lowered from the flies. A baby spot, set in the footlights, was brought up to just enough illumination to make the painting easily discernible. The painting depicted an elderly couple seated in front of a fireplace in which flames flickered, while a lamp shed a soft glow on the scene. A singer in dim blue baby spot, a few feet to one side of the painting,

REMODELING TO WELCOME PATRONS OF TODAY

THE MOTION PICTURE has taken over one of Chicago's oldest theatrical landmarks in the acquisition of the Olympic theatre, 30-year-old legitimate house on Randolph, near Clark, by Balaban & Katz, and its revision into a motion picture theatre, with the name of Apollo. This remodeling project, so far as its general interest is concerned, consisted principally in changes to the front, the lobbies and foyer areas. The architects were C. W. & George L. Rapp of Chicago.

The entrance feature is a combination of huge electric display signs with white lamps and blue and green neon. The entire display is animated and has the effect at night of a waterfall of light.

The outer lobby is square in plan. The walls are treated with a brilliant red glass and polished bronze, with black marble base, and the floor is of black and dark green rubber tile.

The ticket booth is likewise of red glass, bronze and black marble, and the top, having the effect of a canopy, is of white mirrors, which reflect the soffit lighting of the canopy above.

A special feature has been made of the four display spaces for the showing of photographs and other publicity material. These are large in size and give ample space for any type of display.

This outer lobby leads into an inner lobby, which is rectangular in shape and is flanked on either side by tinted mirrors and walls of blue and deep orchid glass. The floor is likewise of colored rubber tile, and above is a marble base. The ceiling is simply treated in varied tones and has lighting features of opalescent glass with bronze fittings of a modern pattern.

The main foyer, which extends from the inner lobby to the rear of the auditorium, is of great length. A rearrangement of the stairs at the end of this foyer was made in order to make easier access to the balcony and mezzanine floors. This long foyer, which was in the style of Louis XIV, was broken up into differently shaped spaces. Not wishing to go to the expense of redesigning this long foyer in a modern style, the architects conceived the idea of modernizing this old architecture by painting the different portions of it in different colors in a modern scheme. In other words, one passes from a blue portion into an old rose and ivory portion, thence into a yellow and gray-green, and from there into other shades of green and lavender. The whole makes a rather colorful and effective arrangement of color tones and tends to reduce the apparent length of this foyer.

Pictured at left is the front as it is, and as it used to be. The sign, which combines incandescent and neon lighting, is animated as a "waterfall," the flow of light leading to and blending with the soffit light of the marquee.

The new lobbies, looking from the outer to the inner lobby. The walls of the outer room are done in red glass and bronze, while those of the inner lobby are finished in glass of deep blue and orchid and tinted mirrors. The floor of both lobbies is surfaced with rubber tile in black and dark green

The main foyer, really a series of smaller foyers differentiated principally by decoration in distinguishing colors. The original was treated in the Louis XIV style, while the new treatment is modified modern with a slight period feeling. The color transition is from blue to old rose and ivory to yellow and gray-green and to lavender and green shades.

Likewise, a period carpet was selected which carries in its design colors of modern tones. Also the furniture was selected with brilliant colors in a "modern classic" design. Furnishings have a period touch.

The new women's lounge was painted in horizontal stripes, graded from the floor to ceiling in flesh tints with neat stencil designs applied at intervals. The furniture is of modern type with silver mirrors.

BETTER AMPLIFICATION AT LOWER COST

By AARON NADELL

Recent developments in amplifier design and what they mean in improved performance and economy

THE QUALITY of an amplifier can be judged by two factors. One is the "undistorted output," or the volume the amplifier can deliver without overloading. When an amplifier is overloaded it commonly selects a few special notes, which it amplifies much more strongly than any others. The result is a serious and extremely displeasing corruption of sound. Music loses all its appeal, and speech may become unintelligible.

Theatre sound systems and volume controls are commonly so arranged that no amplifier can overload very seriously, but it is highly desirable to have the largest possible reserve of volume in order to produce a proper and realistic contrast between loud sounds and soft ones. Hence the undistorted output of which an amplifier is capable is one guide to its usefulness in the theatre.

The second factor in amplifier quality is its frequency range. Sounds of different pitch, as heard in the loud speaker, are represented in the amplifier by electric currents of different frequency. There are no amplifier circuits that offer the same impedance (resistance) to currents of all frequencies, but it is possible to design a circuit that will oppose substantially the same impedance to some limited group of frequencies. The object of good amplifier design is to extend that group, upward and downward, until it includes as much as possible of all the frequencies of current that correspond to the tones of audible sound.

Where that is not done, this is what will happen: A note in the middle of the piano keyboard will be transmitted through the amplifier wiring with less loss, and greater amplification, than some very low or very high note. Consequently, when the volume control is set to a point at which the middle note is just comfortably audible, the lower and higher tones will not be heard.

Some of the earliest amplifying systems installed for theatre use came close to present-day standards with respect both to frequency range and undistorted output, but large numbers did not. High standards in both respects are attained much more easily today, and at far lower cost. The modern amplifier of superior quality is less expensive to build, and much more economical to operate. Amplifiers of earlier types are sometimes modified by their manufacturers to attain better quality and lower operating cost.

TRANSFORMER IRON

One reason for the comparatively poor quality of many early amplifiers lay in the materials used for transformer cores. Sound currents coming from one tube are commonly transferred to the next succeeding tube by means of a transformer. The action of tube coupling transformers upon alternating currents of different frequency depends both upon the material used in the transformer core and upon how much of it is used. The special alloys necessary to enable the transformer to deal fairly with a wide variety of frequencies were and are expensive, and economic pressure forced some manufacturers to cut down on both quality and quantity. Increase in tube efficiency has made this less necessary. Since fewer tubes are now needed for the same degree of amplification, fewer coupling transformers between tubes are needed, and better material and more of it can be used in their cores.

The more efficient tubes not only simplify the problem of achieving greater frequency range; they are especially helpful in raising the level of undistorted output without a corresponding increase in first cost or operating costs.

FILAMENT EFFICIENCY

One saving in operating expense is effected by the more efficient filament of the modern tube. One may compare, for example, a '50 tube with a 2A3. The speech power output of both tubes is very nearly the same. But the newer model requires only a little more than half the filament wattage. The small saving in power is not very important, although it mounts up in the course of a year, but an impressive reduction in weight and price of the amplifier is effected by the fact that the filament supply transformer need be only half as large.

PLATE POWER EFFICIENCY

With respect to these same two tubes, the plate wattage required in the old model is half again as large as that needed in the new. Thus, not only is there a saving in plate power, but also in the plate power supply transformer and the plate power supply rectifying tubes or stacks.

AMPLIFICATION EFFICIENCY

The comparisons just made in the matter of efficiency match tube with tube. But the amplifying efficiency—the mutual conductance—of the new tube is more than twice that of the old one. Therefore, if comparison is made by amplifying ability, rather than tube for tube, the new device requires only about one-fourth the filament power and about one-third the plate power needed by the old one, with a corresponding reduction in the weight and cost of transformers, rectifying equipment, filter choke coils and other amplifier components; and there is the further elimination of the tube coupling transformer needed when two tubes were required to do the work now performed by one.

POWER SUPPLY EFFICIENCY

When the above gain in efficiency in a power output tube is combined with the use of screen grid or pentode tubes in the stages of amplification immediately following the photo-electric cell, another reduction in the size and cost of the power supply equipment becomes possible, since one of these new "voltage-staged" tubes will also produce as much amplification as two or more of their predecessors.

But increased efficiency in the rectifying tubes used as part of the power supply circuit of an amplifier must also be taken into consideration. The internal voltage drop, or power loss within the tube, is much smaller with the mercury-vapor type rectifier than with the earlier vacuum types.

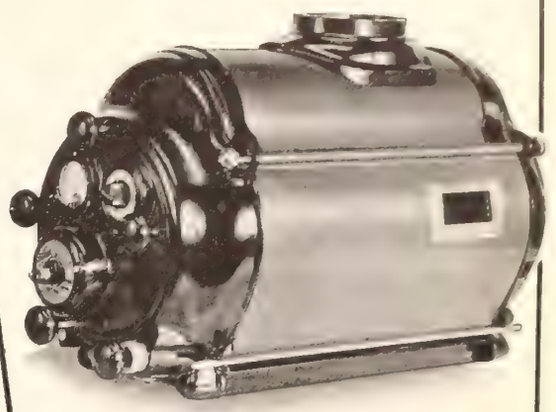
Another interesting development is the steady increase in popularity of the practice of using loudspeaker field windings as rectifier filter chokes. A theatre type speaker requires excitation by d.c. and may use ten watts, or more, per speaker, for that purpose. A theatre amplifier requires high voltage d.c., which is commonly supplied by rectifying and filtering a.c. The filter choke coil, built into the amplifier, may dissipate or waste up to fifty watts or so of power, hence the practice of running an extra pair of lines back-stage and using the speaker field coil as a filter inductance. This saves the initial cost of the filter coil, making the amplifier that much smaller, lighter and cheaper, and more efficient.

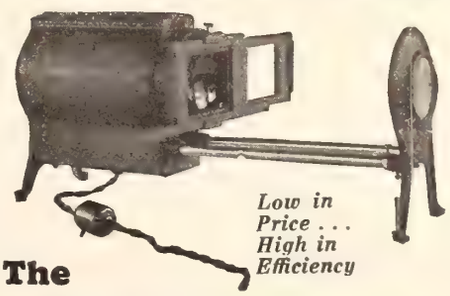
COST PROBLEM



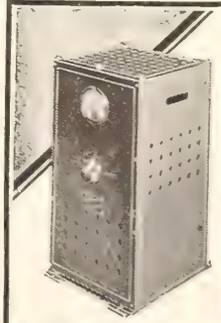
All these economies necessarily result in lower-priced amplifiers. The modern amplifier not only has fewer tubes, but fewer tube sockets, fewer coupling transformers, sometimes fewer or no filter inductances; and it has smaller filament and plate supply transformers, and less wiring. None of these changes entails any sacrifice of output level or frequency range. Both those factors have been improved.

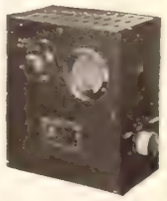
The modern amplifier costs less to operate because it has fewer tubes to be replaced, fewer parts all around to burn out or otherwise cause trouble, and because it uses less power to perform the same work.

INSTALLATION COSTS



Moreover, the modern amplifier is much cheaper to install. Apparatus now available for smaller theatres is so compact that pipe conduit between different parts of the installation is entirely unnecessary with some makes of equipment, and with any make, even of the largest size, is reduced to a minimum. The days when sound equipment took two weeks to install, and consisted of a dozen panels and cabinets mounted all around the projection room and interconnected with piping are now gone forever. In extreme cases, a modern system consists of two "attachments" for the projectors, speakers backstage, and one small box, mounted on the front wall between the two projectors, that contains everything else necessary.





Projectionists, as well as theatre owners and managers, will be interested in discussions of the projection room by such authorities as Robert O. Boller, architect, and F. H. Richardson. Therefore their attention is directed to "Modernizing the Projection Room" and to Mr. Richardson's opening article in this issue.

RECONDITIONING FOR BETTER PROJECTION RESULTS

THERE ARE plenty of theatre projection rooms that stand in need of thorough overhauling. Not only would the men who work in them be far more efficient, but theatre patrons (and thus the box office) would also benefit through improved results in screen image and sound.

It verges upon the nonsensical to assume that reasonably comfortable working quarters do not tend to produce improved results, taking men as they come. It is unreasonable to suppose that men working in small, crowded, poorly arranged projection rooms, with perhaps no ventilation to speak of, will give the best possible service. Justice is not done, and not only does service other than the best react against the box office, but it also tends to increase overhead expense through decrease in the life of equipments, waste in power, etc.

It is not unreasonable to assume that men who are asked to work under poor conditions, well knowing those conditions could be remedied—in fact, should never have existed— will have a reaction something like this:

If the management doesn't think enough of excellence in projection to provide decent quarters for us to work in why should we make any special effort to attain it? And while one cannot defend such a reaction, still it must be admitted it is rather a natural one.

It is highly essential that the floor be perfectly solid and without vibration. This is best accomplished by having an underlay of rich concrete, in which is embedded properly placed anchor bolts for the various projectors, etc. This should be covered with a coating of high-grade cement mixed in proper proportion with sharp sand—usually three parts of sand to one of cement, this then to be covered with linoleum, firmly cemented down. The linoleum should be of some rather dark color, preferably brown or green.

The recommendation of the Projection Practice Committee is that the minimum distance from floor to ceiling shall be 10 feet, with a maximum of 12 feet, and that the minimum depth, front to back wall, shall be 12 feet. These dimensions, I realize, cannot always be attained; also, such height is not vitally essential either to health or comfort. I suggest that wherever possible the ceiling should be not less than 10 feet from the floor, added height being unobjectionable up to 12 feet. Anything in excess of 12 feet is objectionable in cold weather, due to difficulty of heating. Under no circumstances should the ceiling height be less than 7 feet, nor should that height be permissible except in cases where added height is impossible to attain.

The distance from the front to the rear wall, at a minimum, should be determined as follows: Length of motion picture projectors from front of lens to end of lamp control knob extending farthest back, plus distance of projection lens to front wall, plus 3 feet, plus depth of any equipment that may be installed against the rear wall. In other words there should be 3 feet of clear space provided at the rear of the projectors.

As to the width of the room, it will of course depend upon the amount of equipment it is to contain. First there should be 3 feet of clear space to the right of the first motion picture projector, spot or effect projector, with 4 feet more for each spot and effect projector and from 4 to 5 feet for each motion picture projector, depending upon whether the projection distance is less than 75 feet, more than 75 feet, less than 100 feet or more than 100 feet. It must be remembered that the longer the projection distance the farther apart may the projectors be placed without making it difficult to focus both sides of the screen image sharply.

Before starting to remodel, it is necessary that all wall and floor openings (electric) be established by plan, to the end that all conduit, outlets, etc., may be built in; also, that all anchor bolts for equipments can be set into place and embedded in the concrete. As to conduit for sound equipment, the equipment should be first selected and its maker consulted as to just what type and size of conduits are required; also, as to exact location of outlets. All outlet boxes should be of the flush-mounting type.

I cannot agree with the present methods of projection room lighting. They are optically wrong, in that they make it impossible to obtain a good view of the distant screen unless the eyes is right up against the glass of the observation port. My recommendations on lighting are as follows:

Along the ceiling immediately over the rear of motion picture projector lamphouses, attach to the ceiling, or suspend from it (if the ceiling height is in excess of 10 feet), a sheet metal shield extending down 1 foot and then back 1 foot. Paint the interior of this shield, including the ceiling between it and the rear, plus from two to three feet of the rear wall, gloss white. To the bottom of the shield affix lamp sockets, with conduit for circuit supplying them attached to underside of the shield. In this shield have two circuits, one to supply just sufficient light for work under ordinary projection conditions, another to light the room brilliantly in emergency. In addition there should be one or more reel lamps, with proper guards to prevent breakage, for use around machinery in case of trouble.

With this arrangement, it will be observed that the rear wall and all sound equipment installed along its length will at all times be well illuminated. As the projectionist is in working position at either m.p. projector, effect projectors or spots, all light falls upon his back and not into his eyes, as is now the case where light sources are in plain view and the front wall well illuminated. He therefore is in position to have the best possible view of the screen.

Above all things, the space surrounding observation ports and all metal parts thereof must be painted flat (non-gloss) black, and the front wall some dark non-gloss color, such as a rather dark shade of olive green. The ceiling may be cream color in front of the light shield, though it would be optically better if the dark front wall color were continued out to the front portion of the ceiling. The other walls may be some dark color matching that of the front wall up to a height indicated by the height of the ceiling; and cream color above that, except for the gloss white before stipulated. The whole idea is to provide ample light for the work of projection, but so far as possible, to keep all direct rays out of the eyes of the projectionist when looking toward the screen.

In remodeling it must be remembered that equipment, both for visual and sound projection, are being constantly improved and put into shape not only to enable the production of better results, but also to produce them more efficiently. It is exceedingly poor business to keep old, obsolete, worn out, patched up equipments in use.

The exhibitor pays large sums in film rentals each week. If he desires to get the highest possible returns upon this investment he must not only use up-to-date equipment, but also must keep the equipment in first-class condition. That is plain common sense, yet we find theatres with equipment that should have been replaced long ago, and even that superannuated junk in miserable state of disrepair. The equipment cannot wisely be ignored in any remodeling program involving the projection room.

WANTS A CHANCE AND DESERVES ONE

FROM A TOWN in New York State comes one of the most remarkable letters I have read in quite some while. The name and address of its writer is withheld for obvious reasons. The young gentleman in part says:

"Since I was eight years old, twelve years ago, projection has had my deepest interest, which has increased with each year. At 14 I decided projection was the only thing for me. At 17, three years ago, I made an attempt to serve an apprenticeship under the local union here, but it resulted in just trying. The way I was kidded and sent back and forth from one union official to another when they well knew no chance would be given me, makes my blood boil when I think of it.

"Now Dad has been more than good putting me through high school and seeing me through to learning projection. He is far along in years, though, and while he will not admit it, I know he won't be able to work much longer. It shames me that an old man should be working so hard to support me and to help me to save. And so I appeal to you, Mr. Richardson, is there any local in all this broad land that may have an opening? Of course there can be no doubt but that I can get into projection later, but I can see no good cause for waiting. I have about $110 saved, which would serve as at least part payment of the entrance fee of a local. I have had more than one year of bona fide experience in a projection room, using Powers and Simplex projectors and various sound systems. I feel that with my study of basic principles and with what experience I have had, I can step into a projection room and, regardless of the type of equipment, put on a creditable show. There is nothing I would like better than to tackle a good stiff examination, provided it be reasonable and honest, and I would try extremely hard to make the local proud of me.

"Please understand, I set all this forth that you may know the circumstances. If you so desire I shall be very willing to prove to you my ability to your entire satisfaction."

I have printed this letter for two reasons. First, if it is true that those union officers have done as charged, they are a disgrace to the local and to the I. A. However, let us try to believe the young man is in error in believing he was made sport of. This young gentleman has been a student in the "Bluebook School" for some time, and I have been impressed with the excellence of his answers. They were clear and put together with a great deal of neatness and care and indicated a mind that was capable of clear thinking.

Here are a few of projection's notables, meeting by happy co-incidence the other day in New York. First (extreme left), Joseph W. Engle, president of Local 640, out Long Island way. Next, P. A. McGuire, International Projector's advertising manager. Then John Griffiths of Ansonia, Conn., a projectionist for lo, these many years. Next Will C. Smith, once general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, now with National Theatre Supply Company. Finally, M. D. O'Brien of Loew's.

THE WHY OF SUPERVISORS

THAT ABLE MAN and very competent projectionist, Chauncey Greene of Minneapolis, hands us the following most interesting discussion of the supervisor of projection:

"I was considerably interested in a letter that appeared in your department recently. The writer thereof was pleading for return of authority to the individual projectionist, complaining of incompetent or careless supervisors and raising the question as to why such a situation prevails.

"I think he knows the answer, but is not so situated that he dare speak freely and is perhaps trying to spur some one else into doing so. In other words the boy is a diplomat.

"Inasmuch as I work for a circuit that is, so far as I am aware, wholly unsupervised, I can write with entire frankness, without being accused or even suspected of indulging in personalities. I observe and write therefore as a totally disinterested party.

"Let me start by asking your correspondent if he would himself accept a position as supervisor of projection?

"His answer, unless he be more of a sap than the tone and character of his letter indicates, would certainly be an emphatic no! And in that answer we have one phase of the situation which precludes any general change for the better; namely, that a very large percentage of all competent supervisors were good and sick of their jobs before the skids were placed under them by the decentralization (polite name for collapse) of the circuits. They would not return to their late positions were they, the said positions, handed them on a solid silver platter. The chance of any attempt at their recall is remote as a result of a human idiosyncrasy.

"The French Revolution was followed by an insane destruction of just about everything connected with the old order. The downfall of the Romanoffs ushered in a similar orgy of ruin to the old order, and the rise of "Nutsy" Hitler in the Teutonic flower bed has been the signal for another outburst of the "bad child" characteristics with which this muttsical, nutsical human race justifies the expression, 'What fools these mortals be!'

"It is hardly to be expected that the motion picture industry, inbred to so great an extent, would tower industrially and collectively as an intellectual giant and acquit itself logically and rationally in time of dire stress and crisis. Instead, when individuals and smaller corporations took over the operation of units of the dismembered circuits, they for the most part set out to obliterate and destroy, as one of them told this writer, all traces of circuit ownership, all policies of circuit operation, and so far as possible everything at all reminiscent of the old days.

"The best possible projection was the policy of most of the great circuits, and they went about securing it in a systematic, logical manner, all of which procedure was promptly cast into the discard in the general hysteria to discard all circuit policies. The result was just about exactly what might be expected.

"Consider the case of John Doe, a projectionist of real ability, 'sitting pretty' on a job paying around $60 per week of six days. Perhaps he meets the theatre manager once a month. Possibly not even that often. His time off duty is his own, and the hunting and fishing are pretty good. He well knows that so long as he does his work acceptably he is relatively secure in his job. Obscurity usually is synomous with security.

"What in Heavens' name has John Doe to gain by accepting a supervisors' position, assuming one be offered him? Possibly he may be offered as much as forty or fifty dollars a week additional—supervisors are not unionized you know—against perhaps sixty in his present job, for the privilege of arguing and scrapping (I almost said fighting) with all and sundry, including the usual percentage of morons, seven days a week, and being yapped at from all sides. In fact, his head is just sufficiently above the common level so that it forms a good mark for every sharpshooter and mud-slinger within range. His is a job very similar to being perpetually on the union wage scale committee.

"And so if the Big Boss feels he must have a projection supervisor. He selects a good yes-man, such as the correspondent complains about, and everything is lovely.

"The supervisor is not entirely to blame. Someone wanted a supervisor. No real man wanted the job, so he took it and is doing whatever he has to do to hold it.

"Such, gentlemen, is the situation, and such it is likely to remain until this present industrial depression has run its course and we come perhaps upon saner days. It is true there are still a few genuinely capable supervisors of projection functioning. We all know who they are, and they will know that what I have said does not apply to them."

While Friend Greene has been perhaps a bit rough, he has nevertheless spoken very largely the truth. No use in denying it. It is not to the credit of the motion picture industry, or to those theatre officials responsible, but facts are facts, and so it is. A very few have seemed to realize that such a policy is backward and cannot possibly pay in the end. To really do good work, a supervisor of projection must have real authority in projection matters.

FLYWHEEL ADJUSTMENT TO CURE TRAVEL GHOST!

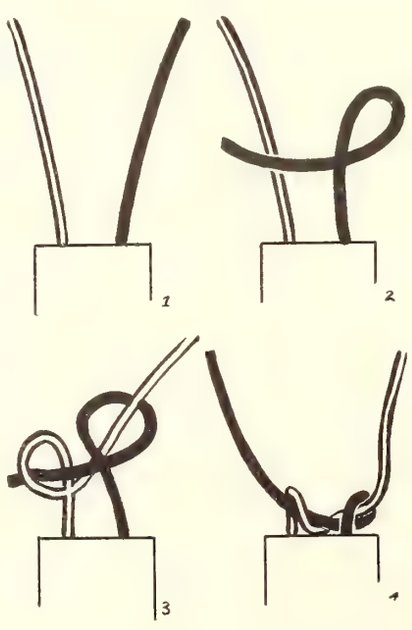
BRUCE H. DENNY, projectionist of the Sabota theatre in San Jacinto, Calif., springs a new one. He says:

"Regarding the article dealing with travel ghost, in a late issue of BETTER THEATRES, perhaps the North Carolina projectionist has a bit of mechanism vibration that moves the optical axis vertically, which would appear upon the screen in dimensions proportional to the projection distance.

"One of my Simplex projectors developed a 'bug' of this type, caused by a flywheel that was statically but not dynamically balanced. I rotated the wheel around the shaft without regard to the key slot until the vibration took place while the light beam was shuttered, which cured the trouble. This is of course only one of the many possibilities of this sort. My projection room floor is not sufficiently solid to prevent slight vibration of the projector.

"And now for a complaint to the profession in general: What about the many scratches some projectionists permit to be inflicted upon sound tracks by defective film guides and 'stuck' fire trap rollers? The exchange is always apologetic when I raise a kick about damage caused to my work by such monstrosities, but still the 'show's the thing' and must go on, noisy sound or otherwise.

"May I suggest that our national Congress set up an 'open season' in which we might polish up the old shotgun, load it with cast iron slugs and go after offenders who inflict such damage, it being more or less a national offense? For myself I finally designed and built a slit aismuth [Term used to define the angular position of the scanning beam with relation to the sound track passing the aperture.—F. H. R.] by means of which I am able to mask off the noisy part of the sound. It works wonders, but cannot be used on most equipments."



In the first place, one presumption of Brother Denny's is impossible, namely, that a vibration of the flywheel could set up travel ghost effect by moving the beam up and down. It might, in conjunction with a vibrating floor, operate to move the beam itself up and down, which screen displacement would, as Denny says, be proportional to the amount of such mechanism vibration and the projection distance. However, it could not and would not produce travel ghost. I was very certain of that, but to be dead sure there was nothing I was overlooking in the matter, I conferred with the International Projector Corporation, through Herb Griffin, who agreed with me that it was impossible. I had "Griff" write out his opinion. Here it is:

"Evidently Friend Denny considers that the stunt he did—moving the flywheel around on the shaft—could in some way affect 'travel ghost.' As a matter of fact this is not at all the case. No amount of vibration, no matter from where it is set up in a motion picture projector, could possibly produce travel ghost. This, as I am sure you are aware, can be produced by only three things: a worn out gear train leading to the shutter shaft; a shutter blade which is too narrow for the light beam it is cutting; or of course a shutter of the proper width mounted on a projector in perfect condition but not properly set.

"Denny's reference to 'statically but not dynamically balanced' is well taken and what he has done is very good in theory. Incidentally, I might say that 'dynamically balanced' and 'statically balanced' are two different things. They are general terms to apply to any rotating part of considerable mass. A rotating mass that is dynamically balanced is simply perfectly balanced for operation at a predetermined speed, whereas a rotating mass that is statically balanced is simply a check usually on knife edges for balance, and where an unbalanced condition is discovered, holes are usually drilled to remove metal where necessary, or to insert lead to make the mass heavier in some particular place. A balance determined according to the latter idea is generally acceptable under usual operating conditions, but in some of the very much finer equipment (not used in the motion picture industry) such as gyroscopes, extremely fine balance is required. In those cases both methods of balancing are adopted.

WIRE KNOTS. The sketches below illustrate the steps in the proper method of removing insulation from a wire and for tying the right kind of a knot to take the strain from the terminals of an attachment plug, a socket or an electrical appliance.

"However, I have my doubts as to whether Denny's idea would work out satisfactorily in practice, for the simple reason that a general vibration would be set up in the equipment if the flywheel were out of balance to any great extent, which would not be definitely periodic, and as a matter of fact the vibration he refers to might not at all be in the mechanism, but more likely would be in the motor armature or some other fast moving part, which transmits motion to the floor, which he admits is unsteady, thus setting up general vibration in the entire equipment.

"Of course, there are several things which could cause the effect he has discovered. It may be that the shaft is slightly bent, the flywheel could be a trifle out of balance, or even a loose bearing might give the same effect to some extent. So it is a pretty complicated question, after all, isn't it?"

For all of which we thank Mr. Griffin most cordially. I find myself in thorough agreement with his discussion at all points. And now as to the matter of the "aismuth."

The scanning beam for best results must in all cases be exactly parallel with the shadings of the variable density sound track, and with the faint highlights of the variable are a track. In other words, it must be exactly 90% from the vertical. In still other words, at right angles to vertical.

The "aismuth" does not have reference to the scanning beam itself, but to the angle at which it is adjusted. Apparently what Friend Denny has done is to arrange to mask off the scanning beam so as to eliminate the ground noise caused by scratches on the sound track at its extreme edges. Certainly he could not possibly mask off a scratch anywhere near its center without cutting down volume enormously and affecting the remaining sound adversely, particularly in the case of variable area track.

As an afterthought, Denny may say, "Well, I moved the flywheel and it stopped the trouble anyhow."

Yes. Just why I can't say, but can most emphatically say such a movement would not cure travel ghost. I can conceive the possibility that it might cure a vibration, though I can't see just why it should unless some other moving part of the projector, say a motor armature, for example, might be "out" at an opposite, so that balanced the other.

Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. Talking pictures require specific acoustic conditions..

Almost all problems of poor acoustics may be solved by applying the proper type and amount of acoustical (sound-absorbent) materials on walls or ceilings. The necessary acoustical correction may be calculated upon exact scientific basis, and precise recommendations may be made from a study of plans and interior furnishings, even in advance of construction. Acoustical materials of various types are available and can be quite readily harmonized with any style of interior.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. Air Conditioning and Cooling Equipment

AIR CONDITIONING in the theatre has already arrived at a degree of importance making it one of the necessary adjuncts of the modern motion picture theatre. Because in the theatre people are closely associated physically in great numbers, and for the purpose of realizing enjoyment, the atmospheric conditions of the auditorium especially must not be dependent upon the weather or on any other chance factor. Enjoyment of the entertainment is closely connected with comfort, and the popularity of the theatre is of course influenced by its effect upon health.

Air conditioning does not only mean facilities for cooling a theatre during the hot months, but involves distribution of fresh, clean air at proper temperatures and pressures, and without drafts in the breathing zone. This may mean that the system should be capable of functioning in connection with the heating apparatus as well as with the cooling facilities.

Local conditions influence to some extent the kind of an air conditioning system required in any specific theatre. Some could achieve comfortable, healthful air conditions with simpler, less costly ventilating equipment. Others require more elaborate systems, perhaps employing mechanical refrigeration.

The cooling method in the more elaborate apparatus requires a refrigeration chamber, in which the air is drawn through water vapor, the water having been cooled by means of a compressor, the refrigeration agent being carbon dioxide or other chemical of similar action. It is also possible to install a system having air-washing facilities with a measure of air-temperature control without inclusion of mechanical refrigeration.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE ARE KNOWN as Theatre Style Expansion Bolts. The new improved anchor consists of an especially long tapered fin head bolt, conical cup, lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut. For best results these should be placed into a hole ½-inch in diameter. It is suggested that one use a 17/32-inch diameter drill to allow for wear. The bolt is set head downward into the hole. The setting tool furnished with each order, is a hollow piece of rod, which is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete. This feature makes this new bolt hold more, even though the hole in the concrete has been drilled oversize to make up for drill wear.

These bolts come packed 100 to the box, and are completely assembled with the exception of the nuts which are placed in a separate container inside the box. Assembling the bolts in this fashion, without the nuts, saves considerable time in installation by eliminating the necessity of removing the nut from each bolt. After the bolt is securely set in the concrete, the hole in the chair leg, is placed over the bolt and the nuts screwed down tight.

These bolts are made in ¼-inch diameter, in 1½-inch or longer lengths. These expansion bolts will hold chairs tight to the floor up to the breaking strength of the bolt, which is in excess of 2,000 pounds direct pull.

Arc Regulators

AS THE NAME implies the arc regulator regulates the voltage at the arc through automatic feeding as the carbon is consumed and the gap between the carbons increases. The result of this automatic action is a steady light on the screen pronounced superior to that which it is possible to produce by hand. The arc control, as it is frequently called, feeds the carbons in an even manner.

Batteries

BATTERIES FORM important units of sound reproducers and are generally furnished by the manufacturer with the sound apparatus. Non-synchronous devices do not use them, but synchronous methods must have them in order to eliminate the hum of the alternating current. Any standard make of batteries can be used, but it is always best to use the make furnished or recommended by the manufacturer of the sound apparatus.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system.

Box Offices

KEEPING PACE with advancement in theatre design the box office has been developed from a rather unsightly necessity to a thing of beauty, modernly equipped for speedy and accurate sale of tickets. It is frequently designed in harmony with the design of the theatre and the display frames.

Attractive box offices are now available to exhibitors as separate units, which means that a theatre owner may obtain a modern ticket booth without necessarily remodeling his entire theatre front. These new box offices are constructed of materials designed to give life and color to an otherwise drab entrance. While it has been an accepted tradition that box offices should harmonize with the general architecture and treatment of the theatre exterior, development in box office construction indicate that the separate box office can be fitted suitably into any theatre design.

Brass Rails and Ornamental Bronze

BRASS RAILS have many uses in motion picture theatres—for separating sections of the lobby and foyer for proper control of traffic, as a means of protection at the edge of the balcony, around the orchestra pit, and so on.

Ornamental bronze has extensive use in motion picture theatres, sometimes merely decoratively, as in the form of placques, but most commonly for a combined utilitarian and decorative purpose, as represented by organ grilles and other gratings, box office wickets, lighting fixtures, display cases, etc.

Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons are required for projection in most motion picture theatres (all except those using Mazda light sources).

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

Development of the alternating current arc and the necessary lamp and transformer equipment for the use of the a.c. carbon, has added to the projection light resources of smaller theatres. The a.c. carbon can also be used with d.c. current at the arc.

Carpets

BECAUSE of the hard wear to which theatre carpets are subjected it has been found that there is no saving in the selection of cheap carpets. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should give an impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security.

The following are standard weaves of carpets, listed in order of price from the highest to the lowest:

1. Chenille.
2. Saxony.
3. American Oriental
4. Winton.
5. Axminster.
6. Velvet.
7. Tapestry.

Any of the grades from Saxony to Axminster, inclusive, have been used successfully in theatres.

Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

Chairs, Theatre

CHAIRS should be so chosen and the seating layout should be so planned as to ensure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition.

Chair Covers

IN ADDITION to giving a pleasing and inviting appearance to the auditorium, chair covers serve the practical purpose of coolness and sanitation. An interior otherwise drab may be transformed into a cool, clean, cheerful looking place through their use.

There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Working from blue prints provides the most satisfactory way of assuring a perfect fit of the cover for each chair.

Chair pads for veneer seats are also obtainable, and there are also special chair materials which are intended to be used as aids to acoustics.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it.

Change Makers

SPEED AND ACCURACY are obtained at the box office through the use of coin changing machines which in addition to their time saving facilities offer a valuable protection against annoying mistakes in making change to patrons. With the coin changing machines a light touch at the keyboard is all that is necessary to deliver the correct number of coins to the patron who easily scoops them up from a cup at the side of the change maker. Coins may be delivered either from the right or left side and these automatic cashiers as developed for theatres have been improved in recent months until now they are available in sizes which occupy only about 81 square inches of space in the box office.

Changeable Sign Letters

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals, characters, word plates and spacer panels of the same character are also available.

Cleaning Compounds

CLEANING COMPOUNDS facilitate routine janitor work and are more or less a necessity to the well kept theatre. There are various types of cleaning materials adapted to different kinds of surfaces and fabrics. A cream cleaner is available for carpet cleaning as well as wall washing.

In selecting his cleaners, the theatre manager should assure himself of their harmlessness as well as fitness for the purpose.

Composition Flooring

MANY PARTS of a theatre are suited to use of floor covering other than woven materials, and often composition flooring may adequately take the place of expensive tiles, terrazzo, etc.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums.

Composition floors, due to their resilience, afford comfort underfoot, durable and easy to maintain. Manufacturers offer them in a wide variety of colors and designs so that it is possible to harmonize them with the color scheme and decorative plan of any interior. Special designs can be executed in practically all of these materials, thus giving the floor distinction and individuality. Among the areas where resilient composition floors may be used are the following: lobbies, lounges, smoking rooms, dressing rooms, hallways, foyers, executive offices, etc.

Condensers (Lenses)

CONDENSERS are single glass lenses, unmounted. They are made in various diameters from 2¼ inches to 7¼ inches in diameter; the 4½-inch and the 7¼-inch are the sizes used mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex, some Meniscus or Moon shape, and others Bi-Convex.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; condensers 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches in diameter are usually used for spotlight projection.

of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

A type of curtain control machine specially designed for small theatres with tracks up to 40 feet in length, has been put on the market at a price considerably lower than that of the larger machines.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like.

Film Cabinets

THERE ARE various types of film cabinets having storage capacity from three to twelve reels per unit of various forms of construction so that the reel is elevated or brought within grasp by the opening of the cover. They are generally of double metal wall construction, so that should one reel become ignited in the cabinet, the others are insulated from this heat, and thus saved from any damage. Some of them are constructed so that they can be ventilated to the outside by means of piping.

Film Rewinders

THIS DEVICE is used for rewinding films after they are run through the projectors, and are made in two general patterns, the bench and fire-proof enclosed type. The bench or open rewind is made in one piece types with the dummy and geared end complete in one unit, and others are made so that they can be clamped to a bench or shelf, while some are permanently fastened by means of bolts. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings.

The enclosed rewinds are made in various patterns, both hand drive and motor drive models. The motor drive type is generally automatic in its operation, stopping at the end of the film or should the film break. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. Some motor drive types also have multiple speed ranges and accommodate either one- or two-thousand-foot reels. One type also has a detachable grinding and polishing attachment.

Fire Prevention for Projectors

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

power, connected through a coupling or on a common shaft, with a d.c. generator armature. This latter may be of a size to furnish from 15 to 600 or more amperes, and at a voltage of from 80 to 100. Ballast rheostats are used to drop this voltage to that of the arc, which varies from about 50 to 75 volts, depending upon its character. These generators are designed to hold their voltage very steady regardless of load and should be quiet operating and free from vibration.

The above describes the Multiple type unit which operates any number of arcs up to its full capacity in multiple and is almost exclusively used in this country. Where only two arcs of the same amperage are burned alternately, as on two projectors, the Series type with its higher efficiency can be used and is still sold largely outside the United States.

Under the heading of stage hardware are included such items as blocks and pulleys of all types, counterweights and arbors, belay pins, cleats, curtain tracks, keystones and corners, pin rails, pin wire, rope, manila and wire, rope locks, sand bags, smoke pocket stage screws, trim clamps, winches, carriers for extra-large screens and horns. Steel curtains and counterweight rigging are also important items of the equipment in the modern stage.

Heating Systems

THERE ARE A number of types and arrangements of theatre heating systems, each designed to fit the individual building. One of the systems is known as the fuel-to-air method whereby the transmission of the heating effect from the fuel is obtained without the intermediate processes of transmission through piping and radiators. The volumes of outdoor air entering the system are heated quickly and uniformly, producing comfortable heating and invigorating ventilation in all seasons of the year. The heating units most generally used to warm the incoming air are commonly known as unit heat generators.

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electrically driven elevator to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw-lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Ladders, Safety

THE SAFETY LADDER is a safeguard, both for the employer and the employe. It minimizes the risk of accidents and the possibility of becoming involved in costly law suits. The safety ladder has the approval of the Underwriters Laboratories. Sizes range from 3 feet to 16 feet. Because of the rigidity of these ladders, they are time-savers.

Lamps, Exciter

THE PURPOSE of exciter lamps is to supply the light energy which actuates the photoelectric cell. It is located in the sound head in such adjustment that its beam of light rides upon the sound track, transmitted or interrupted according to the variations of the track. It is a basic element in the mechanism of sound-on-film reproduction and should be durable and precisely adapted to the particular design of the apparatus used.

Lamps, High Intensity

HIGH INTENSITY projector lamps are of two types—reflector type, and condensing-lens type. Their selection depends on the size of the theatre and other local factors. The condenser-lens type (so-called super-high intensity) is generally operated at from 115 to 130 amperes. The reflector type is generally operated at from 70 to 80 amperes. Lamps in the high intensity class are of the larger type or represent other conditions requiring a higher degree of screen illumination.

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

INCANDESCENT LAMPS for theatre motion picture projection are usually of the low-voltage type for added efficiency and greater source concentration. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a transformer or regulator. The 900-watt, 30-ampere, T-20 bulb lamp usually provides acceptable results on good screens up to 16 feet wide at throws not greater than about 100 feet.

There are also available 1,000-watt prefocus base, and 1,500-watt bipost base, 100-120 volt, T-20 bulb lamps employing the biplane type of filament construction, which is inherently of higher cost but makes possible the requisite source concentration at ordinary circuit voltages and thus saves the cost of auxiliary apparatus. They are preferred where operating schedules are relatively short, and for projectors of the semi-portable type. Screen results equal or surpass those from the 900-watt lamp. The 1,500-watt lamp requires forced ventilation.

For portable 35-mm. projectors there are the 500-watt monoplane filament, and the 750-watt and 1,000-watt biplane filament lamps in short T-20 bulbs with medium prefocus bases. All are of the 100-120 volt type. The 750-watt and 1,000-watt lamps require forced ventilation.

For stereoptican projection there are the 500-watt, short T-20 bulb, medium prefocus base lamp; and the 100-watt, long T-20 bulb mogul prefocus base lamp. Both of the 100-120 volt types employ monoplane filaments.

Lamps, General Lighting

THE MANY TYPES of lamps available today make it possible to have light of just the proper quantity and quality. The types of lamps used to a great extent influence the cost of lighting. Lamps themselves vary in cost. Special, expensive types are often used where the more standard types would be satisfactory. Poor and inefficient lamps use up energy and do not give the light they should. Old, dirty and blackened lamps waste energy without a proper return. Lamps of the wrong voltage give too little light, or burn out too quickly.

Incandescent lamps are usually designated by wattage, voltage, bulb shaps and diameter. The diameter of the bulb is given in eighths of an inch.

Colored lamps are available with inside spray finish and with natural colors in several sizes. The natural-colored lamps are specially desirable for indirect cove lighting; the inside-colored lamps for exterior displays and where the lamps themselves are seen.

Spotlight and floodlight lamps have filaments that are as concentrated as practicable, and in the prefocus types, placed very accurately with respect to the base. The lives of these lamps are 200 and 800 hours, respectively—the shorter the life the greater the light output for a given wattage. In general, the lamps have round bulbs with wattages of 250, 400, 500, 1,000, 1,500, and 2,000.

Lamps, Low Intensity

THIS CLASSIFICATION is rather general, inasmuch as it refers to all types of projection lamps designed for theatres requiring light of lower intensity. Lamps in this class are Low Intensity, Hi-Low, Alternating Current Reflector Type and Suprex (the latter using alternating current carbons with direct current). All of these lamps are of the reflector type. The operating amperage for these lamps ranges from 15 to 80.

Lenses

FOR MOTION PICTURE theatre service there are projection lenses and condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection lens is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three-quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

Lighting Control Equipment

THE MODERN theatre with a well balanced and effective lighing system, has made many demands on the manufacturers of lighting control equipment. Elaborate color effects must be possible and to change the lighting and gradually merge the light from one color to another without attracting the audiences a very flexible control system is required. Even the small control systems permit the operator to produce hundreds of color shades.

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connecter. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt. The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are used for cove lighting or spotting the head of a singer or organist. The incandescent spotlights come either with floor standard or pipe hangers for border lighting batons.

In stage work spotlights are frequently banked one above the other on a stand and used for flood-lighting from the wings. Prices range from $12 to $500.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in appearance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

USE OF MARQUEES BY motion picture theatres in general. They serve a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Marquees are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquee manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the marquee is to be used.

Microphones

MICROPHONES in theatres have a variety of uses, ranging from stage program presentations, regular and emergency announcements, to reports to patrons on sports and other timely items of interest. In most cases microphones can be added to the amplifying equipment used for sound-on-film service with little accessory equipment.

Several types of microphones are available. Carbon button and condenser types are most suitable and the least expensive for all-round theatre use. Although carbon microphones may be obtained in both single and double button types, the double button type is usually recommended for casual use in theatres as it gives clearer reproduction than the single button model and costs only slightly more.

Condenser microphones are quiet in operation and are preferred for use in stage productions. Although the condenser microphone is more expensive than the carbon button type, condenser microphone reproduction is free from the slight hiss, known as carbon noise.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium. These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, method of diffusion is the simple one of which are diffused throughout the air. One placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Plastic Paint

PLASTIC PAINT is extensively used for decorating auditorium walls, lobbies and foyers of theatres. With this paint almost any sort of rough texture can be developed from the most refined stipple to the shaggiest Spanish palm finish. Sand swirl, two-tone and other effects can also be obtained in a number of colors and color combinations.

Plastic paint comes in the form of a white powder. Before application it is mixed with water; sometimes, also, with coloring matter. It may be tinted with dry colors before application, or the plastic paint may be sized and then glazed with an oil glaze tinted with oil colors. It may be applied on any type of surface and when thus properly applied and treated it can be washed from time to time with soap and water.

Pop Corn Machines

POP CORN MACHINES offer an excellent opportunity for theatres to increase their revenue, according to information from exhibitors who are operating them. One exhibitor states that in one week he cleared $59 with a corn popper in his lobby. Figures provided by another exhibitor state that in six months he took $967.91, out of which his expenses were $296.94, leaving a profit of $670.97. One theatre circuit in the east is using pop corn machines at five of its houses.

Pop corn machines may be had in a number of sizes and styles, ranging from small models to elaborate machines which also include peanut warming facilities.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from rooms or buildings easily. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available. Also available are sound-on-film unit projectors of portable type for both 35-mm. and 16 mm. film.

surfaces can be projected upon a screen. They are used in the making of posters for lobby displays and similar purposes. The artist projects a drawing or photograph from a press sheet or other prepared advertising matter, upon the surface on which he is to make his own drawing, controlling the image size by moving the projector nearer to or farther from the objective. The system of mirrors and lenses in the projector gives an image of the same direction and proportions as those of the original. The artist then merely traces along the projected lines, filling in the colors as indicated.

Poster projectors usually allow the use of original subjects as large as six or seven inches long by five or six inches high. Subjects larger than that can be projected and copied in sections.

Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc. The projection room, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection.

The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to acommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means toilet facilities should be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

Projection Machines

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film.

Safes, Box Office

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the idea, in brief, being that with this type of safe in the box office a theatre is likely to lose only the amount which it is keeping exposed for making change.

Box office safes are made of steel and provided with a slot into which surplus receipts are placed as received, or are equipped with a chute through which the surplus receipts may be dropped. Safes of this type usually make possible the lowest rates of burglary insurance.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT and theatre organ playing are no longer hit-or-miss propositions. Both have become highly specialized. The theatre manager must be trained in administration duties, advertising and technics, and the organist must be able to dramatize the music to accompany the screen attractions. So valuable do chain organizations consider the trained man or woman that they are demanding those persons who have become skilled through graduate work in schools.

Screens

THERE ARE FOUR types of motion picture screens. This classification is based on the character of the finished surfaces, as follows: Metallic, Matt White, Beaded and Translucent (or rear projection). The latter type is not in general use, and for the purposes of this description will require no further mention.

Sound screens are of two types, porous and perforated. A porous screen is one on which a reflective surface is built on a loosely woven fabric, leaving the openings in the cloth unobstructed to permit the passage of sound. A perforated screen surface is applied on a closely woven fabric, first making an opaque sheet, which is then perforated with minute holes to permit the passage of sound.

Screens should be selected largely by the width of the theatre and its projection equipment or light source.

Screens are again classified as to their reflective properties into three general classes: Diffusive (matt white), semi-diffusive metallic (silver or gold fibre), and directive (beaded). The white is the only one of the above types which could be used satisfactorily in a theatre of any size, and only then with high intensity projection. Because it diffuses the light almost equally to all the seats, it is a necessity in the extra-wide auditoriums. Due to their higher reflective properties, the metallic and beaded surfaces will produce satisfactory brilliance and detail when used in conjunction with the more economical projection units, making a substantial saving in current. Since the beaded screen has the highest reflective surface, it should be used with incandescent projection lamps.

Screen Masks

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Screen Resurfacing

TO INSURE proper screen illumination without increasing power consumption or incurring the risk of glare, the screen surface should be kept as reflective as possible. In spite of regular cleaning routine, however, screens gradually get soiled, and in instances in which it is not felt that a new screen is warranted, one has recourse to resurfacing.

Exhibitors have used a flat white paint to resurface their screens. However, due to the greater necessity today for an immaculate screen, the practice of resurfacing is increasing, and as a result specific materials and expert methods are available. One of these materials is sprayed on, after the screen is washed, and is of such character that it does not clog the perforations, and that it restores to the screen a high reflective power. One of the characteristics cited in a resurfacing material now on the market is its penetrability, causing it to permeate the texture of the screen fabric, restoring its original tightness.

THE PORT SHUTTER is made entirely of metal with a metal sliding suspended on a cord in which is connected a fusible link. In case of fire, the fusible links melts and the fire shutter automatically drops over the port hole in the booth. They are made to fit standard openings, such as projection port holes, stereopticon port holes and spotlight port holes. Prices range from $9 to $25.

Signs, Directional

SIGNS MAY be considered in two general groups—those that are illuminated and those which are etched on metal or wood without illumination. The illuminated signs, which are highly artistic in finish and construction, are made to read either from one side or both. The lettering in the signs is chipped into the glass and silvered, making it easy to read in daylight. The letters glow in a soft greenish color. Illumination is accomplished with 25-watt showcase lamps. Signs are fitted with lamps, cord and plug ready for attaching to light socket.

Signs—Electric

MOTION PICTURE theatres are extensive users of electrical advertising, the usual electric signs at some of the metropolitan houses being the most elaborate of their kind. Since the sign must necessarily be made with consideration for the size of the theatre facade and facilities for anchoring it, the matter is usually given individual consideration, and sketches prepared for the specific building to which the sign is to be fastened.

Slides

SLIDES ARE DIVIDED into four different classes: Song slides, advertising slides, announcement slides and special advertising slides. Song slides have come into vogue within the last few years.

A patented slide, having a paper frame and a composition transparency flexible enough to be placed in a typewriter, permits the management to prepare its own slides, at a moment's notice if need be, and is thus particularly useful for special announcements.

Sound Equipment, Complete

MUSIC and sound reproducing devices are of two types, synchronous and non-synchronous. The latter use phonograph records, which are cued to the picture. The majority of these machines, which have from two to four discs for the records, are operated from the pit or other location in view of the screen. The synchronous type, however, is operated from the projection booth, employing disc records or film recordings made in conjunction with the picture.

Among the developments in motion picture sound is the increase in the employment of the sound-on-film method of reproductoin. Experiment has eradicated many of the disadvantages of this method and increased its advantages.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

A revolutionary improvement in Sound was made when our patented No. 309 Horn was developed to eliminate the resonant point and still maintain the many advantages of the wooden horn. This is proven by the fact that we were able to completely cover this horn with patents.

Mr. Allen's experience is typical of many reports we are receiving regarding this horn in actual theatre service.

NEVER in the history of the theatre has electrical equipment played as vital a role as it does today. From projection room to stage and to manager's office, electricity to a large extent runs the show. Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus are devices for automatically controlling the temperature of the auditorium, organ chambers or any part of the theatre where a uniform heat must be maintained. In a control for an auditorium the device is a small thermostat, which actuates a valve on an air-line, which in turn operates the shutters in the air ducts. In the average size theatre several of these will be located at various places and each will operate independently of the other, thus relieving hot or cold spots in any one section. Controls for organ chambers turn on or off electric heaters and also work on the thermostatic principle.

Upholstery Material

USE OF SOUND absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down, and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

Usher Signal Systems

THE USHER SIGNAL SYSTEM provides a sending station at each aisle, equipped with numeral push buttons that give any total of seats that aisle might have. The usher registers on this station the number of vacant seats available, which information is transmitted to the floor or head usher, depending on the size of the theatre. In the larger houses the floor usher relays the information to the head usher. The head usher sends total of all aisles and floors to the doorman who directs the people to the different sections of the house where the vacant seats are waiting.

Vacuum Cleaning Equipment

APPARATUS FOR cleaning carpeting and fabrics by suction is to be considered more or less necessary for proper maintenance of the theatre. Brooms and brushes are useful, but cannot be considered substitutes for suitably designed vacuum cleaning equipment, which not only cleanses more effectively, but does so with less time and labor.

The unusually large and elaborate theatre is sometimes best served by stationary equipment with pipes leading to the various levels, where the hose is attached. To the average theatre, however, unit cleaners of heavy-duty type with a high degree of portability are best adapted.

To make little odd jobs of cleaning easier, as in small offices, lounges, etc., it is frequently worth while to augment this larger equipment with a cleaner of the common domestic type.

Ventilators

PROPER DISTRIBUTION of air in the theatre is an important feature of correct ventilation. One of the methods of achieving this is through the use of ventilators located in the auditorium floor. Air brought into the theatre is distributed in this manner to all parts of the house. Ventilators of this type which are generally known as mushroom ventilators, may be adjusted to permit the desired amount of air entering the auditorium.

electrogram

RECTIFIERS—Rectifiers are designed for half- and full-wave rectification. When properly designed, one type is just as efficient as the other. The half-wave type is simpler than the full-wave, but has a lower power factor. When a rectifier is used for ordinary battery charging, the half-wave type is usually used for loads up to 6 amperes. When the load is such that the pulsating hum is objectionable, or when a considerable amount of power is required, the full-wave rectifier, with filters, is the one generally used. If a rectifier bulb does not light, or burn, after turning on the a.c. supply, check up on these points: Use a test lamp or voltmeter to find out if the a.c. power is on; look for blown fuses; the bulb may be loose in the socket, or the socket contacts need cleaning.

Modernizing the Projection Room

obsolete and should pass into the realm of forgotten things.

For these unlucky exhibitors, and for the more fortunate ones who have booths situated at point E, who wish to make their theatres up-to-date with the help of the Federal Housing program now under way, the following suggestions may be timely.

In almost all theatres containing a booth at Location E as a starting point, the enlargement of this room will occasion no great loss from the standpoint of income, as the balcony seats located at either side of the projection room are seldom filled, and the removal of a few of these chairs does not mean the serious loss it did in the days when every seat was reserved.

[Continuing his discussion in the November 17th issue, Mr. Boller will consider the construction and fitting out of the projection room.]

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

Equipment News and Comment

SOUND APPARATUS

● A six-tube amplifier for theatres of capacity up to 2,000, and a speaker unit especially designed to match it, have been developed by the Mellaphone Corporation of Rochester, N. Y., manufacturers of soundheads for Powers and Simplex professional projectors, and for the Holmes portable projector.

In the Mellaphone WR-2A3 amplifier, the tubes are arranged horizontally in convenient position over the control panel. The unit is equipped with a master volume control, new type silent changeover switch, tone control and plugs for microphone, radio or non-sync attachment. Provided are output taps of 6, 10 and 16 ohms. The case is of black crystalline finish. Tubes used are 1—53, 2—57's, 2—2A3's, 1—5Z3.

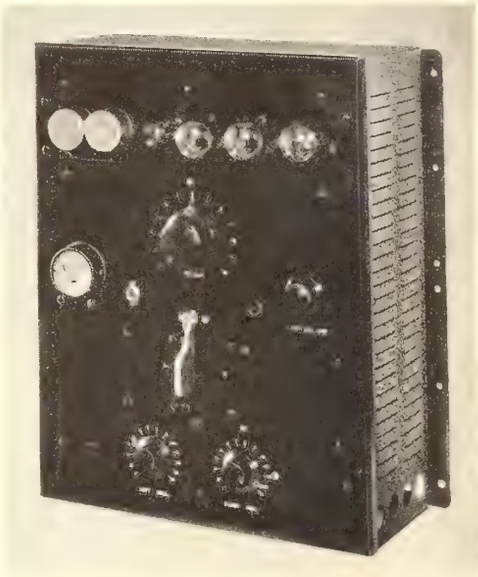
The new speaker unit is of auditorium type and is adapted in design to any amplifier having a low-impedance output. Two types of cones are used—moulded and paper. Another feature is a large field coil for the ensurance of an easy flow of current. For this speaker a directional horn is also manufactured.

WALL COVERING

● A new medium for decorative wall covering, interior or exterior, has been brought out by the Fyrart Division of the Cincinnati Advertising Products Company. The material consists in glass units for use in the decoration of fronts, box offices, lobbies and lavatories. Through the use of these flat glass units, any design may be created, and an unlimited choice of colors is available. Colors are fired into the units, which prevents any crazing, cracking or chipping. The units may be obtained in any size or shape, and their price and setting cost are said to be low.



TO REVAMP LIGHTING

● A notable project which will probably result in a number of technical developments in stage lighting is underway in New York, at the Metropolitan Opera House. The installation, with equipment designed by Kliegl Brothers of New York, will include footlights, borderlights, spotlights, floodlights, special wiring devices and other elements of modern stage lighting, much of it especially designed to permit lighting to play a new part in the production of opera.

SOUNDHEAD FEATURES

● New developments in soundheads for Simplex projectors are announced by the Le Roy Sound Equipment Corporation of Rochester, N. Y., as follows:

Friction pad located prior to sound gate to make possible a loop between projector take-off sprocket and sound gate.

Mellaphone WR-2A3 amplifier.

Dual exciter lamp mount with each exciter lamp separately adjustable without use of pliers or screwdriver. Either 10-volt, 7½-ampere; 10-volt, 5-ampere; or 8½-volt, 4 ampere, exciters may be used.

Optical system incorporating new precision lenses and highly corrected slit, designed to project more light and reproduce 10,000 cycles or more.

Extra heavy flywheel and sound sprocket shaft.

Photoelectric cell and exciter wiring connections made to terminal block with provision for the use of either conduit or BX in wiring.

Some Pointers on Reconstruction

office. This type of column can be removed, and in general the simplest way is to replace this with two flanking columns on each side of the lobby proper and to put a new beam across the top, picking up the load from the inside column. This makes a marvellous improvement in the front, and unless there is a tall building above the space in question, is generally not an expensive operation.

CHANGING FLOOR PITCH

There are two ways of changing the pitch of your auditorium floor. One is to lower the front end, and the other is to raise the rear end. The latter is the more economical and can be done by either building concrete steps over the old concrete floor, or if wood framing is allowed, by building a new wood floor over the existing condition. Two things must be considered: one, the number of steps that would be necessary at the back of the auditorium if you raised the floor (which is a decided objection); the other, if you lower your floor in front and there is a basement or plenum space underneath the present floor, you will ruin the plenum space which is used for your ventilating system, and the other objection may be that it is carried on reinforced concrete and steel girders, which makes a complicated structural condition and an expensive operation if involved in changing the floor slope.

If, on the other hand, there is no structural condition below your floor, you must carefully consider the depth below ground of the footings of your two side walls at the lower end of the floor so that your contemplated pitch does not go below these footings.

The average reconstruction job of small proportions allows the use of steel more readily than concrete, although if your building ordinances require that steel be fireproofed with two inches of fireproofing material, you may find concrete the cheaper if you have room in which to work.

The simplest rule that I can convey to you in contemplating structural remodeling is that practically anything can be built today if sufficient funds are provided, and the cost of most structural changes are directly proportionate to the span between supports. So in planning your structural remodeling, if you will try and create the shortest distance possible between supporting members, you will have the most economical structural condition.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

AS A SUBSCRIBER of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES, I am taking the liberty of forwarding you photostatic copies of the construction plans for a cinema I am interested in and which is at present in course of construction. The measures given are in meters. The constructors are expected to finish their job by February, 1935.

I am not quite satisfied with the seating distribution, which I believe could be improved; I am also convinced that the hall dimensions are excessive and that a space could be found for a small business locale. No provision whatever has been made for air conditioning, which I believe is a necessity.

As I will be occupying this cinema for a ten-year period, and would like to have these things straightened out beforehand, I would be very much obliged if your technical staff could study the plans enclosed and be kind enough to report their conclusions at their earliest convenience—if possible, before November next.—S. E. M.

The Answer:

I CERTAINLY agree with you that the seating layout of your theatre plan can be a great deal improved, and since you will be operating this theatre on a ten-year lease, I regret to state that these plans need a very careful study to prevent poor conditions and to remedy a great many items which are absolutely faulty and which will be a great handicap, not only from an operating standpoint, but from a patronage standpoint as well.

By giving your plans my special attention, I find that the arrangement of the seating layout is bad. While I am not familiar with any building codes governing theatres in your country, I doubt that such a plan would be accepted. In nearly all cases it will be necessary for a patron to pass thirteen seats to reach the one nearest to the wall. This means a great inconvenience to the patrons already seated. I suggest that you rearrange the seating layout as follows:

Plan for a center section of 14 seats across, with a 4 foot, 6 inch aisle on each side, then there will be space for a wall bank on each side of the auditorium with an average of seven seats across. By this method the auditorium can be easily filled and emptied with the least amount of inconvenience to your patrons.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The doors between vestibule and auditorium can remain as shown by providing a 6 foot cross-aisle in back of the center bank of seats, or doors could be placed at the head of each aisle. I fail to notice provisions for fire exits near stage, also from balcony. They are essential for the safety of the public.

It appears to me that there is a great deal of waste space in the vestibule, but this may be due to the customs of your country, as is the case in Continental Europe. There certainly is enough room to provide for business locales, or even to increase the size of the auditorium if required. By placing the stairways to balcony along the wall between auditorium and vestibule, and by somewhat rearranging the layout of the toilet rooms, a great deal of space could be gained for rental concessions. The balcony seating arrangement can also be easily improved. There are now 23 seats in a row in the center section. That is too many for comfort. Reduce that amount to fourteen. By this reduction you would not be losing any seats, as there would be two wall banks of an average of seven seats each. This could be easily accomplished, as the stairways enter on the cross-aisle.

I am afraid that the incline of the balcony is not sufficient for good vision. This could be remedied by reducing the height between the top of the auditorium and the soffit of the boxes. Nine feet would be sufficient for this space. The auditorium floor has not sufficient slope. This could easily be changed, as there is no basement under the building.

All these items mentioned are serious and should be changed now, as it will be impossible to do so after the theatre is completed. If I am correct in my presumption that the whole plot is theatre property, very much better results would have been obtained if your architect had planned the building along the left side wall and had squared it off, instead of planning it diagonally.

[S. E. M. is further answered, concerning another part of his problem, in Maintenance Tabs, in this issue.—THE EDITOR.]

The Question:

THE WRITER is a regular subscriber and a member of the Managers' Round Table Club, from Keith's theatre in this city. I am desirious of securing help in the remodeling of a garage into a theatre, spending the least amount of money possible. The garage is 49 feet wide, 85 feet long and 13 feet, 6 inches high, and we had anticipated raising the ceiling to 18 feet, unless you could suggest a way of overcoming this, which would be rather expensive.

The site is 70 feet from the street, and we must enter through a runway 9 feet wide, on the side next to a filling station.

We had expected to cover the walls and ceiling with Celotex or a similar material, and to paint same. We want between 500 and 600 seats, also a stage about 12 feet deep.

We will heat the theatre with two unit heaters, using present boiler, which is adequate to heat building to 70° at 10° below zero.

Will you kindly give me your ideas, suggesting some way to make a presentable and show entrance and promenade from the street and a simple but novel layout for theatre proper. For this I will be very thankful.—W. F.

The Answer:

I DOUBT if you will be able to obtain more than 500 seats in a building of the dimensions which you describe. The largest amount of seats in a row across the width of the auditorium will be 23 seats—thirteen seats across a center bank with a 4-foot aisle on each side, and two wall banks of five seats each across. After deducting from the length of the building 12 feet for stage, 6 feet for cross-aisle or foyer, and 9 feet from the first row to stage, plus wall thickness, there will only be left enough space for 22 rows of seats, making a maximum seating capacity of 506 seats.

If there is a basement under the garage, you may be able to lower the floor. This will be less expensive than raising the roof, of the building 12 feet for stage, 6 inches however it will be necessary that you obtain a minimum ceiling height of 18 feet.

The materials, which you indicate for the covering of walls and ceiling will be all right. I do not quite understand if you intend enclosing the runway or if it must remain open. Why not treat it in a pergola style with columns and open rafters? Or you could plan it as an arcade with a permanent roof and open arches for side walls, which could be enclosed with window sash in winter time. The method of heating suggested will be satisfactory.

The Question:

I HAVE BEEN reading your articles in "Planning The Theatre" and I have taken a great interest in some of the answers. I find myself in need of some assistance.

I am planning an entirely new front and lobby arrangement, also if possible, make room for a few more seats. I plan to have the box office flush with the front of the building, with doors on either side. Any information which you can furnish me will be very much appreciated.

Also for your information, there will be room below the lobby for a sufficiently spaced men and women's lounge. I am sending a sketch of layout.—J. M.

The Answer:

BY PLACING the ticket booth flush with the front of the building with entrance doors on each side, you can make the lobby about 10 feet deep, provided another set of doors can be included in the wall between lobby and foyer. These doors should be solid, as glass panel doors allow too much daylight to interfere with good vision.

The inner foyer does not have to be more than 6 feet wide, so you can gain space for about two more rows of seats. You can plan the stairway to the basement lounge in the space now occupied by the women's toilet room on first floor. Plan the men's and women's toilet rooms as far apart from each other as possible, or on opposite ends of the basement lounge.

The Question:

I AM PAINTING my lobby and would like some ideas as to color combinations, paint, etc. My lobby is one of those old town opera house affairs. It is one of those walk-up affairs. The bottom of it is wainscoted and the top is plastered. I thought perhaps we could use a mottled effect with colors blown in, but I don't know what color to use on the wainscoting.

Also, I have photo frames, one-sheet frames, and I would like some color for these. Please write me as soon as you can, as I have men giving it a prime coat now, and a finish coat soon.—R. S.

The Answer:

IT IS NOT very easy for me to suggest a color scheme for your lobby as I do not know your taste. However, at the present time one is not afraid to use very vivid colors. If the lobby is dark and needs brightening up, use a very light soft Geneva green or Pearl gray. If the walls are rough they may be mottled. The wainscoting could then be painted several shades darker. Finish the photo frames in silver with a darker green or gray as used for walls as back ground or body, the dado between wall and wainscoting to be finished in silver. The ceiling can be finished in a light tan or ivory. This combination will give a nice effect.

The Question:

ATTACHED HERETO is the sketch of our lobby. Will you please be kind enough to make suggestions as to how you would change this so as to liven it up and renew it to a more modern form?

I would appreciate any service you may offer and will also appreciate your letting me have information as to colors in decorations you would suggest.—H. L.

The Answer:

THE MAIN TROUBLE with your lobby is that through the different sizes of the attraction boards and show windows the entire side walls are thrown out of balance. To remedy this I will suggest two methods which seem suitable to your problem.

If it is essential that the show windows remain as they are, fur out the walls and cover them with some kind of painted or wood grained materials held in place by white metal strips placed horizontally about 3 feet off center. Encase the show windows with a neat bevel moulding about 8 inches wide all around, then place in center of spaces between show windows and walls, recessed poster cabinets, with concealed strip lighting. Of course these cabinets must be of equal sizes. Provide a well designed cornice in intersection of walls and ceiling.

Should it be possible, however, to eliminate the show windows and build up the openings, you could place the present three-sectional display frames in the center of the wall, with two smaller ones of similar design in the center of the wall spaces left on each side. The walls could be finished in a texture, and the improvement would be very noticeable. If the doors on the end of the lobby should be between the foyer, I suggest to replace them with solid flush doors inlaid with some white metal strips. Some well designed hardware and new electric light fixtures will add a great deal to the improvement.

Your Stage a Liability? Make It an Asset

sang "Throw another Log on the Fire." This novelty was originated several years ago for the old time melody, "Just a Song at Twilight," for which it is equally suitable.

The setting (Figure 1) is very effective, yet so simple to build that a high school boy with a little artistic ability can easily reproduce it. If a platform (A) of two levels, 1 foot and 2 feet high, respectively, is available, the front risers are covered with strips of wall board (what is known in the building trades as 45-pound blue plaster board, makes an economical yet satisfactory substitute for the more expensive wall board). The platform is set directly in back of the opening in a split cyclorama (B). If the orchestra uses music stands, the shields for these are preferably cut from wall board (beaver board), or heavy chip-board reinforced with lattice strips.

The two guns (C), are cut from wall board, and reinforced with 1x2-inch wood strips. Figure 2 shows a gun scaled for enlargement on a sheet of wall board 4 feet wide. Each square represents 1 foot.

A home-made firing connection can be rigged as in Figure 4, which shows the back side of the gun. A suitable tin can with open end, here bisected to show fuse arrangement, is clamped or wired to the gun. Punch two holes in the bottom of the can, large enough to take porcelain tubes, a-a. Run one insulated wire through each tube and tie a knot in each wire at the inside end of each tube to prevent wires from being pulled out. Scrape off about ¼-inch of insulation. Connect (short) the two wires by means of one single strand, b, of fine wire from a common drop cord. When the electric current is sent through the wires, the single strand of drop cord wire, too light to carry the load, burns out and in so doing ignites the fuse of the fire cracker which is touching it. If a flash without detonation is wanted, use ordinary photographic flash powder instead of fire crackers.

Small elements, such as those used in cigar lighters on cigar store counters and in automobiles, can also be used to ignite the fuse. Care must be exercised to connect such elements only to the voltage for which they are made. Automobile lighter elements are commonly made for use on 6-8 volts and must therefore be operated on a transformer, or on a storage battery.

Warning—never use explosives or flash powders on the stage unless draperies are flame-proofed and at a safe distance from the flash.

The shield (D), with surmounting eagle, is also cut from wall board and suspended with fine wires in front of a plain dark blue sky drop (E). The eagle is also drawn to scale for enlargement. (See Figure 3.)

The sky drop may be ornamented with small four- and five-pointed stars cut from cardboard and sprinkled with metallics. Attach the stars to the sky drop by means of pins set through the stars at an angle (Figure 5). They can then be easily attached and removed and will not damage the drop.

The narrow tabs (F), of blue plaster board on frames, or cut from wall board, with corresponding border (G), may be added if a more elaborate set is desired.

Painting: All stars, platform, shield, and border, are white paint or silver metallics on a dark blue ground. Band shields, tabs, and large shield, red and white stripes. Stripes should be in odd numbers—three, five, seven, etc., on each piece so that both outside stripes are red. The eagle could be in gold, shaded in black and highlighted in light yellow, nearly cream. Or it may be done in full colors. The guns are of medium light gray with black shadings, very light gray bordering on white, and having highlights.

A portable sentry box made of wall board and painted with red and white stripes makes a novel street ballyhoo. Lettered panels on sides and back carry announcements of the attraction. A guard stationed at the box, has tickets for sale.

pump; the pump output side is connected to the pipe framework which carries the spray nozzles.

When the pump is put into operation it takes the water from the tank and pumps it with pressure to the spray nozzles, which in turn fan the water out so that all the nozzles in one bank form a complete and uniform curtain of water inside the sheet metal box, through which the air sucked in by the fan must pass. Between the sheets or curtains of water and the actual fan intake is a system of many narrow metal plates set in staggered arrangement, vertically. The arrangement is such that no air can pass through this system of plates without striking them one or more times. These plates are called eliminators, water, some of the water vaporizes and is carried with the air through the fan and duct system into the theatre. But the air, due to its velocity, also entrains with it a quantity of finely divided particles of water. These entrained particles of water strike the eliminator plates, form drops and run down the plates back into the tank.

The foregoing is given as an example of what might be done in the case of an air washer. It is given here for what help it might provide the manager or owner of a smaller type theatre, in supervising the construction of a proper air washer by some capable local plumber or steam fitter. I would recommend, however, that if possible, air washers be purchased ready for more or less as a mirror, and the light it catches makes the wall less obtrusive.

PLAIN PAINTED WALLS

Plain painted walls, all in a single color and without ornament are usually very uninteresting, but there is nothing to prevent painting different parts in different colors to form a striking but harmonious color scheme without mouldings or panels that would be far more effective than the usual decoration. The painting of the exterior of the buildings at the Century of Progress Exposition was a practical demonstration of this kind of color treatment. While it may not become the fashion to paint the outside of buildings in various colors, excepting at expositions where the scheme can be applied to an entire group, there is no reason why such a multicolored scheme of plain areas should not be used in painting the interior of a theatre where there would not be anything to clash with it, and where it would not clash with anything else.

This kind of decoration has been used to some extent in recent motion picture theatres in Europe. The late Joseph Urban, widely known architect and designer who created the highly effective color scheme with which the Century of Progress Exposition opened last year, saw the possibilities of this kind of decoration for the interior treatment of motion picture theatres and made a very interesting sketch in color showing such a scheme. He also had made a model showing this design, a photograph of which, showing the interior, accompanies this article.

This theatre interior is without ornament, is very plain. Dependence for effectiveness is placed on the proportioning of the wall spaces and other parts, and upon painting them in different colors. The walls are plain, except that they are furred out in a series of large slanting surfaces. Running from floor to ceiling in the back edge of each of these planes is a trough reflector containing electric lamps in back of a tall narrow strip of translucent glass. The light shines on the slanting surface next towards the rear, very little coming directly into the room. These light sources make the vertical light strips seen in the photograph of the model.

The walls are painted a plain Chartreuse color, a slightly greenish yellow, from the recess containing the picture screen back to where the seats are raised at the rear of the auditorium. This rear portion has side walls painted a soft blue gray back to within some distance of the rear wall, where the walls are painted a deep royal blue, a violet blue. Doors in the side walls near the rear are painted vermilion, lightened somewhat by the admixture of white, and this color is used also for a low dado at the rear of the room.

The seats are upholstered in this same light orange red. The ceiling is painted in ultramarine blue and has a large rectangular cove-lighted panel in its center. This central portion of the ceiling is painted white and serves to reflect the light from the coves. The edge of the opening under the coves is in aluminum leaf. The lobby is in ultramarine blue, relieved with aluminum. This is, of course, a daring scheme of coloring. But it would be a decided novelty almost anywhere, and might be very much liked by some people now that such schemes have been seen by the millions of visitors to the Century of Progress.

Very few of the larger, or even medium-sized theatres in this country, are sufficiently severe in their interior architecture to permit of the kind of color decoration used in the Urban model, though many of the better European theatres are. But the smaller theatres in this country are fairly plain in many instances, and usually whatever relief ornament they may have, might be removed to advantage. For these smaller theatres such use of color may prove to be an inexpensive and extremely effective means of achieving interest and distinctive character. Probably such decorations would be most successful where the patronage is of the more sophisticated type. But this kind of coloring must be absolutely right, perfectly handled by a skilled designer. It is high voltage!

Written Versus Verbal Agreements

merchandise on the contention that the salesman had made a valid contract which was not included in the written order and which the manufacturer failed to fulfill.

DECISION

The lower court held the purchaser not liable, but the higher court promptly reversed the verdict.

EFFECT OF ORAL AGREEMENT

FREQUENTLY, it has been held that an oral contract is equally as effective as a written one. Probably the most important distinction between a written and an oral contract is that parties in litigation must introduce evidence to prove the contents of an oral contract, whereas the courts construe a written contract strictly in accordance with the intended meaning of the written words. Moreover, verbal promises or agreements have absolutely no effect to vary the meaning of a written contract, unless it is shown that such verbal promises were made fraudulently to induce the other party to enter into the contract.

Another important point of the law is that a salesman is merely a special agent, whose implied authority extends no further than to solicit a buyer's orders or proposals to purchase merchandise. Therefore, while it is true that under certain well defined circumstances printed notifications are not legally effective, such notifications always are valid with respect to verbal agreements made by salesmen.

CASE

For illustration, in Stevens v. Chatfield (18 S. W. [2d] 1006, Catlettsburg, Ky.), a purchaser signed an order for a quantity of merchandise. The order form contained a printed notification as follows:

"No verbal or other agreement not appearing herein shall be binding upon the seller."

As an inducement to make the sale the salesman verbally promised that he would perform special services for the purchaser. The salesman failed to keep his promise and the purchaser refused to pay the account, contending that the sale was induced by fraud. The seller sued to recover the contract price, and the court held the purchaser liable, saying:

DECISION

"The purchaser testified to no fraud or deceit practiced on him in order to induce him to sign the contract except . . . that the seller never intended to carry out the alleged verbal portions of the contract to furnish service salesmen to aid and assist in effecting a sale of the purchased goods, but which, under our opinion was not the representation of a present fact so as to constitute a misrepresentation that the defendant (purchaser) could rely on in this case, and for that reason it was not such fraud as to relieve him from his obligation under the contract."

CASE

Still another important point of the law is that in almost all instances the outcome of suits involving contracts depends upon the character of testimony which proves the intended meaning of the parties when the agreement was made.

For instance, in Warner v. Commerce (12 S. W. [2d] 203, San Antonio, Tex.), it was disclosed that a theatre owner entered into a contract with a film distributor by the terms of which the former purchased several motion picture films. At the time this contract was made, the agent of the distributor delivered to the purchaser a copy of a written memorandum sent to the distributor in part, as follows:

"Mr. (theatre owner) called on us today in an effort to secure a contract covering all super specials. We explained that no contracts or agreements could be entered into until the value of the picture had been established. We would, however, in every case submit our proposition covering each picture to him before selling elsewhere. In other words, if we could agree on price, terms, etc., a contract would be given."

Also, the theatre owner testified that the agent made an oral contract to give him a first option on all specials or super-specials at a reasonable price.

Litigation developed when the distributor demanded what the theatre owner termed an "unreasonable price" for one of its super specials. Thereupon, the theatre owner filed suit to prevent the distributor from leasing the film to any other theatre in the city until it was offered to him at a reasonable price.

DECISION

Both the lower and higher courts refused to grant the theatre owner relief on his contract, saying:

"By no stretch of the rules of construction can the written memorandum be construed to mean anything other than that distributor has agreed to give plaintiff (theatre owner) the first option to purchase the super special pictures at the price and on the terms, etc., to be demanded of them. . . . In other words, the contract does not bind the distributor to sell the pictures at a reasonable price at all, but expressly gives them the right to fix the price and to impose the terms, etc., upon which the plaintiff would have to take the pictures."

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS

VERY OFTEN conflict exists between the printed portions of a letterhead and a typewritten letter. The law is established that the typewritten letter always prevails over the printed notification on the letterhead. However, the situation is different if the typewritten portion is ambiguous.

For example, in William v. Bertrand (271 Pac. 123, San Francisco, Cal.), it was disclosed that a seller wrote a letter to a prospective purchaser listing the prices of articles and stated that the equipment would be first-class. The letterhead contained the following printed notification: "We give no warranty, express or implied, as to description, quality, productiveness or any other matter."

The purchaser accepted the offer. Later the purchaser contended that it was not the first-class quality as indicated by the typewritten portion of the letter. He sued the seller to recover the purchase price contending that the statement in the body of the letter should be given force rather than the printed notification.

DECISION

The lower court held the purchaser entitled to a recovery, but the higher court reversed the verdict in view of the fact that the statement in the letter actually was not a valid clear guarantee. This court said:

"In order that a sale shall be upon a warranty, there must be two factors present, first, an affirmation of a fact by the seller with reference to the thing sold, and, second, an intention on the part of the seller that his affirmation shall be a warranty to the buyer."

AUTHORITY OF MANAGER

THEATRE OWNERS are liable for all acts committed and contracts made by their managers, providing such acts and contracts relate to the theatre business. However, it is important to know that a party who files suit against a theatre owner to recover on a contract, which is contended was made by a manager, is bound to prove that the person who represented himself to be a manager actually was employed by the theatre owner in that capacity, otherwise the theatre owner is relieved from liability. So held a higher court in the leading case of State Amusement Company v. Thompson (21 S. W. [2d] 344, Fort Worth, Tex.).

CASE

The facts of this case are that a theatre employe informed the owner of a printing establishment that he was the manager of a theatre and ordered a large quantity of printed advertising material. Later the officials of the theatre company refused to pay the bill on the contention that the employe was not the manager of the theatre.

DECISION

Since the owner of the printing company failed to prove that the employe had been employed as manager, the court held the theatre company not liable for payment of the printer's bill, stating important law as follows:

"It is a well settled rule of law that the declarations of an alleged agent are not admissible against the alleged employer to prove agency or to show the extent of the purported agent's authority. . . . That the declarations of the agent are incompetent to prove agency is so well settled that it is unnecessary to cite authorities. . . . Persons dealing with an assumed agent . . . are bound, at their peril, to ascertain not only the fact of the agency, but the extent of his authority; and, in case either is controverted, the burden of proof is upon them to establish it."

SALESMAN'S FALSEHOOD

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether a theatre owner is liable for false statements by his representative. The law on this subject is as follows: (1) If the false statement relating to conduction of the theatre business is made by the theatre manager, the employer is liable; (2) If the employer authorizes any employe to make a false statement, the employer is liable; (3) If a common employe makes false statements without knowledge of his employer, the employer is not liable.

Moreover, a theatre corporation never is liable for unauthorized fraudulent statements made to persons other than the person who suffers loss.

CASE

For illustration, in Kussmaul v. Motion Picture (145 Atl. 609, Baltimore, Md.), it was disclosed that a salesman selling stock in a motion picture corporation made numerous false statements, regarding the large dividends from the stock, to various persons. Another person, who had received information from these numerous persons, purchased some of the stock and when he learned that the stock was not paying large dividends, sued the corporation to recover the amount invested.

DECISION

The court held the corporation not required to refund the money, stating the following important law:

"According to several witnesses defendant's (corporation's) salesman made representations to them that appear to have been untrue, but it does not appear that any such representations were made to plaintiff . . . Courts cannot act as guardians for the overcredulous, deplorable as their plight may be, and often is."

LIABILITY IN LEASE SURRENDER

A THEATRE operator who violates a lease contract, may be held in damages to the owner of the theatre building. However, where it is shown that a theatre operator surrenders a lease contract and the landlord accepts the surrendered property mutually consenting to cancel the lease, then there is no liability on the part of the theatre operator. The latest higher court case involving this phase of the law is Palace Theatre v. Northwest Theatres Circuit (243 N. W. 849, Minneapolis, Minn.).

CASE

The facts of this case are that on October 1, 1914, the owner leased the Palace

Theatre to Finkelstein & Ruben for a period of twenty years expiring October 4, 1934, at an annual rental of $28,400 per year. Finkelstein & Ruben assigned the lease to the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, which in turn assigned it to the Northwest Theatres Circuit. On May 21, 1929 the Northwest Theatres Circuit sublet the theatre to Clamage & Rothstein, who deposited with the Northwest Theatres Circuit the sum of $15,000 under a lease contract which specified, as follows: "For the purpose of guaranteeing the performance of this lease by sublessees or their assignee or assignees and the purpose hereinafter stated. . . . If sublessees (Clamage & Rothstein) or their assignees shall make default in the performance of this lease, and if the same shall be, as the result thereof, terminated, then sub-lessor is authorized to keep and retain the said sum of Fifteen Thousand Dollars ($15,000.00) as liquidated damages for the breach or default of the terms, covenants and/or conditions of this lease by sublessees or their assignees. . . ."

Before the lease contract was fully fulfilled, the last theatre operator surrendered the premises to the owner of the theatre who took possession of the property in such a manner as to indicate that it was mutually agreed between the theatre operator and the theatre owner that the lease contract should be cancelled. Afterward, the company, which deposited the $15,000, filed suit to recover this amount on the grounds that there was no breach of the contract for the reason that the owner had accepted possession of the theatre after cancellation of the lease.

DECISION

The lower court took the view that the manner in which the premises were abandoned by the theatre operator and possession resumed by the theatre owner constituted a surrender and mutual relinquishment of rights and obligations under the lease. It therefore decided that rent accruing prior to April 5, 1930, had not absorbed the $15,000 deposit. The higher court upheld this decision.

RENT STOPS WHEN BUILDING BURNS

UNDER ORDINARY circumstances the rental on a theatre building automatically stops if the building burns or otherwise is destroyed. Moreover, the obligations of both the building owner and the theatre operator may be restricted by special clauses in the lease contract.

CASE

For example, in the recent case of Publix Theatres Corporation v. Powell (71 S. W. [2d] 237, Marshall, Tex.), it was shown that the owner of a theatre building leased it on March 1st to a theatre operator under a lease contract which contained provisions by which the theatre operator agreed to pay all taxes, insurance, rents, and upkeep by way of repairs needed on the place, and at its termination to deliver to the owner all leased property in as good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear and the effect of time excepted.

A clause in the contract provided: "It is also agreed and understood that if this building be destroyed by fire, that this lease will thereby terminate, and the rent shall be returned to H. S. Cole and H. A. Cole pro-rata."

At the time the lease contract was made in March the theatre operator paid to the landlord the sum of $6,000, rental for one year in advance. In August the theatre building burned to the ground and legal controversy arose over the question whether the theatre operator was entitled to recover from the landlord the advanced payment of rent from the time the theatre building burned until the termination of the year in March.

DECISION

It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the theatre operator entitled to recover the advance rental payments, and said:

"The fire terminated the lease contract. Under its terms, the contract terminated when the building was destroyed by fire, and any advance unearned rental then paid was required to be returned pro rata to the lessees. After the fire, the lessees' possession immediatey reverted to the lessor, and the lessor's right to collect future rents immediately ceased . . . he was bound to refund the pro rata portion of the annual advance rental collected by him on March 1, then unearned."

INTERFERENCE WITH FIRE DEPARTMENT

ANY PERSON is liable in damages whose negligence or interference with the work of the fire department in extinguishing a fire results in financial loss to another. However, no person or company is liable where the acts did not increase or produce the fire causing the damage.

CASE

For illustration, in Commercial Union Assurance Company v. Pacific (23 P. [2d] 822, Irvington, Cal.), it was shown that a building was on fire and a person went into the building to remove some valuable equipment. Suit was filed against the person who went into the building by various insurance companies on the contention that this person broke into the building at a time when the fire was under control and confined to a small area, and that such entry caused the fire to flare up and pass beyond control. However, since this contention was not definitely proven, the higher court refused to hold the person liable, saying:

DECISION

"The rule of these cases is that the unexplained blockading of the fire department and interference in its endeavors to control the fire makes a prima facie case of negligence in favor of the plaintiff whose property was destroyed by the fire. It is not the rule that damages may be awarded upon mere conjecture or surmise or that plaintiff's burden of proving the actual damages sustained by the acts complained of is in anywise lessened."

LIABILITY OF CITY FOR FLOODS

MANY COURTS have held that where, as a result of negligence on the part of municipal officials, a theatre is flooded the amount of damages recoverable is the difference between the fair market value of the injured premises before and after the injury. On the other hand, if the injury is reasonably curable by repairs, the expense of such repairs, if less than the diminished market value of the damaged property, is the measure of recovery. Moreover, if the damage is continuous but subject to termination by any act of the municipality, the measure of damages is the lessened rental value of the building while the injury continues. If the damage is such that the theatre owner can by diligence put an end to it, the damage is the reasonable expense to which he is put and intervening loss for the period needed for removing the cause of the damage. If, however, the damage reduces the rental value of the property the judgment in favor of the theatre owner should include this item.

CASE

For instance, in Belkus v. City of Brockton (184 N. E. 812, Massachusetts), it was shown that a building was flooded because municipal officials failed to provide adequate sewerage facilities. Suit was filed by a property owner against the city to recover the amount of damage to his property.

During the trial the property owner proved that as a result of the flooded condition the future rental value of his property had been considerably decreased notwithstanding the fact that he had occupied it for his own business. In view of this testimony the lower court held the city liable and the higher court sustained the verdict, saying:

"The damage effected a change in the earning power of the building. In so far as those changes were reasonably necessary to guard against continued flooding, the plaintiff (property owner) was entitled to recover the reasonable expense, not exceeding the reduction in market value of the premises."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 117, No. 4 — October 27, 1934

WE ARE "COMMERCIAL"

WRITING in the Kansas City Journal Post, Mr. Lowell Lawrance, after reading a recent editorial on this page disputing the educational obligation and capacities of the amusement screen, charges that the editor "has only the most shallow conception of what the movies represent. Apparently he is considering the screen from a purely commercial viewpoint, completely ignoring its cultural and ethical obligations."

Mr. Lawrance's column appears immediately adjacent to a somewhat larger departmental display entitled "Walter Winchell on Broadway." That, shall we assume, is The Journal Post's current recognition of the "cultural and ethical obligations" of a Kansas City newspaper?

And may we recall to Mr. Lawrance that on the night of January 15, 1932, the Apollo Theatre in Kansas City opened with a message of policy on the screen saying:

> Most people go to a motion picture theatre to exercise their emotions rather than their intellects. Because of this fact, many culturally valuable pictures can not, for economical reasons, be presented in the average theatre. ¶ The new policy of the Apollo contemplates the presentation of pictures that are informative, controversial, artistic and intellectually stimulating. ¶ We realize that we are venturing on an uncharted sea; that we may crash against the rocks of criticism or go aground on the shoals of indifference. ¶ If you are among those people who feel that the theatre should be something more than an emotional gymnasium, you will support this unique venture with your patronage.

It is now suggested that Mr. Lawrance make inquiry as to what happened at the Apollo—in his Kansas City. He will then discover "the shoals of indifference."

And to avoid another misunderstanding, let us reiterate the contention that the sole obligation of the amusement industry, which uses the screen as its chief instrument, is to decently and adequately amuse. Other values are incidental.

EVEN if Mr. Upton Sinclair does dramatize himself into the office of governor of California it is entirely possible that he will not find it practical to change the social order and business structure, including the motion picture industry, immediately. We have heard campaign promises and threats before from abler statesmen. There is encouragement in the fact that, difficult as things are, Louisiana is not yet a total loss.

"BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE"

THE current "wild west" showmanship of the authorities engaged in hunting down outlaws to their death, as spectacularly exemplified by the field execution of John Dillinger and, the other day, Charles Floyd, is, we submit, not the best example for our government to set before the public—and its susceptible art, the motion picture.

We, or most of us, have been taught that the legal pursuit of criminals was for the purpose of bringing them to trial for the exercise of the due processes of law, law for which we are asked to have, and in varying degrees do have, respect. The law, let us observe, gains respect as men do, by how it behaves itself.

With an adequate supply of ammunition and enough marksmen and time it is likely no vast chore to hunt a fugitive down and terminate his career. The process, however, makes a game of it, a game of thrills for the audience assembled by the public press, and games make heroes, on both sides.

The outlaw who falls in battle is going out on his own terms, nobly by the rules of his world, fighting usually against heavy odds and numerical strength.

The result is glorification, even among decently minded persons. Observe if you will the process by which the Jameses, the Youngers and the Daltons are passing over from criminal record to the classic status of Robin Hood.

The same daring officers who are ambushing outlaws with machine guns are merely demonstrating an equal skill. A truly superior skill would bring the outlaws to the justice of the courts which have been created for the purpose of representing organized society.

The gallows and the electric chair do not make heroes.

What Justice needs just now is a staff which can "Bring 'Em Back Alive."

MOUTHFUL

MR. FRANCIS LEDERER stepped to the rostrum at the convention of the League of California Municipalities in Pasadena the other day and said: "In my estimation California is destined to be the cultural center of the world and will give the world the same things that Italy gave it during the Renaissance."

California has certainly made a great start.

The French Academy has officially approved the use of the word scenario. You can well fancy what a relief that is to us.

THIS WEEK---

NO ON DUAL BILLS

Almost unanimous opposition to duals, desire for a two-hour program limit were outstanding public reactions to a poll of nearly 15,000 patrons, conducted by manager James O'Toole of the Fox in San Diego. Preferences: society drama, comedy, musical comedy; Will Rogers, Clark Gable, William Powell, George Arliss; Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford, Mae West, Claudette Colbert. . . .

ACTOR-PRODUCER CODE

Flatly rejected late last week in Hollywood by the five-five committee of producers, was the proposed actor-producer code of fair practice, the meeting having been called for a showdown on the situation. To NRA division administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt will go proposals advanced by both sides for final decision. . . .

VISUAL EDUCATION

"Children retain a tremendous amount of information gained from motion pictures," last week in Boston said Abraham Krasker, visual education expert at Boston University, expressing the opinion that films will play an important part in future education. "The film is more concentrated than the printed page.". . .

CUBAN IMPROVEMENT

Increased confidence, governmental and economic stability, have resulted in vastly improved theatre business in Cuba, last week in New York said Dave Lewis, MGM exchange head in Havana. Reciprocal tariff action between the United States and Cuba has much to do with the improvement, he declared. . . .

SCREEN CLASSES

A possible request from the Connecticut state board of education to film producers would have them release old pictures for school use to present children an opportunity for study. In the coming year film study classes will be formed in many schools of the state. The mechanics, development of the motion picture will be studied. . . .

COPYRIGHT EXTENDED

An addition to the reciprocal copyright relations established between the United States and Spain in 1910, last week covered compositions for mechanical reproduction, and inferentially, musical scores on sound films. A presidential proclamation made the copyright extension effective. . . .

EXCHANGE UNION

A unique union organization has been formed in Minneapolis among exchange workers. Already having obtained the approval of the American Federation of Labor, the group has applied to the state federation of labor for a charter. . . .

CRASHING

As several hundred University of Toronto students exuberantly celebrated a football victory by crashing Shea's theatre recently, manager Jerry Shea called police, lined up the miscreants, collected all college registration cards. A letter to college authorities indicated that the cards would be returned on payment of the house admission price. The boys needed the cards, and Mr. Shea scored a devastating victory. . . .

SELLING ELECTRICITY

Interesting is the use to which industrial films have been put by the City of Los Angeles, now completing its second film acquainting the public with extensions of service of the municipal electric system. Pat Dowling and Hobart Brownell of Metropolitan Industrial Pictures, Hollywood, are the producers. Numerous theatrical, non-theatrical showings are scheduled. . . .

CRIME SESSION

At a Washington meeting called for December by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, to consider measures of crime prevention, and its ramifications, representatives of the film industry are to be present. Various interested groups will make up the conference, which will be addressed at its opening session by President Roosevelt. . . .

SAFETY FILMED

For its salutary effect in promotion of greater safety in motoring, and in cooperation with the New York police department, Magistrate William A. Farrell, last week in traffic court, required offenders present to see "Saving Seconds," a talking film produced by Castle Films for Aetna Casualty and Surety Company. Picturing graphically the folly of saving seconds, the film is being used by the police in training work, and in general public education. . . .

HARMFUL EXPORTS

"Public esteem is far too serious a thing to sacrifice to box office profits," last week in a Kansas City address declared United States minister to Denmark Ruth Bryan Owen, charging that American films exported create a false impression of the United States abroad. Her job is thus made more difficult, she said, preferring to see exported depictions of the better side of Main Street. . . .

TAX SCOTCHED

Swift action by the Theatre Owners' Protective Association of Texas appears to have effectively sidetracked a proposal to tax theatres 10 per cent to raise a 1936 centennial fund. The compromise: dropping the tax plan in return for trailer support of the centennial drive by theatres. . . .

THE GARBO DENIAL

No intention has Greta Garbo of retiring, nor will she return to her home in Sweden, nor has she recently undergone a major operation, news dispatches last week quoted the MGM Coast studio as emphatically declaring. The denial had its origin in a Stockholm report she would return there "to recover from a recent operation made necessary by over-exertion." The Garbo silence has long been her strongest publicity asset. . . .

OHIO SALES TAX

Drafted for submission to the Ohio legislature next month is a new general sales tax with a top of three per cent applicable to sales of $1 and over. Although no specific provision is made for repeal of the 10 per cent admission tax, it is felt admissions may be listed as sales, thus eliminating the nuisance levy. The bill is expected to pass, the Cleveland Exhibitors' Association supporting it. . . .

SCREEN RE-DEBUT

Back to the screen, after an absence of seven years, has gone the once highly popular Lou Tellegen, on the stage for many years, a major figure in the silent film's star roster. In Columbia's forthcoming "Call to Arms" he will have a part in his first talking picture. . . .

BROADCASTERS TIGHTEN COMPETITION WITH FILM

Advertising Agencies Buying Up Radio Rights to Stage Dramas and Musicals; More Film Stars on Programs

The radio broadcasting industry is setting in motion machinery which threatens to make the radio an even more powerful competitor to the motion picture theatre than ever before. Latest developments pointing to stiffer competition are these:

1. Advertising agencies are "buying up" radio rights to legitimate dramas and musicals with the intention of making these radio media popular with established film and stage stars.

2. Increased use of motion picture star names on regular programs, despite exhibitor opposition.

3. Inauguration of the American Broadcasting System, comprising 21 stations, with indications that, as part of its plans for "different" type programs, motion picture players would be utilized extensively.

Radio advertising agencies, in a move calculated not only to provide themselves with sufficient material for dramatic and musical radio presentations, are busily acquiring radio rights to legitimate dramas and musical plays, in some instances buying up the entire libraries of producers. These plays and dramas will be remodeled for radio usage as vehicles for well known screen and stage artists.

Thompson Agency Leads Move

While the popularity of dramatic and musical programs on the air has been generally waning the consensus of radio executive opinion is that star names and more careful attention to radio production details will do much to increase their popularity. In its effect—the new policy is at the expense of the motion picture theatre.

The leader in this movement is the J. Walter Thompson agency, probably the largest radio advertising agency, which already has negotiated an option on all Golden plays. It is understood the Thompson arrangement calls for a different dramatic revival each week for two programs, one of which is sponsoring Mary Pickford. In addition there are to be excerpts from musical comedies on the Paul Whiteman program Thursday nights.

62 Programs Using Players

Other radio advertisers are making preliminary contacts with such legitimate producers as A. H. Woods, Sam H. Harris, Arch Selwyn and the estate of Henry W. Savage for the revival of old stage hits.

A survey of one week's network radio programs this week indicated there are more film "names" appearing regularly on the air than there were at any time last year.

Sixty-two programs employing the talents of film personalities appeared in the guides for the week starting October 21. Many of this number represent daily programs, but more than 75 per cent are on the air once to three times weekly. Among the numerous "names" of the motion picture in these 62 separate program periods are Mary Pickford and Eddie Cantor.

On Friday night are 12 different programs on which film personalities figure, among them Tom Mix, Frank Buck, Irene Rich, Grace Hayes, Edmund Lowe, Dick Powell.

On Sunday, October 21, film "names" broadcasting included Helen Hayes, Eddie Cantor, Irvin S. Cobb, Buddy Rogers and Will Rogers.

Of special importance to the exhibitor's box office receipts is the fact that throughout the week the majority of such broadcasts occur after 2 p.m., continuing all the way up to midnight—hours when the motion picture theatre expects its biggest business.

An example of the effect exhibitor opposition to this competition may achieve is seen in recent efforts of theatre owners in Cleveland, where a proposed broadcasting of 20 leading film stars free to the public on a tieup with a large department store was cancelled.

When it was announced that the Higbee Company, one of the largest department stores in the middlewest, was sponsoring a two-week program over station WHK with free admission to the public—the broadcast to take place in a 15,000-seat auditorium—Cleveland exhibitors called on Mayor Harry L. Davis to protest it as unfair competition, whereupon the city council passed a resolution prohibiting the showing of competitive entertainment at the Public Auditorium, which is city owned and operated.

On the Coast Charles Skouras ordered elimination of the Fox West Coast radio department, after it was decided the circuit could get along better without it, in addition to saving the company about $500 weekly.

In Hollywood, where the question of whether radio appearances hurt or build up the star, and the pictures in which he appears, has become a subject of much bitter controversy between production executives and players, the situation is apparently still in the favor of the broadcasters. At Paramount alone, seven contract players and stars are appearing on regular programs. These include Bing Crosby, Lanny Ross, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, George Burns and Gracie Allen, and Jessica Dragonette.

More and more players are said to be demanding contract clauses permitting them to broadcast, and more producers appear to be granting this permission. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is reported to be the only producer definitely barring broadcasts by its contract personnel, the company maintaining that such activity interferes with production schedules, resulting in a loss of time and money. Exceptions have been made by MGM, however, in the cases of many of its stars, notably Jimmie Durante.

Exploit Players and Pictures

RKO Radio and Warner maintain their own studios, both utilizing the broadcast facilities to exploit both their players and their pictures. In the case of the studio on the Radio lot, the majority of sponsored broadcasts emanating from Hollywood originate there.

One of the most extensive national radio tieups ever effected by a motion picture company is that involving Warner Bros. and the program known as "Sally of the Talkies." The program is sponsored by Pebeco toothpaste — the sponsors of Amos 'n' Andy — and will be heard every Sunday from 3:00 to 3:30 p.m. (E.S.T.) over the NBC basic red network and the south central supplementary groups.

Many of Universal's players have taken part in programs. Fox permits Will Rogers to speak regularly on Sunday nights and others of its contract players have broadcast occasionally.

21 Stations in New Network

In New York, announcement of the official daily operation of the American Broadcasting System network was made last week. There are 21 stations in the group, covering the eastern section and as far west as St. Louis. The New York outlet and key station will be WMCA, operated by Federal Broadcasting Corporation, of which George B. Storer is president.

It is the new network's plan to present definitely diversified programs without duplication of the programs of other networks. Spokesmen, in the absence of Mr. Storer from New York, indicated that as the network becomes more firmly intrenched both in advertising and in audience, utilization

15 ON DOZEN RADIO SHOWS IN ONE NIGHT

Twelve different programs featuring more than 15 motion picture personalities are to be broadcast Friday night over the two large networks—NBC and CBS. Among those in the various broadcasts are Tom Mix, Irene Rich, Frank Buck, Edmund Lowe, Dick Powell and Grace Hayes. Each of these programs was to be sent out on the air after 6 p.m.

SAVES LIVES, LOSES JOB

Herford Tynes Cowling Sacrifices Position at Washington to Cause of Safety of Others and to Film

The Washington Times of October 9, in an article by John Snure, Jr., records:

"A disaster comparable to the Cleveland Hospital Clinic fire of a few years ago seems to have been averted at the Interior Department.

"But, apparently, it cost an employee his job.

"Since 1909, when the department first took motion pictures of various reclamation, geological and educational projects, as well as views of Indian reservations, it has saved the film.

More Than Ton of Film

"When the department moved into its present quarters, this film was stored in a sixth-floor vault, just below the cafeteria. There was more than a ton of film.

"The films were highly explosive and inflammable, as they have the same composition as dynamite and gunpowder and, when ignited, emit a deadly gas.

"Film of this type caused the Cleveland Clinic fire in which scores lost their lives.

"Recently the film began to deteriorate from age. Nitric oxide odors became apparent and the door to the vault was opened to permit the fumes to escape. They escaped into a corridor which hundreds of clerks used.

"Had a match been struck or a cigarette thrown, there would have been an explosion that probably would have wrecked the building and cost many lives.

"An employee noticed the hazard and commented to his superior. Nothing was done. The employe then wrote a memorandum to Ebert K. Burlew, executive officer of the department and right-hand man of Secretary Harold L. Ickes.

Vault Available, Film Destroyed

"Burlew ordered 'something done.'

"First, the employee was reprimanded severely for going over the head of his direct superior. He received three memorandums advising him that he should follow that procedure. He resigned in disgust.

"Secondly, large quantities of the film were hauled out and destroyed.

"Much of the lost material can never be regained.

"It was invaluable and included the film of Theodore Roosevelt watching the 'snake dance' of the Hopi Indians, the only time that ceremony was filmed. Other records of North American Indians, equally important, were destroyed.

"Had Secretary Ickes or Mr. Burlew inquired into the matter they might have learned that there are film vaults, built especially for such purposes, in the new Archives Building."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD finds that the employee who sacrificed his position to the cause of both the public safety and the motion picture, is Mr. Herford Tynes Cowling, a fellow of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, a cameraman and film technician of long experience and marked attainment, recognized, we may record in passing, by long employment by the Eastman Kodak Company on its own production, and withal an expert to whom any government official might listen with respect to film. The HERALD is informed that approximately two hundred thousand feet of old nitrate film, much of it on exposed reels without cans, was stored, with hundreds of unsuspecting PWA workers about. —TERRY RAMSAYE

Normanly Predicts Sharp Film Upturn

A sharp upturn in the film business about the first of the year was predicted last week by James P. Normanly, assistant to Dr. A. H. Giannini, in Chicago en route to the American Bankers' Association convention in Washington, where he is representing the Bank of Italy. He assigned as reasons for his prediction better production and the favorable reactions from the Paramount and Fox West Coast organizations.

Mr. Normanly anticipates a large amount of theatre reconditioning and replacements will follow reorganization of the two companies, the replacement having been neglected because circuit operators were hesitant during receivership. Industry conditions are generally favorable, he declared, because improved grosses reflect production of better pictures. To the Legion of Decency campaign he attributed the impetus toward improved production quality.

The federal housing program should stimulate conditions generally, in his opinion.

WARNER THEATRES TO DESIGNATE FILMS

All Warner neighborhood theatres in Philadelphia will henceforth carry an identification as to their suitability for family or adult audiences, H. M. Warner, president, declared in Philadelphia this week. Newspaper ads will carry the designation "F" for family attractions and "A" for adult films. Mr. Warner, explaining the move, said: "We have found that parents are not as well informed on motion pictures as we are, and for this reason we intend to guide them in their selection of screen entertainment for themselves and their families." He expressed the hope that exhibitors over the country would adopt a similar policy.

Johnston Attacks Code Assessments

The new schedules under which all members of the industry will contribute to support of the Code Authority will become effective October 30 unless "substantial" objections are raised before that date, it was announced this week by Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth of the NRA.

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram and a member of the Code Authority declared that he was certain a protest on the assessment schedules, published last week in the Herald, would be filed by every independent producer and distributor.

"When the original figures were announced in July," said Mr. Johnston, "numerous protests, I understand, came in from independent producers and distributors and the smaller major producers and it was announced the figures would be thrown out. The result now seems to be that some of those protesting are to get an assessment several times higher than the original figure.

"A second assessment was prepared which was even more unfair than the first and this, I am told, was thrown out by the Government.

"As I understand it, people in the higher bracket doing business of $1,750,000 to $25,000,000 are to be assessed on a basic rate of .09 per cent to .19 per cent, while the little fellows doing from $10,000 to $875,000 are to be assessed on a basic rate of from .23 per cent to 1.20 per cent.

"I cannot believe the Government will allow any such assessment basis to be put over on the little fellow. I have contended from the beginning that there is only one equitable basis of assessment and that would be on the following basis:

" 'Assessment of distributors shall be based on the pro-rata percentage that each distributor's gross income from film rentals for the year 1933 bears to the total sum of $180,000, which is to be paid by the distributor members for their share of Code Authority costs.' "

Other code developments were:

The Detroit board ordered all local exchanges to cease selling any type of non-theatrical account.

The Detroit clearance schedule was attacked by MGM and Warner as not in line with principles laid down by the Code Authority.

The New Haven clearance and zoning schedule was forwarded to the Code Authority for approval.

Byrne Dismissed from Censor Board in Ontario

As a direct result of the considerable changes taking place in the government of Ontario, Canada, E. J. Byrne, veteran provincial censor, has been dismissed. Mr. Byrne follows Major J. C. Boylen, chairman of the censor board for 11 years, who recently was "permitted to resign."

Under the economy regime of the new Liberal government, expenses of the censor have been cut 60 per cent, according to the announcement of Premier Mitchell Hepburn. However, no action has been taken to cut the cost of censorship to distributors.

20 SUITS FILED BY WILLIAM FOX FOR SHOWDOWN IN PATENTS TILT

The Trade Believes Favorable Settlement Would Call Off Actions, but Definite Terms Have Not Been Exchanged

Filing of 20 suits in the federal courts against as many motion picture producing, distributing, circuit and laboratory corporations this week gave William Fox opportunity aplenty to settle down to await the unwinding of the long processes of the law in order to ascertain the true position of his claims against the industry for alleged infringement of his Tri-Ergon "flywheel" and "double printing" patents.

The general impression is, however, that a favorable settlement would cause Mr. Fox to call off his lawyers at almost any time—not that the controversy has yet reached the stage of exchanging definite terms.

Dockets Flooded with Suits

Proceeding to press the issue in the courts without further delay, Mr. Fox's American Tri-Ergon Corporation flooded the federal dockets during the week with actions against seven motion picture laboratories, six independent producer-distributors and nearly all of the large corporations which had not been named previously.

Meanwhile there were rumblings of more meetings between the principals of both plaintiff and defendant groups, but no one has yet been able to say what course the argument might take from this point on. It appears, however, that the industry was preparing to divest the involved laboratory and sound mechanism of the alleged infringements, and, in the event that Mr. Fox and the industry do not get together for the future use of his patents, the sole issue would then revolve around Mr. Fox's royalty claims for past usage—if the courts sustain him on the claims in the actions.

Suits now pending in the courts as a result of Mr. Fox's legal activities of the past week involve the following:

AmerAnglo Corporation, Willian F. Barrett, president; importer and exporter of motion pictures, independent distributor; suit filed in United States district court, southern district of New York, October 18, involving double printing patent; plaintiff's attorneys of record, Kenyon and Kenyon, New York.

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., Harry M. Warner, president; theatre circuit and producer and distributor; suit filed in United States district court, district of Delaware, at Wilmington, October 23, involving flywheel patent.

All the suits are similar in that they charge the individual defendants with infringement and ask that they be temporarily enjoined, pending the final outcome of the trial, from continuing the alleged infringements, and the defendants be ordered by the court to account for and pay to the plaintiff any profits that the defendant companies have received through the alleged infringements.

All actions are the outgrowth of the recent refusal of the United States supreme court to review decisions made by lower courts in litigation regarding alleged infringement of the patents by Paramount and by Wilmer and Vincent.

Industry Appears To Be Preparing to Divest Mechanism of Factors Allegedly Infringed; Secret Device Tried Out

Individual Trials Likely

All suits against the 20 new defendants will probably be tried individually. A decision in one case will not affect another.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., sound equipment distributing subsidiary of Western Electric, and the Radio Corporation of America will defend their respective sound licensees.

Both Erpi and RCA were named defendants in similar suits, charging infringement of the flywheel patent, filed in the United States district court at Wilmington, in mid-November, 1931, by Fox-Tri-Ergon. In another suit, filed at the same time, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation was named defendant in an action involving the double printing process. All three suits are still pending and may be brought to trial almost any time.

Paramount Publix Corporation was unsuccessful in defending the action taken by Fox against it last year. This suit involved the double printing patent. Likewise unsuccessful were Wilmer and Vincent and Altoona Publix Theatres, which were defeated in a fight started by Mr. Fox in Pennsylvania court over the fly-wheel patent.

Fox Film Corporation and United Artists Corporation are the only two large corporations which have not been served in the litigation. The reason in the case of Fox Film is attributable to a suit pending in Nassau county, New York, through which Fox Film seeks to obtain the return of the patents from Mr. Fox, who purchased them while still president of Fox Film.

Many Independents Not Served

United Artists may not be served because it is basically a distributing company, handling product made by its corporate partners and by other independents.

In the independent field, the following companies have not been served: Chesterfield, Goldsmith, Invincible, Liberty, Majestic, Mascot, Mayfair, Pinnacle, Principal and Showman's Pictures.

Independent short subject producing companies which have not been served include: Celebrity, Educational and Master Art.

The bills of complaint filed this week set forth that the patents were granted to Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Josef Engl, the inventors, all of Germany. They assigned their patents to the Tri-Ergon Aktien-Gesellschaft, in 1924, which in turn assigned the patents to the Tri-Ergon Musik A. G., and also to Mr. Fox, in 1928. Mr. Fox, it is understood, owns about 90 per cent of the American Tri-Ergon, which he formed to exploit commercially the inventions of the Germans.

There have been reports that the parent Swiss Tri-Ergon was dissatisfied with the lack of commercial exploitation accorded the patents by Mr. Fox and that it might move in court to retrieve the patents.

Swiss Tri-Ergon Incorporates

Of possible significance in this connection was the filing of incorporation papers this week in Delaware by Swiss Tri-Ergon Corporation, whose charter gave the wide interpretation of its business as dealing in "motion picture films, motion picture projecting machines" and the like. Milton Diamond, attorney in this country for Swiss Tri-Ergon interests, was listed as one of the incorporators.

Mr. Diamond explained this week that this new firm represents the 10 per cent of the Tri-Ergon patent rights in America which Mr. Fox does not own. This 10 per cent of the stockholders of American Tri-Ergon has, thereby, formed its own corporation as Swiss Tri-Ergon.

When asked specifically if the purpose of the new company was to file suit against Mr. Fox for having failed to exploit commercially the patents during the six years he has controlled them, Mr. Diamond said: "That may very well be."

New Device Tried Out

There is no doubt in the minds of Electrical Research that Western Electric immediately can substitute a device for the flywheel in its reproducing equipment which in no way will infringe the Tri-Ergon patents. However, no attempt at such a move is to be made pending a court decision on the fly-wheel patent as it specifically involves Erpi.

The company's engineers, it was unofficially revealed this week, have been working secretly on a device which, they say, is non-infringing. Last week Erpi is said to have commenced a tryout of the device in several New Jersey theatres, installing new projector heads which do not employ the fly-wheel process controlled by Mr. Fox. At the Carlton theatre in Red Bank, N. J., the new equipment was installed for a complete showing and the results were reported to have been "pre-eminently satisfactory."

Although the technical aspects of the newly developed projector device have not been made known to the industry, Bell Laboratory engineers are said to be convinced they can convert present Western Electric apparatus in theatres into infringement-proof equipment by effecting only the slightest minor modifications, without inconvenience to the exhibitor.

Insofar as the recording or double printing patents held by American Tri-Ergon are concerned, Erpi feels that its vertical cut disc—or "hill and dale"—method of recording is a valid and ready substitute for the Tri-Ergon double printing patent. This was indicated in an announcement emanating from the company's headquarters in New York describing the new vertical cut disc recording.

Erpi's statement said that several major producers already have evinced interest in the process and have indicated they are "seriously considering its use for all or part of their talking picture" production.

Claim Superior Quality

In announcing the "hill and dale" development, H. G. Knox, Erpi vice-president in charge of engineering, makes a flat claim of its superior quality over ordinary film recording, in the present status of the film process, at the same time suggesting that it may prove more economical than primary recording on film.

Unofficial industry opinion this week in New York held that the Erpi statement is a definite indication of the procedure of the electric in its counter-attack in the Tri-Ergon offiensive.

Mr. Knox's statement considers "hill and dale" as another instance of a scientific development finding great usefulness in a field other than that for which it had been specifically intended.

The songs of Columbia's "One Night of Love," Mr. Knox said, were recorded by the Western Electric vertical cut disc method and subsequently re-recorded from disc to film. Sometimes referred to as the "hill and dale" method, Mr. Knox explained that vertical cut recording was developed by the Bell Laboratories for the definite purpose of recording and reproducing of high quality for all disc purposes. It was expected at first that the field probably would be limited to phonograph records and electrical transcription for broadcasting.

"Columbia's experience with 'One Night of Love' has definitely demonstrated the usefulness of the vertical cut recording for talking pictures," Mr. Knox explained. "It not only affords an opportunity to record and reproduce the full, volume range with superior quality, but also may prove a more economical method than recording on film throughout. Paramount is using vertical cut recording in 'Enter Madame' and the inquiries we are receiving from other producers indicate that they are seriously considering the advantages of this scientific development as a better and cheaper process for all or part of their talking pictures."

United Artists Forms Two Sales Divisions

Al Lichtman, vice-president in charge of United Artists sales, has divided the country's territory into two sales divisions and appointed Harry Gold and Paul Lazarus sales managers of the eastern and western divisions, respectively.

Railroads Screen-wise

The railroads, awakening at last to that novel new invention, the motor car, have abruptly become publicity conscious, screen-wise.

This week the still big and once great Union Pacific, with a program of riding motion picture fame, more anticipated than realized, shot a six-car-streamlined-combustion - motored - aluminum - alloy - caterpillar from Los Angeles to New York.

Meanwhile in Hollywood the RKO studio cutting room was reaching the final assembly of a picture entitled "The Silver Streak," a drama built around the speed performances of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy's new capsule train, now renamed "Silver Streak," nee "The Zephyr," due for release about November 1.

"The Silver Streak," after eastern key city demonstrations and considerable newsreel attentions, has been spending the autumn on the RKO ranch, where the picture has been in the making under the administrative attentions of Glendon Allvine, one time New York publicity man, now a production executive for RKO, who is credited with the notion for the picture.

Burlington attaches, including a vice-president, have been much aboard "The Silver Streak," during its term of picture servitude, and there has been a deal of press parties aboard and about. The train is the hero of the piece.

The Union Pacific's train was scheduled to arrive in New York Thursday with Anita Louise and Henry Hull aboard as Hollywood "names."

Grimm Joins RKO As Ad Manager

Ben H. Grimm, advertising manager of Universal, will join the staff of RKO Radio Pictures as advertising and publicity manager in the post recently vacated by Robert F. Fisk. Announcement was made this week by S. Barret McCormick that Mr. Grimm will begin his new duties the first of November. Leonard Hall, formerly of Photoplay, has joined the RKO publicity staff.

Mr. Grimm has been in the advertising and newspaper business the greater part of his career, after his early newspaper training culminated in four years on the New York Evening Journal as assistant city editor. Following this he handled west coast publicity for Metro, became associate editor and advertising manager of the former Moving Picture World, advertising manager of Selznick Pictures, advertising manager of Associated Exhibitors, assistant advertising manager of Universal, in charge of Columbia advertising, then back to Universal.

Acrobat Killed at Roxy

Arline Phillips, of the aerial acrobatic team of the "Two Phillips," was killed last week in a fall from a tight wire to the stage of the Roxy theatre in New York.

CAPRA

is coming!

FULTON OURSLER, Editor in Chief of LIBERTY Magazine, in a recent telegram to MR. CAPRA said in part:

> "It is a good thing to honor outstanding merit and distinction in any art and these qualities are yours in the art of dramatic pictures. May you live long and flourish like the green bay tree to give the public more of the FRANK CAPRA type of pictures."

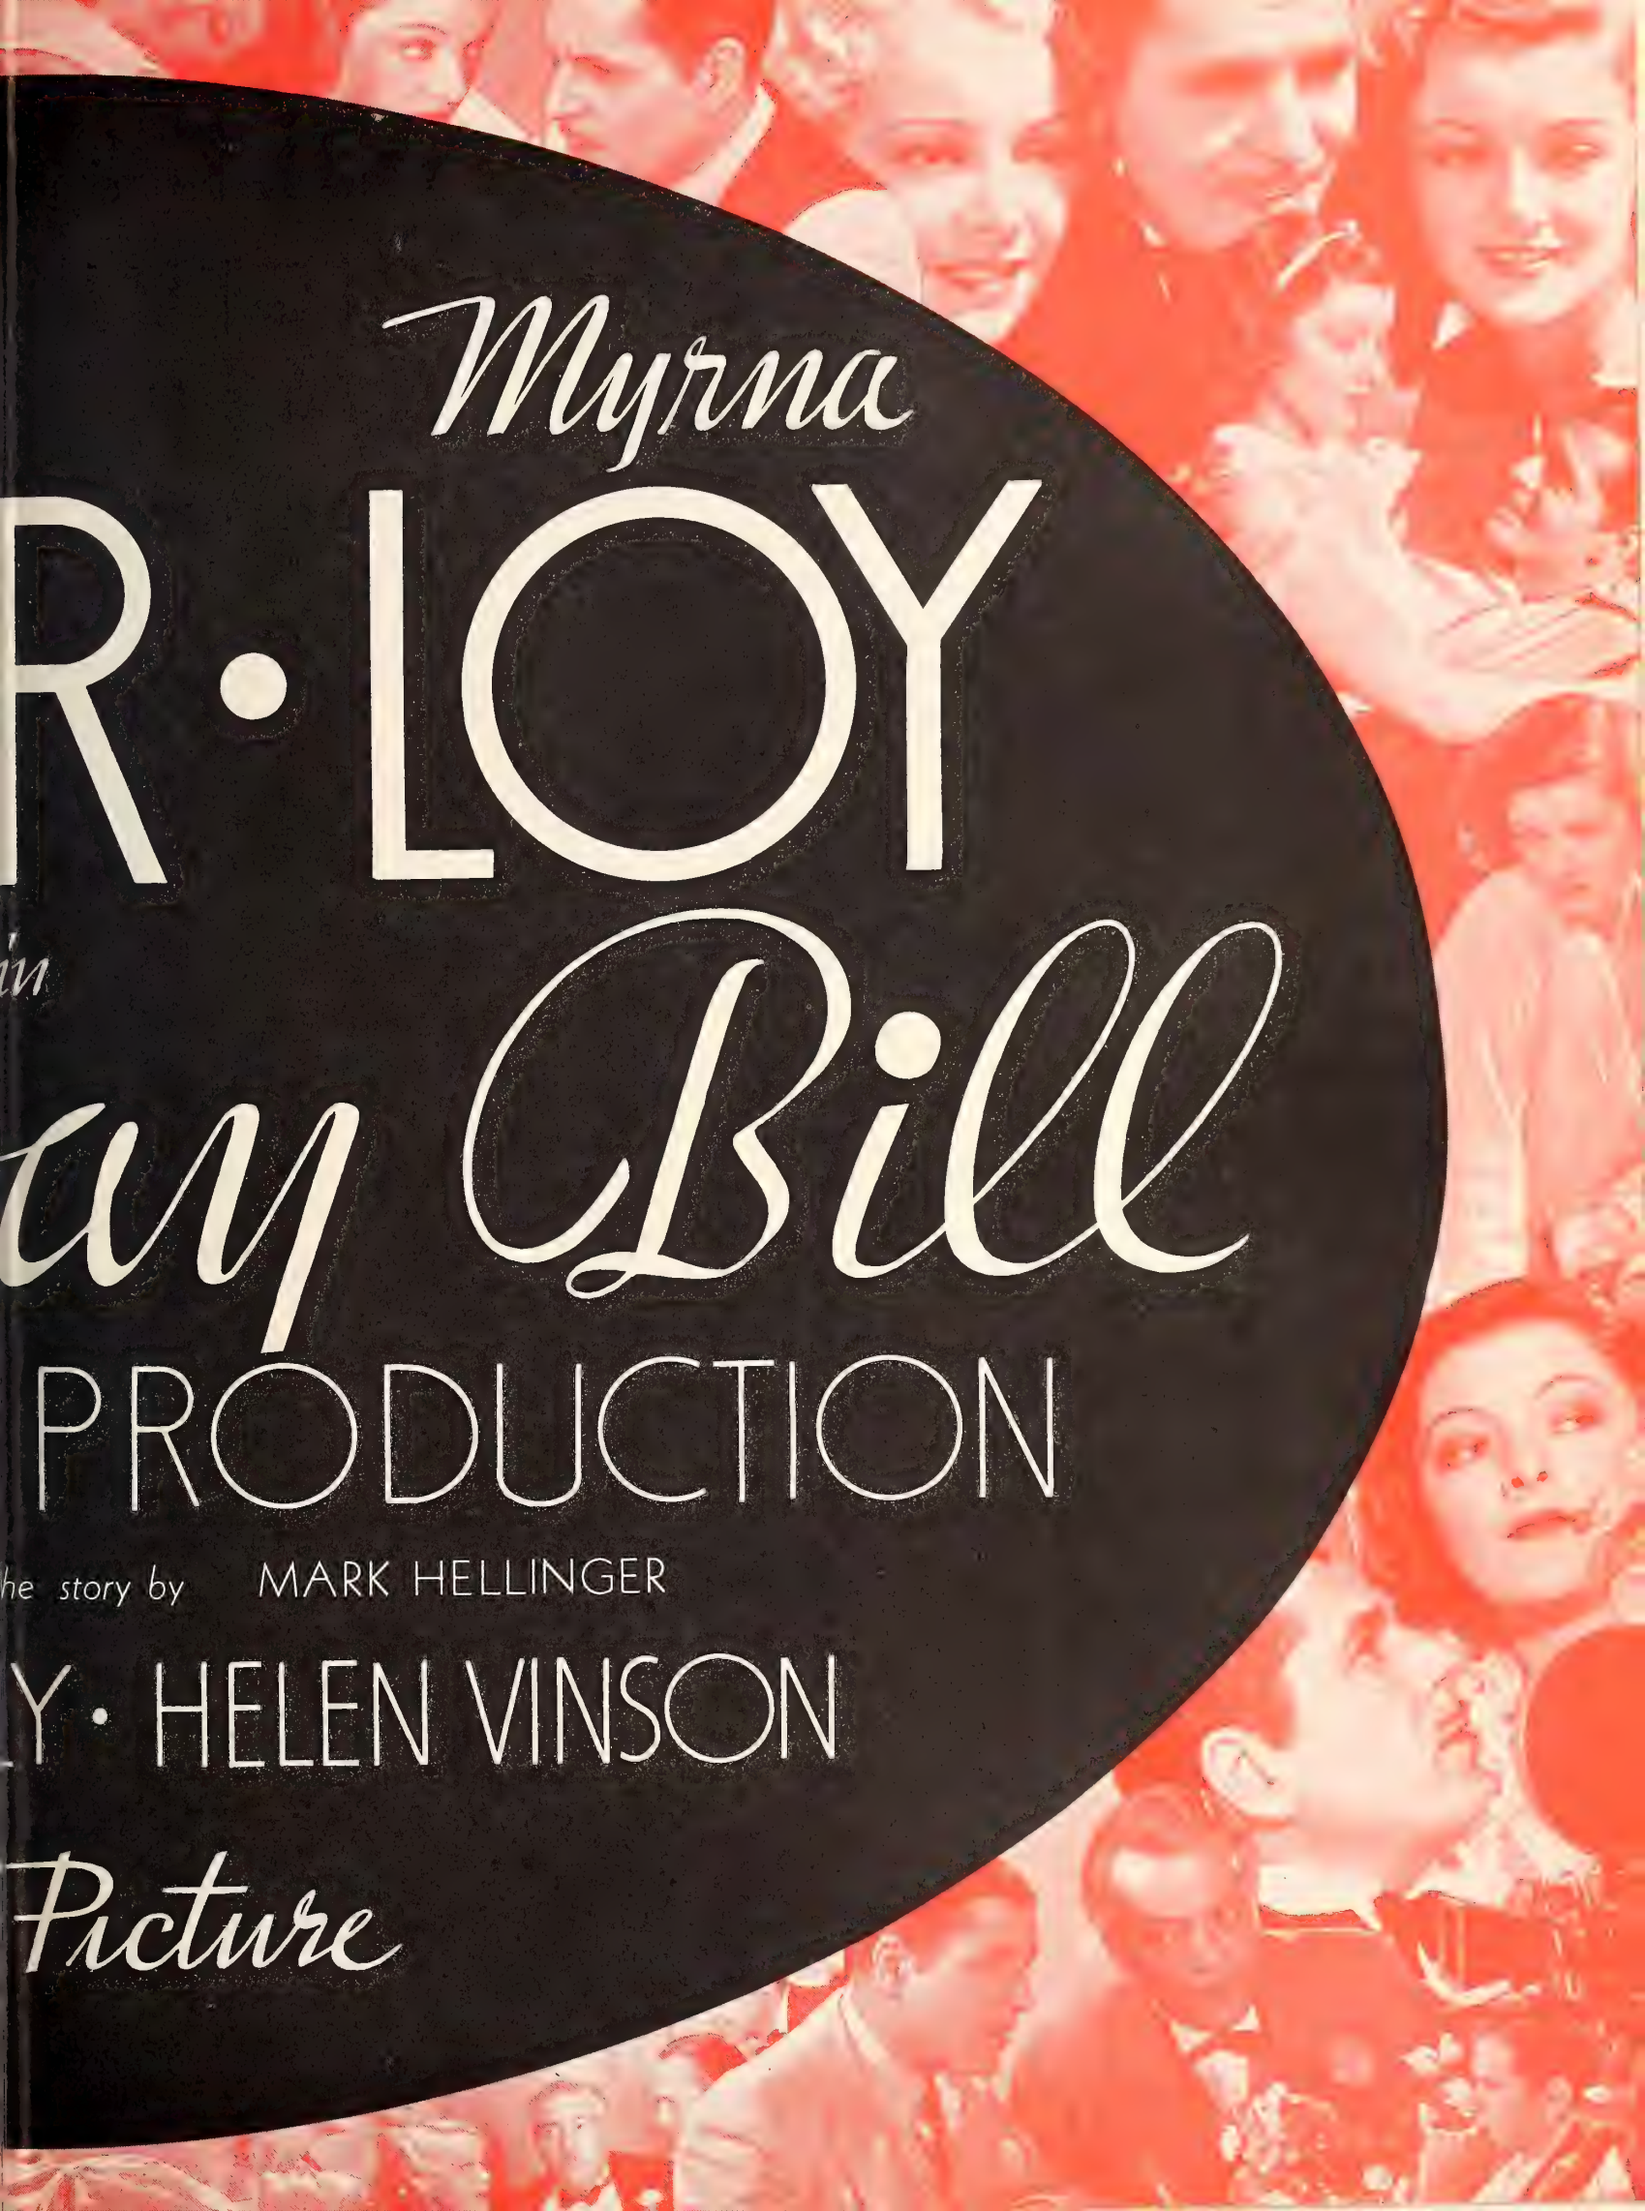
The sentiment expressed by Mr. Oursler is the sentiment of the public at large.



The genius of FRANK CAPRA crystallized in any particular motion picture makes that picture a notable event in any year.

His next effort is upon us.

SHORT SUBJECTS GET INDIVIDUAL TREATMENT IN NEW CIRCUIT PLAN

Department of the Hoblitzelle Circuit, Devoted Entirely to Valuing Shorts, Meeting With a Continued Success

The short subject—so often regarded by circuit bookers and many exhibitors as simply a means of "padding" the feature program—is getting a new merchandising recognition. Both major circuits and independents are beginning to spot their short bookings, not only on their qualitative merit but, even more important, on their suitability as to type of features they are to accompany and also with a definite regard for audience reaction.

Prominent in the move to eliminate the word "filler," is the department of Karl Hoblitzelle's Interstate Circuit, of which R. J. O'Donnell is general manager, designed exclusively to screen all new short product daily, submit accurate reviews of the pictures to all managers in the circuit and book for type and program balance. This department is headed by Mrs. Besa Short, a staunch believer in the real worth of short subjects. Mrs. Short controls the short bookings of 97 theatres in Texas.

Strange Combinations

"This department was created following a trip made by Mr. O'Donnell and Mr. Hoblitzelle over the circuit some six months ago when they found strange things like 'Emperor Jones' playing with a Mills Brothers short and a dusky type cartoon, big musicals booked with musical shorts, mystery stories accompanied by mystery shorts and so on," Mrs. Short explained. "Certainly this was not the fault of anyone, since our bookers never screened shorts, exchange bookers rarely ever look at them and managers had no opportunity until the day their show arrived."

As a result of these revelations, Mrs. Short said, the new department was set up. Its function includes the "screening of all new product each day, with at least two features and two shorts included.

Each short subject and feature is timed, notes are made on their type, cast, advertising value, after which they are classified. The notes are transcribed and filed and after the feature bookers have set in all features for all towns the shorts are booked according to their suitability.

"I keep in mind the running time of the entire program, its type, suitability, advertising value and cost to each house," said Mrs. Short. "In this way I must book strictly by title, which just about wrecked the exchange bookers at first because they had booked so long by 'a two-reeler and a cartoon.' They are beginning to show interest for the most part. Of course, quick feature changes or changes of any kind make it necessary for me to be very alert and certain of my product.

Interstate managers, too, share to a certain extent the responsibility for the success or failure of Mrs. Short's department. Each week the theatre manager makes a report to Mrs. Short on the audience reaction to short product shown, fitness for program, and details of any clashes with the feature or duplication in the casts with that of the feature, and the possible advertising value of the subject.

A typical report from a Class "A" house in a small Texas town reads, in part, as follows:

Feature: STAMBOUL QUEST
Shorts:
Snapshot #9—Col.
"Audience reaction very favorable.
"Suited to program.
"No advertising value.
"No star value.
"A very pleasing short; had some favorable comment."
Mickey's Steamroller—U. A.
"Audience reaction—good.
"Suited to program.
"Good advertising value.
"High star value.
"M. Mouse is always liked by our patrons.
"Highly pleasing and entertaining cartoon."

"I have tried out many ideas, none of them new, to be sure, but we have had real success with all Radio shorts, all Popeye, all Mickey Mouse, Chase and Laurel and Hardy programs," Mrs. Short said. "A full length program of these has been used in many spots for novelty where product is weak or short. We have found that they are successful for a two or three-day run. They are sold just as a feature with special trailers, lobby displays and newspaper advertisements.

"We feel that we have learned a great many things about shorts. We feel that producers are learning that story, talent and direction must be put into the short product. The day of the old slipshod slapstick has gone and many of the major companies are this season introducing novelties, names and very fine color."

Mrs. Short declared that in her screenings she had found some very unusual subjects excellent for building variety or speed into the slow and heavy dramatic features. Sport reels smartly done, travel subjects with production values and fine narration, and subjects heretofore frowned upon by the majority of managers are, she said, becoming very much in demand.

Selling possibilities of the short subject have been proved by the success of such enterprises as the newsreel theatre, in which patrons may view from three to six different subjects in addition to an hour of combined newsreel entertainment. Trans-Lux Newsreel Theatre Company in New York, starting about three years ago at 49th St. and Broadway, now operates three short feature theatres in the metropolitan district. Another form is Pathe's Embassy theatre on Broadway near 46th street, showing newsreels only.

The Bijou theatre in West 45th street, in the heart of New York's legitimate theatrical belt, opened recently with a policy dedicated exclusively to the short subject. The Bijou is running on a continuous admission basis, with a 25 cents admission and is showing nothing but cartoons.

Merchandising of short subjects by the major circuit booking departments in much the same manner as that employed by the Interstate circuit has been the procedure for some time, circuit bookers in New York said.

Audience Reaction Studied

On the theory that the short product surrounding a feature can either make or break the entire show, Paramount, RKO, Loew, Fox and Warner short subject bookers currently are paying attention to audience reaction on the theory that where there is favorable reaction from patrons there must be suitability of product.

In the Loew theatres, for example, according to Ben Joel, short subject booker, the policy is to build a complete program.

"We aim for as wide a diversification of program as possible," said Mr. Joel this week. "Where we have a heavy, dramatic feature, we spot comedy shorts on the program. Another thing we try to do is to keep similar shorts on one bill separated from each other in the program continuity."

Circuit bookers and theatre executives say the current season will offer the exhibitor and the short subject booker alike an unprecedented opportunity for real merchandising of the one and two-reel features, in volume, diversification, color and better made product.

Their thought on the matter is reflected in the remark of Max Fellerman, head of RKO's booking:

"There's too much money spent on shorts nowadays to book them in any situation without a good deal of thought and care."

"SEEING" A PLAY THROUGH THE AIR

A novel method has been devised to enable RKO Radio producers, charged with making a film version of the stage musical comedy "Roberta," to "see" the musical without leaving Hollywood. Sometime during the current road tour of the stage company, a microphone will be set up on the stage, and connected by long distance telephone wires with the Hollywood studio, where loud speakers will be arranged in the theatre. By this method, it is said, director William Seiter and his staff will have not only a clear idea of the performance, but at the same time will have a first hand test of audience reaction.

NEWSREEL RIVALRIES FLAME AGAIN IN RACE WITH ASSASSINATION FILMS

Return to Free-for-All Competition Reflected in Landing of All Prints at Practically the Same Time in New York

It took a King's assassination and its resultant rumblings of War, an international "smuggling" coup, the drowning at sea of an airman and a race across the ocean to convince the industry, public and newspaper press that America's newsreels have emerged completely from three years of lethargy to return to the hair-trigger days of free-for-all battling to record pictorially the drama on the world's stage and flash it on the screens.

On the spot when an incident of tense dramatic, international significance was exploding, the obtaining of camera evidence of the double murder at Marseilles of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Louis Barthou, French foreign minister, constituted a romance of newsreel gathering.

The ingenuity in smuggling the story in pictures through an armed military censorship out of France, through England onto a steamer and into America, is another chapter almost equally thrilling.

Planes were flown over Europe and America to bring the reels to these shores, relaying the prints to steamers, seagoing tugs, 60-mile-an-hour motor launches, high-powered automobiles. Real money was spent, and the fact that all the pictures reached New York from Europe at about the same time and that all were nearly the same in subject and quality proved the closeness of the race.

Exhibitors in this country were entered in the competition when more planes and fast trains were sent speeding out with prints for their screens, and newspaper editors in New York and representatives of the syndicates worked feverishly to obtain from the newsreels the dramatic highlights to enlarge to still size. The Hearst Metrotone-Hearst International newspaper and photo alliance brought pages of stills to the Hearst papers, with full credit to Hearst Metrotone News. Paramount News came in for considerable free space through credits accorded its stills, and so did some of the other reels,

The shooting embarrassed France, politically and otherwise, when worldwide opinion reacted to reports that the visiting King and his royal party had not been given proper police protection by the French. The international press was quick to inspect the newsreels for a verification of these charges—and they got it. Immediately cables and private wireless channels began to buzz with headlines telling that the newsreels had proved "glaring evidence of police negligence." The ensuing comment in the press gave prestige to the motion picture as a spot-news recorder of a world event.

Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr., of the London staff of Adolph Och's New York Times wirelessed from Europe his opinion that "as a piece of history and as a human record these newsreels are among the most thrilling ever made."

Typical of the newsreels' coverage of the assassination at Marseilles of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Louis Barthou, French foreign minister, is this action scene. (Photo copyright 1934 by Hearst Metrotone News.)

Everything could be seen plainly in the reels except the actual figure of the assasin leaping onto the running board of the automobile carrying the King and Barthou. The films show the King from the moment he left his warship in the harbor at Marseilles en route to Paris on a mission of peace, until he lay dying from the assassin's bullets. It was all photographed on the one film strip.

Sudden shots removed the whimsical smile from the face of the King and the beam from the countenance of Monsieur Barthou. The car stopped and one cameraman, directly in front of it took grim views of the French Lieutenant-Colonel Priollet hacking the assassin down with his saber. (See photograph on this page).

The maddened shouts of the crowd were picked up by the newsreel recorders and consternation could be seen written on the face of every diplomat nearby, on the military, the police, the people. Four shots were heard at that moment on the Marseilles boulevard, and these, too, were faithfully reproduced. Some have pointed out, however, that these shots followed those of the assassin and were fired at the murderer by the King's chauffeur.

The King now lay slumped in the seat of the royal car. A newsreel closeup showed him with wide open, staring eyes, a puzzled smile still on his nervous lips. Someone's hands could be seen gently stroking his cheeks, the while blood from the wounds trickled downward. Barthou did not appear in this shot; he apparently had slumped to the floor of the car.

There were vivid scenes of the crowd attacking the assassin, but his figure could not be seen for long—sabers and fists and clubs having finished him. Troops galloped ahead to clear the streets, and the next scene showed the car moving slowly away to the Prefecture de Police.

Barred from Exhibition

The pictures reaching these shores had been banned from exhibition in France, Germany, Italy, Austria and Switzerland. An attempt had been also made to prevent their export from England to the United States, but the companies smuggled them off the Continent to England where they were placed aboard the SS Washington.

The newsreels' coverage of King Alexander's visit to France had been scheduled for several weeks as a regular assignment. The day before the assassination, the revolutionary riots in Spain had broken out, compelling the newsreel editors in Europe to send some of their men there. However, all had at least one cameraman, and most of them two or three, grinding out the story at Marseilles. None of the reels caught the actual assassination—the cameras picking up in the next instant when Lieutenant-Colonel Priollet and the French troopers started to cut down the murderer as he clung to the running board.

Negatives Seized

The negatives were rushed from Marseilles to Paris, arriving early the next day. In France all the reels were developed quickly and duplicate prints made with a view to catching the fast Bremen German steamer that afternoon from Cherbourg to New York. Early that morning, however,

REELS' RIVALRY FLARES

the French police seized all the negatives. They returned them just as suddenly some two hours later and all the newsreel staffs then chartered planes to Cherbourg.

But the French police again changed their minds while the flight was in progress and as fast as the planes grounded at Cherbourg airport, all films were seized, no matter what their nature. Two days later—too late to make the Bremen—the reels were returned with apologies.

However, the newsreel staffs at the same time had smuggled out duplicates from Paris to London where they were used for the British showings. Additional copies also were made up there for shipment aboard the steamer Washington, but these copies could not be placed in the ship's cabins until the newsreel representatives had succeeded in hurdling a rather troublesome international barrier.

Decoy Packages Sent

Every effort was made to bar the reels from steamers at the English ports and several decoy packages purposely were sent aboard different fast steamers in order that the authorities might be distracted from the Washington, a slower boat. Obviously the strategy worked.

More colorful and dramatic newsreel history than the coverage of the fatal scene at Marseilles and the secret transfer of the prints from France to England and to the steamship was close to reality after word got around Europe that Pathe News alone had managed to catch the fast Bremen in spite of the rigid police and military barrier. The report indicated that, as a result, the pictures of Pathe would reach the United States four days ahead of all others. This was proved to be an exaggeration, but not until after negotiations had been launched for the making of a trans-Atlantic flight with the pictures of the other newsreels in order to beat Pathe.

Mollisons Turned Down Plan

It was agreed that the cost of the flight would be shared, and so the noted flying Mollisons, ready in London to participate in the Australian Air Race, were approached. All was ready, weather conditions were ideal, the plane was scheduled to make New York in 20 hours. At this point someone mentioned the subject of financial remuneration and the Mollisons requested $130,000 for the trip. Later they shaved this to $25,000, but even at that the project was not deemed worth the price and risk. The plan was abandoned. Incidentally, the Mollison plane later developed engine trouble in the Australian race and was brought down some place in the Far East, a long distance from the goal.

Plowing through the seas en route to America was the SS Washington when Paramount News and Fox Movietone news hit upon plans to fly out in separate planes over the Atlantic, pick up their respective reels and wing to shore again, thereby gaining a day to a day-and-a-half over their rivals. The plan had been negotiated successfully for the first time some six years ago by Paramount when their plane met the SS Leviathan 100 miles at sea and picked up pictures of the American Legionaires visiting Paris. In four subsequent attempts, only one had succeeded, that in connection with the R101 British dirigible disaster.

Paramount and Fox decided to fly 700 miles to sea. Fox dispatched a giant Sikorsky seaplane, built to make a non stop flight to Russia.

They contacted the Washington at sea, after elaborate arrangements had been made between Captain Fried and Movietonews officials by ship-to-shore telephone. The can containing the films was trailed behind the steamer on a rope. The plane made several unsuccessful attempts to hook it with a rope and grapnel. When this failed, a disastrous attempt was made to land beside the ship. The rest has already been told—how a pontoon hit a wave, the plane nosedived and was destroyed, and mechanic Johnson was drowned, a lifeboat saving the others.

Meanwhile Paramount was warming up its Boeing amphibian to be piloted by Hughie Wells, who had negotiated the same arrangement for Paramount before. Word of Fox's mishap was radioed to shore, together with Captain Fried's request that no further attempt be made.

When the Washington reached quarantine in the lower New York bay a fleet of tugs surrounded it to pick up the prints. These were met later by motor launches and rushed up the Hudson to docks near the various laboratories where special crews were on hand to do quick developing and printing.

Some of the reels saved hours in the mad scramble to reach Broadway first by bringing in from England extra prints ready for showing, in addition to negatives.

PICKETS IN HELMETS JAILED; WOMEN, TOO

There was considerable picketing warfare on the motion picture union front in New York this week, with many arrests.

Wearing battered trench helmets and kepis, more than 150 war veteran members of Local 306, M.P.O., tied up traffic in Times Square Friday night by mass picketing of the Mayfair, Globe and Central theatres. Eleven men and women were arrested. Arthur Costigan, American Legion post commander and local organizer, watched three patrol loads of his raiding parties carried away and shouted that the picketing would continue "until we are all arrested."

The theatres had been picketed, and stench-bombed, several times before the climactic arrests.

The same evening 11 more picketers were arrested at theatres in the Bronx. All were booked on charges of disorderly conduct.

Facilities Bring Washington Fight

At Washington, broadcasters and representatives of religious, educational, labor and radical groups were waging a bitter fight before the Federal Communications Commission on the question of radio facilities.

Required by Congress last session to investigate the desirability of allocating 25 per cent of all facilities for the use of non-profit organizations, the commission this month held lengthy hearings and is now studying the voluminous testimony and several hundred briefs filed, on the basis of which it will prepare a report which must be submitted to Congress by next February.

Educational leaders decried the entertainment currently being offered by broadcasters, charged that it is impossible to get favorable hours for educational broadcasts and complained that the time given such programs is changed without warning.

The broadcasters presented statistics to show that a very considerable amount of time is devoted to cultural programs and said that when time is assigned, the educational or other interests are unable to provide program material.

On behalf of the networks it was shown that only about one-third of the time is sold and the remainder is filled with sustaining programs.

Allied All Set for Legislative Fight

Asserting its dissatisfaction with an agreement of the exhibitors' national emergency committee and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers over the music seat tax increases, Allied last week in New York completed plans for taking its three-point program directly to Congress in January. Allied will have a congressional bone to pick over the matter of the writing of the motion picture code. The third phase involves a congressional fight on block booking.

"Allied is definitely set on its plans to go to Congress with its fight against ASCAP on increased music taxes," Sidney E. Samuelson, national president, said.

It was indicated that Allied members would utilize their screens in attacking block booking.

Allied completed its plan at a two-day session in which five regional presidents took part. Attending were Col. H. A. Cole, Texas; Abram F. Myers, Washington, D. C.; Jack Lilly, Greenville, Texas, H. M. Richey and J. C. Ritter of Detroit, Walter B. Littlefield of Albany and Mr. Samuelson.

Mr. Richey's Michigan Allied Theatres will have its annual convention at Detroit November 7 and 8.

Invitations issued to Louisiana theatre owners to meet with Mississippi owners at their state convention in Jackson, Miss., October 28-29 started a rumor that the Gulf States Theatre Owners Association is to be abandoned with the ultimate purpose of affiliating with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Independents are reported opposed to the plan.

Sale of Photocolor Stock Halted by Court

The sale of securities of the Photocolor Corporation and Photocolor Pictures has been halted by an order from Judge Salvatore A. Cotillo in New York supreme court. The order names the following as defendants: Frank E. Nemec, president of Photocolor; John A. Bolles, Henry A. Tupper, C. Dayton Brown, Arthur Waddingham, Frederick J. Lind, William H. Odell, Jr., Harold D. Kitchell, Godfrey H. Cheston.

The defendants were ordered to show cause this week why an injunction should not be continued and why a temporary receiver should not be named for the companies. It was charged the company has claims and judgments against it totaling $160,000.

"Mrs. Wiggs" Selected By Educational Committee

The Committee on Social Values in Motion Pictures, a national group of educators operating through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, last week selected as a picture of distinction and merit, Paramount's "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Dr. Howard Le Sourd, dean of the graduate school of Boston University, is head of the committee.

The same picture will be shown for the New York American Christmas Fund at a special benefit performance at the New York Paramount theatre on November 1.

THEATRES BEGIN TAKING HOUSING ACT LOANS

MPTOA and State Units Report Inquiries; Supply Dealers Cite Spurt in Equipment Sales

First tangible evidence that motion picture exhibitors in large numbers intend to take advantage of the Federal Housing Administration's loan plan to rehabilitate their houses came this week from the Administration at Washington, from exhibitor organizations in the field, and from reports of a sudden spurt in equipment sales by theatre supply dealers.

The Administration made known that a substantial number of exhibitors already have obtained improvement loans from local lending agencies under the Government's plan to guarantee credit extended by the banks in the field to the extent of $1,500,000,000 for building improvements, as provided by the Federal Housing Act.

Loans Made More Accessible

Each theatre may apply for as much as $2,000 for remodeling and reequipping. The loan can be applied only to permanent improvements and fixtures and to unmovable equipment.

Further clarification of the technicalities of the plan was made this week by the New York regional director of the Housing Administration, making it still easier for exhibitors to meet obligations contracted for under the plan. The director said that a theatre owner or lessee need have a net of only five times the actual payments due annually on a loan in order to qualify. If the owner or lessee borrows $2,000, the maximum annual payment to be made is $662 a year for three years. The exhibitor, then, need show a net yearly income of but $3,310, or about $63 net a week.

The new theatre equipment buying power created by the Housing Act appears to be sending sales of supply dealers upward. First-hand investigation showed equipment purchases made by theatre owners to be mounting steadily since the machinery of the Housing Administration was started five months ago.

Reports from the field indicate a preponderance of remodeling jobs in connection with theatres already operating and those reopening. Theatre reopenings this fall are more numerous than in recent seasons, keeping pace with the business upturn.

Typical of the extent of the interest being evidenced by exhibitors in the possibilities offered by the loan plan for "sprucing up" theatre properties are the inquiries received daily by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at headquarters in New York, directly from owners in the field and through the affiliated state organizations.

The bulk of the inquiries received by the MPTOA pertain to the eligibility of the prospective borrowers, who are told that the Administration guarantees the local lending agency against loss and the loans may be obtained from any such local financial institution that has been approved by the FHA. The sole security is the theatre owner's unindorsed note of hand and not a mortgage or lien.

However, it became known this week that no application from an exhibitor will be considered unless the taxes on the property are paid up to date, and in most instances it is required that there be no arrears in interest on outstanding mortgages.

From the Federal Housing Administration at Washington came word that exhibitors everywhere are giving the support of their theatres to campaigns being sponsored locally by the Administration to further the program. A few weeks ago James A. Moffett, housing administrator, sent letters to 14,000 exhibitors requesting they place in the lobbies posters and other material calling attention to the Better Housing Programs. In some locations exhibitors are supporting the movement in groups.

Already 50 per cent of the country's lending institutions have contracted with the Administration to participate in the lending plan for rebuilding homes and remodeling theatres and other business structures. About 15,000 loans have been made and new loans are being made at the rate of a 40 per cent increase every day over the previous day.

RKO, Consolidated In Financial Deal

RKO and Consolidated Film Industries on Friday filed an agreement in United States district court, New York, extending the maturities on the secured six per cent gold notes of RKO outstanding in the amount of $1,500,000 from January 1, 1935, to May 1, 1938.

Under the original agreement with Chemical Bank & Trust Company and Commercial Investment Trust, RKO was scheduled to meet maturities in the amount of $300,000 on the first of each month during the five months ending January 1, 1935. The new agreement, for which court approval is sought, calls for payments of $25,000, plus interest, on the first of each month beginning September 1, 1934, up to and including February 1, 1937, and $50,000 on the first of each month ending May 1, 1938.

Considered of importance to the new agreement, although not made a part of it, is a two-year deal between Consolidated and RKO under which Consolidated obtains the majority of RKO's printing work.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Stuart W. Webb, president, holds contracts with RKO for the printing of the Pathe Newsreel and all Van Beuren short subjects. RKO still owes Pathe $1,696,000 on purchase money notes.

Photoplay Added To Publications in Macfadden's List

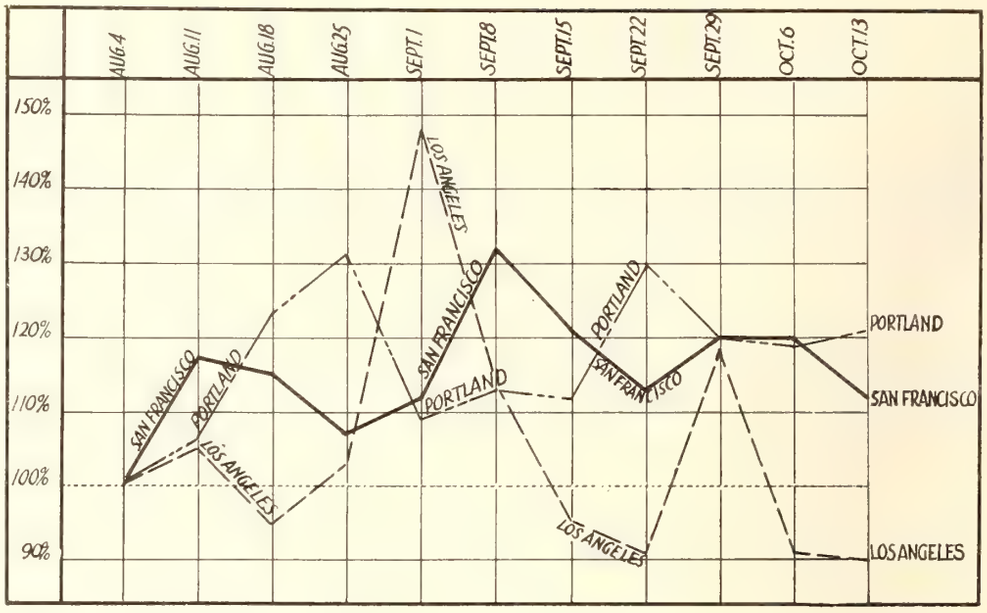
Photoplay Magazine, which the late James R. Quirk built to dominance in the field of motion picture fan publications, passed this week into the hands and control of Bernarr Macfadden, 66-year-old physical culturist and publisher of "pulp" magazines for newsstand consumption.

At the same time, Mr. Macfadden purchased Shadoplay, Photoplay's 10-cent understudy, adding both to his 36-year-old Physical Culture Magazine, True Story (1919), True Romances (1923), New York Daily Investment News (1929), Liberty Magazine, Movie Mirror, et al.

Mr. Macfadden is not new to motion pictures. He founded True Story Pictures to produce independently, a half dozen years ago. It died almost a-borning. His "pink sheet" New York Evening Graphic, a lurid tabloid which was suspended a few years back, was the birthplace of the Walter Winchell type of gossip columning.

First Issue in December

Publication of the first Macfadden-sponsored Photoplay will bear the December dateline. The property was formally acquired last Friday in New York from Photoplay Publishing Company, of which Kathryn Dougherty was president and treasurer, John S. Tuomey, vice-president, and Evelyn McEvilly, secretary. Miss Dougherty has also been editor and publisher, assisted by William T. Walsh, managing editor, and Ivan St. Johns, Hollywood editor.



Photoplay Magazine had its real beginning in the credit office of the W. F. Hall Printing Company in Chicago in 1914, when the management found a leaflet by that name on its hands, taken over for the printer's bill. Mr. Quirk was asked to assume its editorship, for a salary and interest.

There followed a vigorous policy of upbuilding. Mr. Quirk's first acquisition for the magazine was Julian Johnson, now editorial chief for Fox Film, as editor. Terry Ramsaye, then concerned with the editorial aspect of the Chicago Tribune's participation in motion picture activities, in 1914, became Photoplay's first outside contributor. The staff of Photoplay brought in a long array of names which for years have been familiar to the industry and its public, including Randolph Bartlett, Frederick James Smith, Agnes Smith, Delight Evans, Adele Rogers St. John, Bland Johaneson and many another. Photoplay went far afield from time to time in quest of material and names, presenting copy from such diverse contributors as Henry L. Menken, Williard Huntington Wright and "Bob" Davis. It set an all-time serial record by the publication monthly for three years of "The Romantic History of the Movies" by Mr. Ramsaye.

Gold Medal Annual Award

The Photoplay "Gold Medal," awarded annually to the maker of what is deemed the best picture of the year, has been a consistent expression of the policy that the late publisher sought to apply. The first Photoplay medal went to "Humoresque," in 1920. Long before that, "Jim" Quirk told in his magazine the very first human stories of such figures as D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin, and from that day on he carried forward the best that there has been to say of the motion picture, its people and the traditions of both.

Miss Dougherty was associated with Mr. Quirk from the beginning of his connection with the magazine and its development. She assumed both editorial and administrative charge following Mr. Quirk's death two years ago.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, shows the trend of business in each of three West Coast cities for an eleven-weeks period from August 4 to October 13, 1934. In each city the gross for the first week of the period in that city is taken as 100 per cent. In Los Angeles, which, as registered in the chart, showed an increase of approximately 48 per cent over the preceding week, the Shirley Temple picture, "Now and Forever," at the Paramount, did $29,998 gross, as against the theatre's $17,890 the previous week, an increase of $12,108, or 63 per cent. An even greater increase, 66⅔ per cent, was shown at the Warner Brothers Downtown theatre, with "Circus Clown," starring Joe E. Brown. Warner had conducted a personality contest campaign in connection with the production.

O. J. Elder, president of Macfadden Publications, said Wednesday that "Miss Dougherty, president editor of Photoplay, is coming with us." He added that Macfadden will also take over most of the magazine's editorial personnel.

Mr. Elder said that for the present there will be no change in the retail price of 25 cents charged for Photoplay, which is considerably higher than newsstand rates charged for other fan publications. Nor are any changes in editorial policy contemplated, he said.

NRA Approves Legitimate Theatre Code as Amended

The National Industrial Recovery Board this week at Washington approved an amended code for the legitimate full length and musical theatrical industry, which will supersede the code approved August 16, 1933. The amended code increases minimum wages, especially in the lower brackets, provides a maximum work week limitation for practically all employees, including performers during rehearsal periods, and establishes provisions regulating theatrical ticket sales.

As a condition of approval the board designated Lee Shubert, Brock Pemberton, William McBride, Morris Rosenstein, Paul Shields and Philip Wittenberg, of New York, to study the operation and effect of the ticket provisions of the amended code, those designated representing theatre managers, ticket brokers and consumers. The group will study all recommendations and amendments to the article pertaining to ticket sales and will make recommendations to the board within 60 days.

Indictments Close Memphis Theatres

Theatres in Memphis were closed on Sunday following the indictments of six managers for violation of the Sunday blue laws. Indictments were returned against the Orpheum, Loew's State and Palace, Warners' Strand and the Rosemary. There is considerable speculation in Memphis film circles as to whether an effort will be made to continue the Sunday openings.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

OLE PETERSON, versatile exhibitor of Beaver Falls, Nebraska, has turned inventor, contributing to science and the world of sports a most unusual device for killing ducks by the hundreds at one time.

The duck season opened last week in Mr. Peterson's native Calmus Valley, and, not having a gun, he took from his theatre a portable projector and rode out to the bad lands west of town. There he pointed the machine at the white wall of a marl cliff which stood out in the night, and began running a short reel of some lake scenes as soon as he heard the ducks coming down his way.

The scenes—displayed upon the cliff walls—of sylvan lakes with birds soaring above and fish leaping from the waters, proved most entrancing to the oncoming ducks and they crashed head on against the cliff in attempting to alight upon the phantom waters. Mr. Peterson then proceeded calmly to gather up several hundred ducks and rode back to town.

At this point the local authorities, unappreciative of Ole's inventive genius, stepped in and formally arraigned him for killing the ducks. After hearing the defense set up by his attorney they were in a quandary what to do with him. Mr. Peterson's lawyer contended that he had committed no offense, as the game laws do not mention motion picture machines as lethal weapons, nor was he guilty of killing the ducks in the first place—they had committed suicide.

The next great drama of patents and amusements to follow the Tri-Ergon production starring William Fox will be one which has even greater entertainment possibilities. It will star Miss Sally Rand, fan dancer extraordinaire, who, not to be outdone by Mr. Fox's performance in the headlines of the press, this week sent forth an ominous warning through her counsel that she is ready to prosecute any and all infringers of her "Bubble Dance," which she has fully protected under registration at Washington. It's a process by which bubbles of one kind or another thinly veil Sally in the altogether.

Comedian Ed Wynn's definition of a lawyer is one who gets two other guys to strip for a fight and then takes all their clothes away from them.

Mr. Wynn, by the way, in addition to his role of Texaco "Fire Chief," is now honorary fire chief to so many fire departments throughout the land that his valet has to store his badges and other insignia of office in a large trunk—but never has Ed rushed to a fire even in the capacity of spectator, so pronounced is his dislike for conflagrations of all kinds.

Five hundred movie extras rioted in earnest on the Paramount studio in Hollywood when a number of their group swung police clubs too realistically.

It happened on the set of Walter Wanger's "The President Vanishes." Some husky men in the group were acting as leaders of a mob storming a synthetic White House. The mob started up the street, shouting, fighting and rioting, with the leaders fighting back to keep them in line. Several of the extras were struck on the head with little billy clubs. They resented it and revolted. Two fire hoses were brought into play to rout the rioters.

THE CHINESE are noted for their proverbs—terse logic and philosophy—sort of sermons in a hiccup. America, too, has her proverbs—mostly due to the conscientious collaboration of one Benjamin Franklin, Philadelphia kite-flyer. However, proverbs, like Eddie Cantor's Chase and Sanborn coffee, become dated. Also they apply too generally—there is no pointing them at a certain spot, like those concocted by Paul Gerard Smith for that golden, glittering California place of Hollywood, where:

He who hesitates is a genius.

Necessity is the mother of a cut in salary.

All's well that ends.

Those who live in glass houses wish they didn't.

Charles Spencer Chaplin has finally condescended to go to work on a new picture, after all these years. He will be producer, financier, director, supervisor, star, author and part owner of the distributing company that will market it.

The news was received with quite some surprise in the field, causing John Moffitt, for instance, to observe in his motion picture column in the Kansas City Star that Mr. Chaplin is on an eight-year schedule that runs something like this:

First Year—Make a picture.

Second Year—Announce that you will portray Napoleon.

Third Year—Fight with Lita Grey Chaplin over the children.

Fourth Year—Announce that you will portray Hamlet.

Fifth Year—Announce that you are going to marry Paulette Goddard.

Sixth Year—Announce that you will portray the Savior.

Seventh Year—Take the children to the movies with an international publicity campaign.

Eighth Year—Begin another picture.

Anyway Mr. Chaplin pays his own way.

The motion picture industry and its public on November 1 will witness the performance of a film star, age 56 years, who is the author of stage shows and song hits which the public has paid some $94,000,000 to see and hear. He is George Michael Cohan, whose new endeavor as a motion picture star comes, as has been widely told, under the sponsorship of Harold Brooks Franklin, ex-exhibitor, in "Gambling," a Fox release. Oldtimers will remember Mr. Cohan's first flyer into films back in 1917, or thereabouts, and his second experience, two years ago, in Paramount's "Phantom President." He would rather forget both.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES has an actor on the roster of its studio in Hollywood whose financial strategems in business make some of our motion picture financiers of the present day look like correspondence school students. He engineered a $70,000,000 business deal so that he might retire in comfortable state of pocketbook to pursue his favorite pastime of acting on stage and screen.

Sir Guy Standing, 61-year-old Knight Commander of the British Empire, had been playing the British stage since 1899 when he joined the King's navy for service in the World War. His meritorious performances on shipboard under fire caused King George to knight him. At the time he felt the King's sword descend on his shoulder Guy had but $40 in his pocket and a healthy ambition for theatricals in his bosom.

Came the mad race in 1919 to rebuild war-torn Europe, and Guy Standing set out against heavy odds to buy up miles of uncrated American equipment lined along the Rhine—tanks, tractors, automobiles, locomotives and whatnot, which he intended to resell on the Continent for the reconstruction. Motor Organization, Ltd., was formed and through his friends he raised the funds to complete the purchase.

Working quietly on another front at the same time were some interests who were planning to do the same thing with a like amount of similar equipment owned by England. Such competition would have ruined him, and so he pulled some rabbits out of a hat and bought this material as well. It took Sir Guy nine years to unload the stuff, piecemeal, at a gross of some $70,000,000, which left him with the fortune he needed to give him the proper incentive for his art. Standing—but not still.

Resting but a few feet from our publishing headquarters on Broadway off Columbus Circle is a monument to the Depression, in the form of an impressive, white-stone untenanted apartment building. The cornerstone, in mute testimony, reads: "Hampshire House—Dedicated to Yesterday's Charm and Tomorrow's Convenience—1931."

Some day the young and pretty Hilton Sisters, better known as the "Siamese Twins," because of the physical deformity which makes them inseparable, will recognize that the motion picture theatre has advanced somewhat since the Coney Island sideshow days of P. T. Barnum. And, accordingly, they will substitute a more acceptable method to attract publicity attention to their stage engagements at picture houses, to replace their well-worn gag of attempting to obtain in each large city they play a marriage license for one of them.

Naturally the city fathers are stumped when a chap presents himself with the freaks at the courthouse or city hall and requests a license to marry half of the duet. This perplexity always causes a delay, and, "tired of waiting," the twins and the "groom-to-be" depart "in a huff," giving expression to the injustice of the treatment.

We have a vague recollection of having heard some place along Broadway that publicity-seeking authorities of some of the less important states had extended invitations to the twins to visit their commonwealth, promising that the wedding of the one would be arranged without hitches. But, evidently, the booking route of the act—which just finished a week at the Tower theatre in Kansas City—does not take them within the boundaries of such obliging states.

'WOULD MAKE DARING, HONEST FILM'

Declares DeCasseres of "Divided By Three"; Three Other Plays Discussed as Screen Timber

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

DIVIDED BY THREE

What is "entertainment" in pictures? It isn't different from any legitimate definition of the word you can find. "Entertainment" must enchant, thrill, grip, divert, create thought, make you forget, weep, laugh, renew yourself. To me, pictures have no other purpose. Neither has the stage.

Our audiences enter picture houses for the same reason they go to ball games, dance-halls or attend a party. They do not want to be sermonized, "educated," uplifted or birched.

Why lie about it? "Educational" pictures have their place and value; but what the ticket-buyer goes into a house for is to let down, to mentally gambol.

When our noise-making and ultra-puritanical censors forget this they are running into a jam—and helping to destroy the greatest medium of amusement and form of mental and emotional hygiene that the world, to date, has known: moving pictures.

This soliloquy came upon me when looking at "Divided by Three," a very interesting and honestly worked out play of marital infidelity by Margaret Leech (Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer) and Mrs. Beatrice Kaufman (the wife of George Kaufman)—Guthrie McClintock producing.

This is a serious and thought-provoking piece of work—and seriousness also comes under the head of entertainment.

The situation is unusual and, among the narrow-minded critics of our pictures, would be called "immoral." But it would make a daring, simple, honest picture, and I hope it will be done.

Lila is married to an automaton of a husband. There are no relations between them.

Robert, the husband, is a speculator. Lila, to keep them out of the red, operates a picture-gallery on the side.

The manager of this art gallery, who makes it go, is Hugh Faraday. He is Lila's lover. She loves him passionately. The husband is always a cipher.

But there is a son, Teddy, a young fellow of puritanical ideals, just out of college. And he has borrowed money from Faraday through the mother.

When he discovers his mother's infidelity he nearly goes to smash. The big scene—à la "Hamlet"—is between the mother and son (who is, moreover, engaged to a decent little dumbbell).

The great fault of the play is its talk, talk, talk.

Judith Anderson as the wife and mother to both her son and her husband was infinitely tender. She plants Love above the conventional idea of Duty—an every-day occurrence, and absolutely legitimate on the screen if not treated flippantly. And "Divided by Three" is not flippant.

This may never become a picture, for it may be that the screen has not yet reached an adult age. But a great majority of our picture audiences have.

SPRING SONG

Florrie Solomon (Francine Larrimore) died in bed in the full glare of an off-stage ghost-frosted bull at the fall of the last curtain in "Spring Song," the new play by Bella and Samuel Spewack. That spoiled the play—a very quietly interesting one up to that point—for me.

Let generals die in bed—as an ex-second lieutenant, I don't care a cheese-mite. But I am militantly opposed to having, on the screen or the stage, any one of my heroes, heroines or top-notch gangsters die peacefully in a snow-white bed with a Kleig moon sickling his or her countenance o'er with the pale cast of sentimental baloney.

No!—my heroes and heroines—whether God-fearing or eaten hollow to their gizzards with Red Sin—must die tossed from mountain-tops, fall backward over broken balconies, shot in a running fight with the peelers, blown to nothing by a shell under a barbed-wire fence—and, among the ladies, I like to see them gracefully take poison or peg out with an asp à la Cleopatra-Colbert.

Florrie died of giving birth to an unloved child. Florrie wanted to die because the father of the child was not the man she really loved, but the fellow who was engaged to her sister, a goody-goody girl, very plain in appearance and who took it on the chin for her sister because her mother, an orthodox Jewish woman who wielded an inhuman ancient moral code, told her it was her duty to give up her dental-college fiancé for the erring and scarlet sister in order to legitimatize the child.

It is a moving story, simply told. There are picture possibilities in it because of its extreme sensitiveness to every-day human frailties and its potentialities for excessive weeping-matinees for the ladies.

"Spring Song" is all East Side Ghetto. The first act setting and movement are almost a duplicate of Elmer Rice's "Street Scene." Mrs. Solomon conducts a soda-paper-cigaret stand outside of her lodgings. (This Mrs. Solomon was played with extraordinary effectiveness by Helen Zelinskaya, her first English-speaking role.)

She has two daughters, Florrie and Tillie. Florrie is for the Big Life. Tillie is romantic but kitchen-minded.

Florrie, although engaged to an up-and-going fellow, a high-pressure salesman, nevertheless seduces her sister's steady—youth and a perfect spring night.

The core of this play—and the beauty of it—lies in the attitude of Mrs. Solomon. In doing her "duty" according to the ancient law she ruins the lives of both her children—causing the death through grief of Florrie—and mussing up the future of all concerned. And there's the baby.

There are several East Side characters for comedy. As a picture it contains that eternal element: tears. Audience reaction was good.

ROLL, SWEET CHARIOT

There is a tremendous epic, to be done some day for the screen, on the Negro: his origins in Africa, his slavery, his aspirations, his profound religious instinct, his love of song, his humor, his tragic history in America especially, and an imaginative finale which will envisage his "emancipation." ("The Emperor Jones" was merely an episode.)

If the critics of the Negro tell me that he is uninteresting because he is absolutely imitative, I reply so is every human being that walks the earth, from Shakespeare, Napoleon and Plato downward.

Paul Green, in "Roll, Sweet Chariot," "a symphonic play of the Negro people," with an incidental score by Dolphe Martin (Bernard Klawans producing), is an attempt at such an epic; but it doesn't land either for the stage or picture purposes.

Its central character is the superman, the Paul Bunyan, the Gargantua of the Negro—John Henry, a character that Roark Bradford has also written about.

John Henry is great picture material for a Roark Bradford and a Langston Hughes to undertake.

But not from the Paul Green script. For here John Henry is rather pulled down to earth—he has not that glamour, that unearthliness, that Titan mold that those figures have in the immortal "The Green Pastures."

There are a murder, a funeral service, a chain-gang in "Roll, Sweet Chariot," but it all seems to me to have been done for the sake of the hidden choir and the chanting spirituals.

When the screen comes of age, John Henry will appear on the white sheets. Or maybe I'm just a boob optimist.

FIRST LEGION

This play is in three acts and eleven scenes. It is by Emmet Lavery (Bert Lytell and Phil Green, producing).

It is a kind of unusual entertainment that will appeal to a restricted—and an initiate—audience, for it is laid in the "House of St. Gregory," in a small town "somewhere in the United States." It is about the Order of Jesuits, their lives, their spiritual struggles and their reaction to contacts with the outside world.

Just at the time when Father Rawleigh and Father Fulton have resolved to repudiate their vows and go forth into the world again, a "miracle" occurs at St. Gregory.

But it turns out that the doctor, an atheist, had lied. Science had a hand in the matter, too.

There is a pleasing ending in which faith is finally restored by a lame boy who is made to walk through an act of faith.

The acting throughout was excellent, especially the quiet and convincing portrayal of Bert Lytell as the Rev. Mark Ahern.

Picture value, problematical.

Paramount Plan Hearing Nov. 12th

Developments along the Paramount Publix reorganization front this week included these:

Adjournment, until November 12, of a scheduled hearing on proposed reorganization plans.

Further questioning, by the trustees, of former Paramount officials.

Postponement of questioning by the trustees of officials of Paramount creditor banks—also until November 12.

The taking over of Publix - Salt Lake circuit of 13 houses by Louis L. Dent.

Negotiations aimed at reduction of E. V. Richards' interest in Saenger Theatres underway in New York.

The Kuhn, Loeb & Co. plan continues to stand as the only one which has the support of the three principal reorganization groups, bondholders, stockholders and creditors' committees, each representing a majority in amount and number of those having claims against the corporation. The Kuhn, Loeb & Co. plan includes a provision for a $2 per share assessment on stockholders.

A scheduled hearing on a proposed reorganization plan for Paramount Publix, understood to have been prepared by Malcolm Sumner and former judge Erwin C. Garvin, attorneys for a group of minority bondholders, was adjourned Monday in New York at the offices of special master John E. Joyce until November 12. The adjournment was granted on the motion of Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, counsel for the trustees in bankruptcy.

Trustees obtained court permission to force appearances for questioning of 17 men identified or involved with Paramount in 1931 and 1932, together with an order for production of all necessary records. Three hearings have been held during the past week, the most important of which was the questioning of Norman Collyer, assistant secretary of Paramount. The next hearing was set for Friday.

A petition for examination of officials of Paramount creditor banks, sought by trustees of the debtor under Section 21-A of the bankruptcy laws and scheduled for hearing Monday before Mr. Joyce, was postponed to November 12.

In connection with Paramount's reorganization plan, Emanuel Cohen, production head, arrived in New York Monday.

Louis L. Dent took over the Publix-Salt Lake circuit of 13 theatres on a short term partnership operating contract with Famous Theatres, Paramount subsidiary, as of October 15. The contract runs to June 27, 1935. Publix-Salt Lake was formerly operated by Louis Marcus for Famous.

In New York, negotiations aimed at a reduction of E. V. Richards' interest in the new Saenger Theatres Co. were underway.

Paramount this week, through George J. Schaefer, general manager, announced that it is assembling all its district managers and many home office executives for a three-day conference in Hot Springs, Va., October 26, 27 and 28.

Other developments in the Paramount case during the week included approval of the agreement between Walter Wanger and the Paramount trustees whereby Wanger agrees to repay Paramount from the receipts of six features, the sum of $175,000 he will have received in settlement of his $416,000 suit for back salary filed in 1931.

A hearing scheduled for Tuesday on the action of the trustees directed at the $13,600,000 bank transaction with Film Productions Corporation in 1932, was postponed until October 30 by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe.

SCREEN ACTORS' GUILD THREATENS UNIONIZING

Eddie Cantor's Organization Turns to Equity as Liaison in A. F. of L. Charter Move

Eddie Cantor's Screen Actors' Guild—he is president and founder—this week flung a defiance at Hollywood's producers with the demand that the organization become affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

A proposal to obtain a charter from the Federation was to be submitted to the Guild's board this week.

Through this latest move the creative workers of the production colony virtually are extending the hand of welcome to Actors' Equity Association, which controls practically every move of the legitimate actor in New York and elsewhere and repeatedly has attempted to organize Hollywood and effect a "closed shop" among picture players.

The proposal for an A. F. of L. charter was drafted Friday night after resentment by Guild members at the refusal of producers to accept its original proposal for new forms of contract and rules on working hours. Drawing of the proposal was effected at the home of Robert Montgomery. Present, in addition to Mr. Montgomery, were Kenneth Thompson and Arthur Bryon of the Guild, and Frank Gillmore, president of Actors' Equity, also I. B. Kornblum, Equity attorney.

Kindred Interest as Liaison

It was to Equity that the Guild turned, for the A. F. of L. requires that some organization in a kindred industry or interest act as liaison to obtain a charter.

Mr. Cantor was in New York while the meeting on the Coast was in progress and Sunday night announced the Guild's plans to the New York press. The chief purpose, he explained, is to enable the Guild better to combat the attitude toward labor of "many producers who are pig-headed, stubborn and feel they are czars."

"I do believe the producers in Hollywood are not meeting the Screen Actors' Guild half way," Mr. Cantor said. "They are interested in doing away with the Guild. The only other agency in Hollywood is the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, but that is producer-controlled and amounts to a company union.

Calls Producers "Pig-Headed"

"Many of the producers are pig-headed, stubborn and feel like czars. They aren't, though. They live in Hollywood all the time and don't know there are any other parts of the country. If we join the A. F. of L. the producers have brought it upon themselves. The actors don't want to stop the studios from making pictures. After all, that's what they're interested in and make their living by."

Not since the Screen Actors' Guild was formed, over a year ago, has such a sudden blow been taken at one of Hollywood's older institutions—the Academy, which has fought for years to prevent Actors' Equity and any other type of actor unionization from gaining a foothold in the film capital.

According to present plans the Guild will have to submit the proposal, if ratified by its directors, to a vote of approximately 400 Class A members. Sixty per cent must approve the proposal.

If the charter is granted, the Guild will be allowed to conduct its affairs in Hollywood without interference by Equity, it was said last week.

Equity Vote Plan Reported

However, authoritative sources at Equity headquarters in New York indicated—although nothing said was to be construed as official due to Mr. Gillmore's absence on the Coast—that the Equity Council will vote next week on a proposed affiliation with the Guild, provided directors of the Guild approve the A. F. of L. affiliation proposal and also provided any affiliation between Equity and the Guild stipulates a closed shop and that all Guild members shall become Equity members. Mr. Gillmore was to arrive in New York the end of this week bringing with him the proposed agreement of affiliation.

Actors' Equity Association, formed for the benefit of legitimate theatre creative workers, has made at least six attempts to organize Hollywood actors. In most of these attempts the group met the opposition of the Academy, which had been formed in 1929 after a bitter fight in Hollywood to enroll screen players.

Cantor Commends Rosenblatt

About a year ago, when discontent in the Academy's actor ranks came to a climax at the code hearings in Washington with rumors of contemplated salary fixing for stars and featured players, nearly 1,000 actors withdrew from the Academy and the Guild was formed. In less than one week the Guild had 529 members.

Praise for Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt's efforts in straightening out the Coast situation affecting actors was given Tuesday by Mr. Cantor, who is a member of the Code Authority's studio labor committee.

Arthur Lee Now Heads Gaumont-British Here

Arthur Lee, American manager, and vice-president, is in charge of Gaumont-British in this country, following the departure for England last week of Mark Ostrer, chairman of the board, and Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager. The following have been added to the company sales staff: Russell Borg and Joseph Woodward, Kansas City; Fred E. Wagoner, Indianapolis; Walter Wessling, Portland, Ore.; J. M. Harris, Russell G. Mortensen, St. Louis; Eli Ginsberg, Joseph Toner, Philadelphia.

"If the B.I.P.-Gaumont-British deal was ever begun, it is all off now," last week in New York declared Maurice Mayer, London banker, referring to the reported merger of British International and Gaumont, denied last week. "Little Friend," Gaumont film at the Roxy in New York, was reported to have set a new Saturday attendance house record. Six British pictures will play Broadway houses simultaneously next week, two of them being Gaumont-British films.

CZECHS MAY ABANDON KONTINGENT SOON

Serious-Minded Native Producers Demand Abolishment of System Impairing Product

By J. K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

Reports that the present Czech kontingent on American films will be abolished November 1 came out of Prague this week. The quota requires an import license of $840 a picture and stipulates that one Czech production be accepted in return for each seven American films licensed.

[At the offices of the foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in New York, doubt was expressed that the kontingent will be removed November 1 but a suitable arrangement is expected before long.—Ed.]

From Warsaw it was reported to Berlin that a 50 per cent reduction is forthcoming on the duty on negatives the positives of which are made in Poland.

Source of Trouble for Years

The Czech film field for some years has been a constant source of trouble to the American film industry, which has been practically out of that market since 1931. Only the independent American production has been represented on the market for several years and it is generally admitted that a re-entrance of the big American companies would completely revolutionize the Czech motion picture policy.

To understand the development of the Czech kontingent in the last years it is necessary to study the reasons for the setting up of the system of import licenses and to investigate the progress of Czech national production.

The first endeavors to create national production activity were made ten or twelve years ago. It was the intention of the Government to make the Czech film market independent of foreign import. To reach this objective it was necessary for the Government to subsidize the new industry. The first steps in this direction were undoubtedly successful. Some of the first Czech films did considerable business and were shown in most European countries. But newcomers to the industry reduced the standards of the films more and more, thereby considerably limiting the market for Czech films. Instead of heading the list of all films shown in the country, national production went down farther and farther and, finally, became a necessary evil of a counter-balance against imported films.

Kontingent Result Unexpected

This was the very reason for a curtailment in the import of foreign product. It was expected that the new kontingent system introduced would create a substantial support to the national film production and, on the other side, would increase the quality of foreign product.

The original idea was to induce every importer of foreign films to produce a Czech film for a certain number of films imported. This system of compulsory production became unsuccessful, however, and there followed what nobody had expected, a sale of import license. National film production of a very inferior quality was started only in order to get import licenses. The Czech film became the only avenue to the required foreign product and the foreign market was ruined for national product.

Ask Return to Free Competition

The serious-minded Czech film producers demanded abolishment of the present kontingent system, therefore, and favored a return to "free competition." The Czech directors, supervisors and production managers had acquired so much experience chiefly in foreign countries, that free competition with other films could be met, it was thought. The up-to-date studios in Prague-Barrandov were prepared to make 20 to 30 features a year and technical equipment was greatly improved.

The adversaries of the present kontingent system, therefore—and this is very essential to an understanding of the Czech market—are the Czech film producers, managers and directors, and their ranks are swelling more and more.

Fred Warren to Market Chrysler Air Conditioner

Chrysler-made equipment for the cooling, heating and ventilation of theatres will be sold, distributed and installed exclusively in the United States by Control Corporation of America, formed recently and headed by F. B. Warren, who has been southeastern sales manager of Electrical Research Products.

Entry into the air-conditioning field was announced recently by the Chrysler motor manufacturer whose son, Walter P. Chrysler, Jr., as president, heads Airtemp, Inc., the world distributing organization which will itself handle all sales, under the sales management of H. C. Jamerson, except in the theatre classification granted to Mr. Warren's company. For the manufacture of the equipment itself, in all fields of air-conditioning, there is the Chrysler-owned Amplex Corporation with its plant in Detroit.

Readiness to make immediate surveys and installations in theatres was announced Tuesday by Mr. Warren.

Head of the Warren engineering staff will be Andre Merle, refrigeration expert, and all engineering and air-conditioning equipment problems will be under his direction. Mr. Merle's experience in air conditioning dates from his discharge from the military service in 1922. He served in the regular army with the First Division Engineers and with the French Colonial Army during the World War.

While with Carrier Engineering Corporation he worked on the design and installation of such plans as the Chrysler and Lincoln buildings, New York, and the J. L. Hudson department store, Detroit.

For the last three years he has been connected with Clyde R. Place, consulting engineer in air-conditioning, and for Mr. Place has worked on the Rockefeller Center development including stores and theatres, and on the design of the new Government Archives Building in Washington. He is a member of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers and the American Society of Military Engineers.

William E. Harkness will be the traffic and contracting consultant. Mr. Harkness for 30 years was with American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and for years he was head of its radio activities. He was the builder and executive in charge of the WEAF Station, later disposed of to National Broadcasting. For the last seven years he has been an executive of Electrical Research Products. Mr. Harkness will also be executive adviser to Mr. Warren.

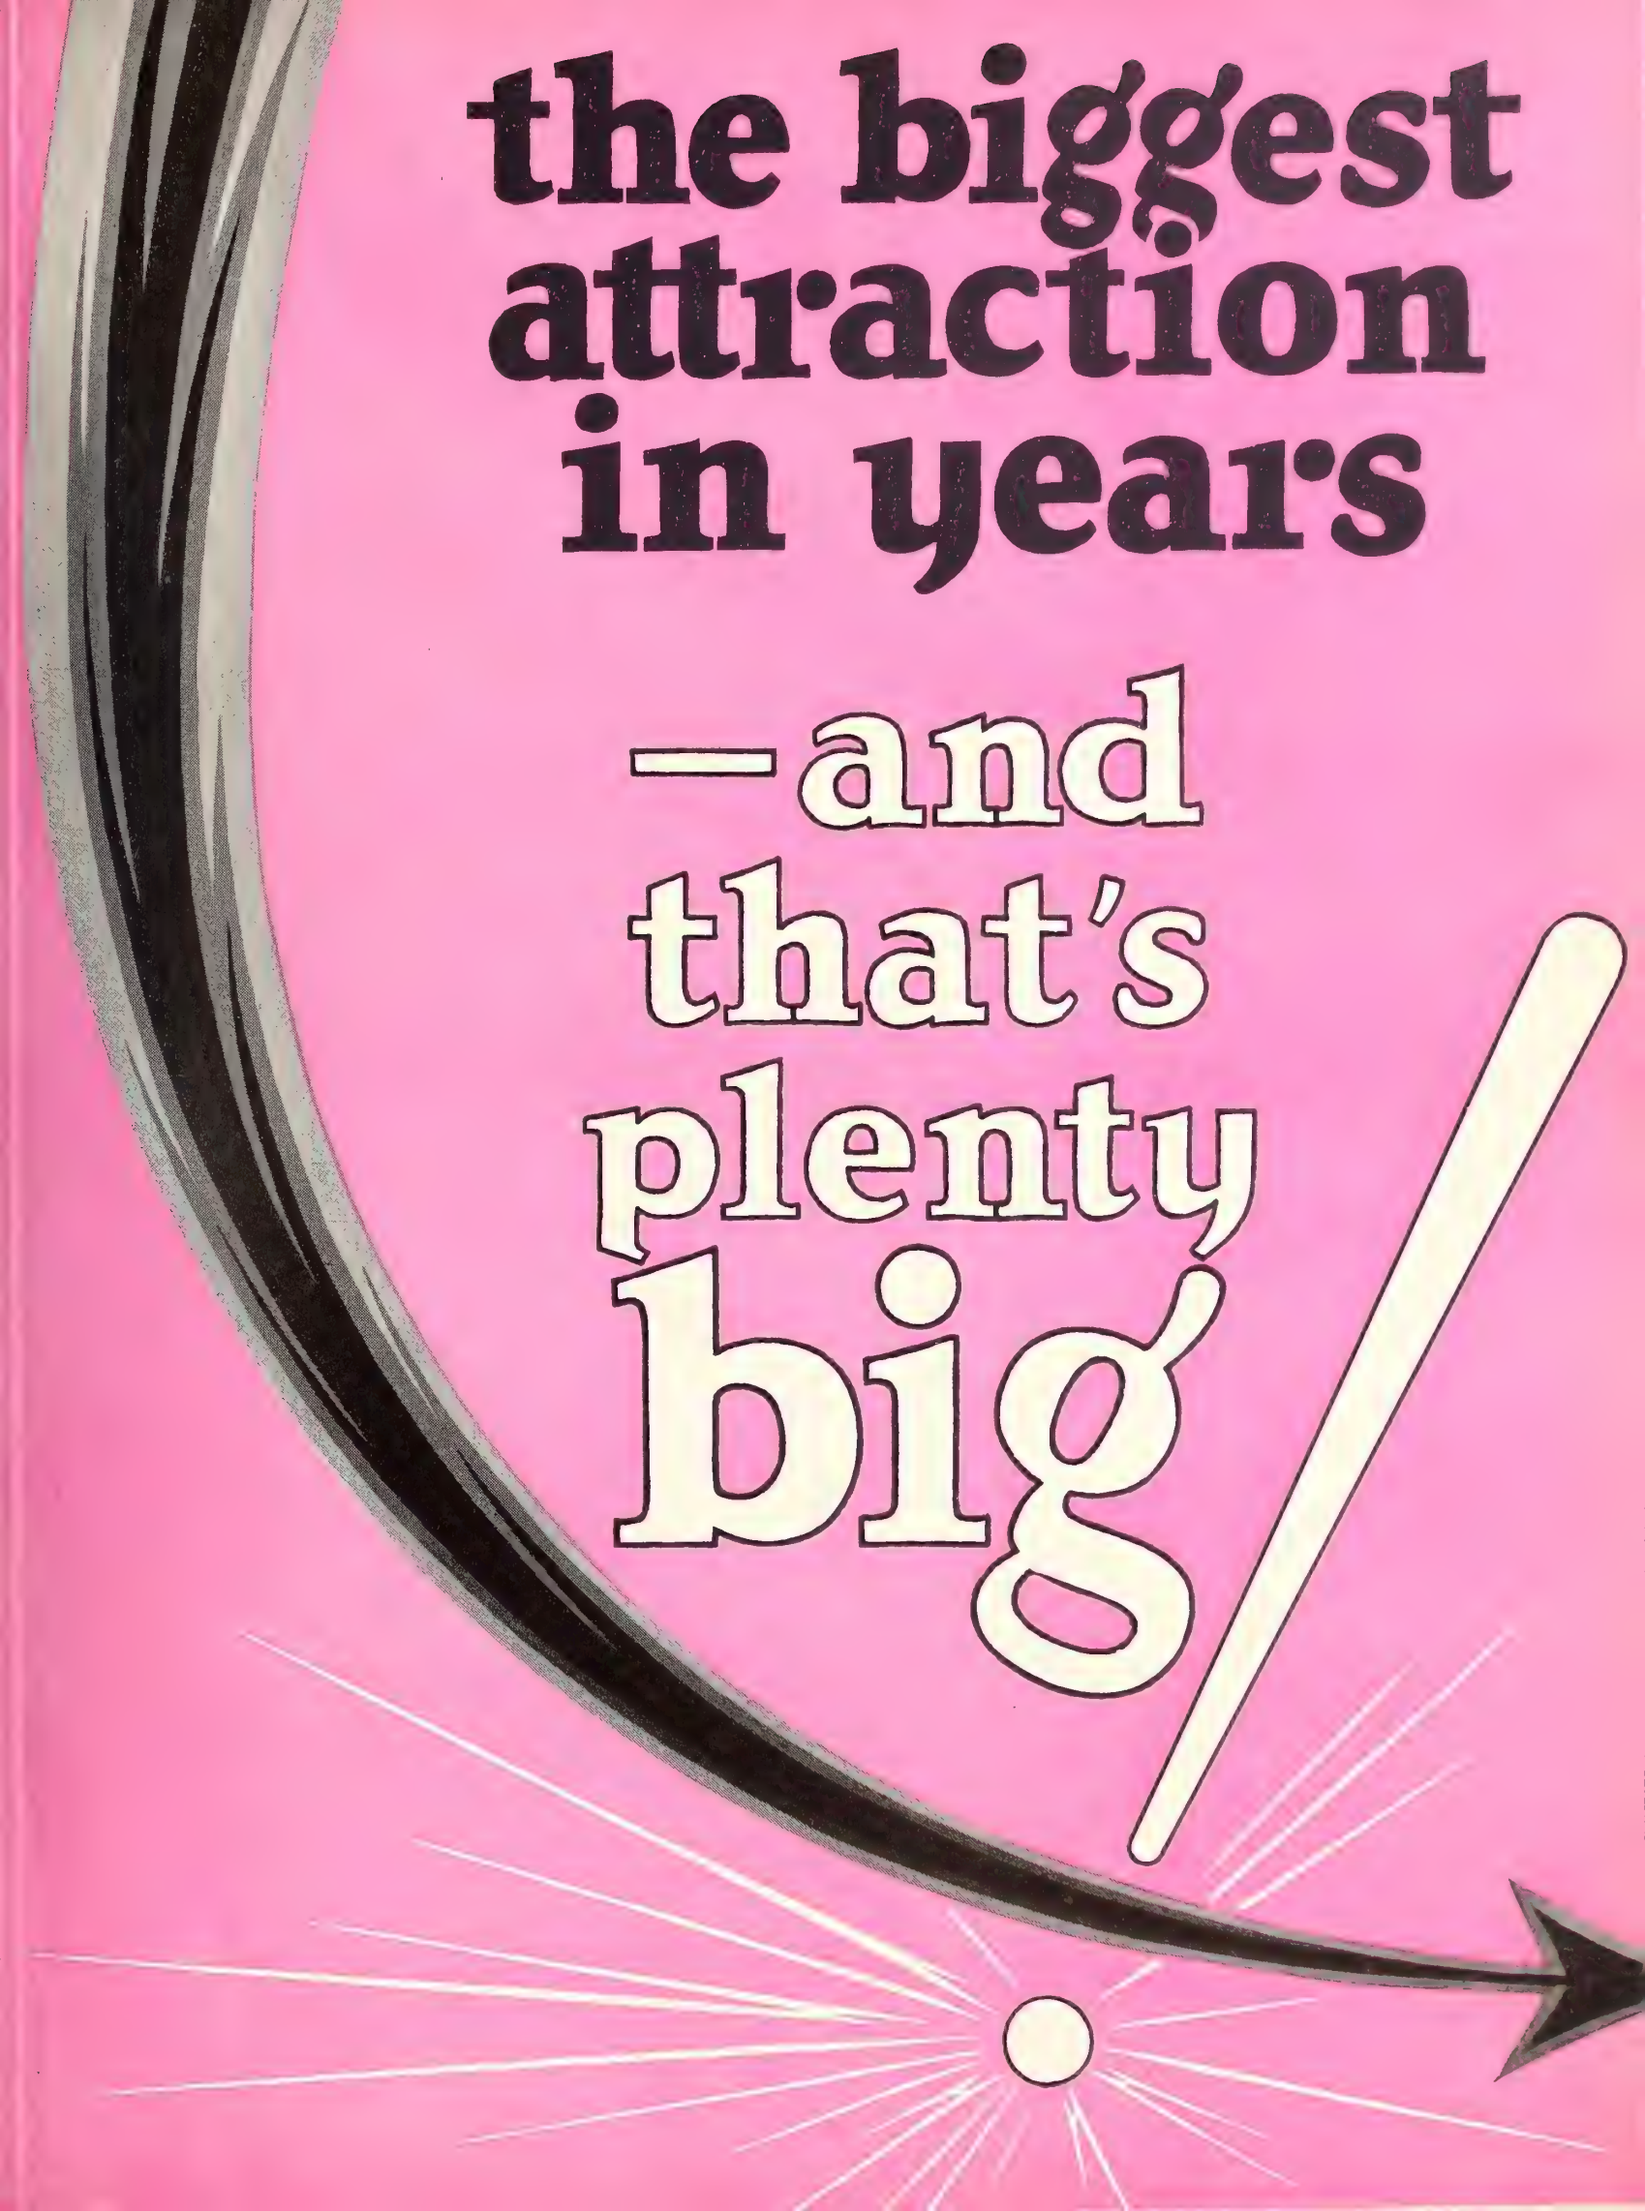
Arthur E. Ralph, for years with Electrical Research Products, and prior to that with R. Hoe and Company, and Winchester Arms Co., will head the division of survey and installation as well as be assistant treasurer. Mr. Ralph was plant engineer of Winchester Arms.

I. M. Magnus will be secretary of the company.

Announcement of the personnel of the sales organization of Control Corporation of America will be made shortly.

"Installations will be handled on time payments to good business risks," said Mr. Warren's announcement, which added that "Walter P. Chrysler's entry into air-conditioning has been the signal for an immensely quickened interest and activity in this vast new industry. Paralleling his leadership in the automobile field, his refrigerative experts have created the simplest of mechanisms that will be moderate in price and economical in maintenance."

F. B. Warren's return to personal operation within the theatre field comes after six years association with Erpi as a sales executive. For 20 years he has been known widely in exhibition. He was one of the founders as well as vice-president in charge of sales and distribution of the original Goldwyn Company, later merged into Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He was the founder, general manager and his own sales manager of Associated Producers, the organization that embraced as its producer owners Thomas H. Ince, George Loane Tucker, Maurice Tourneur, Mack Sennett, J. Parker Read, Jr., and Marshall Neilan.



Mr. Warren, who will retire from Erpi December 31, announced that the Control Corporation is in no way connected with Electrical Research.

Four Promoted in Erpi Realignment

The eastern sales forces of Electrical Research Products were realigned this week following announcement by Fred B. Warren that he would resign as southeastern sales manager to market Chrysler cooling and heating apparatus.

W. E. Woodward was appointed acting sales manager of the southeastern division, reporting to L. W. Conrow, eastern division general manager. H. O. Duke was also made an acting sales manager of the southeast, in charge of territory below the Virginia boundary, and reporting to Mr. Woodward. Mr. Duke will also continue as credit and collection manager of the southeast, with headquarters at Atlanta.

Robert W. Horn was promoted from New York City salesman to assistant sales manager of the northeastern division, reporting to Bert Sanford, the northeastern chief. Mr. Horn will be in charge of sales in the Metropolitan area and the Hudson River Valley.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

PORTRAIT OF LAURA BAYLES

(Tentative Title)

Radio

On paper this story promises not only pleasing entertainment but likewise showmanship possibilities distinctly out of the ordinary. The yarn has a unique premise. It paints a school teacher in a heretofore unattempted manner. May Robson has the leading role. Devoting her life to bringing her pupils up to all prescribed forms, she finds herself whirled into conflict with conniving politicians, a keeper of a back-room saloon—forces which are undermining all she is trying to build up. Turning gambler herself, she outsmarts the slickers, gets herself mixed up in a scandal, and when things look blackest has no one but the man who tried to harm her the most arrange with the President of the United States, a former pupil, to eulogize her into reinstatement.

The original story is by Wanda Tuchock. The adaptation is by Arthur Homan and the screen play by Milton Krims and John Twist. John Robertson, maker of "His Greatest Gamble," is the director.

With the prestige of "Lady for a Day" and "Lady by Choice" to use in embellishing May Robson's draw, the supporting cast also offers some good commercial names. Included are Mary Carlisle, currently in "Kentucky Kernels"; Fred MacMurray, a newcomer from the stage making his first screen appearance; Alan Hale, Hale Hamilton, Etienne Girardot, Edward Van Sloan, William Burress, Fred Kohler, Jr., Ben Alexander, Onest Conley, Virginia Reid and Ward Bond.

Being of the character that indicates appeal to both the more mature patrons as well as the younger element, this forthcoming production seems to be the type for topical showmanship.

ENCHANTED APRIL

Radio

Here is romantic comedy. In addition to being a widely read novel, it also was presented successfully as a stage play. Not a love story according to the usual formula, it is rather a light idyllic story of a married woman, her ambitions and their repercussions. Because of their most popular successes, more than ordinary showmanship has been shown in the selection of the two leads, Ann Harding and Frank Morgan.

Similar smartness has been demonstrated in the selection of the scenarists and director. Credited with the screen play are Samuel Hoffenstein, who recently did "Change of Heart," and Ray Harris, remembered for "Three Cornered Moon," "Many Happy Returns" and "We're Rich Again." Harry Beaumont, director, has proved his adaptability to this kind of material in "When Ladies Meet" and "Should Ladies Behave."

Supporting Miss Harding and Frank Morgan, whose current picture is "Affairs of Cellini," are Katherine Alexander, previously with Miss Harding in "When Ladies Meet" and seen in "Operator 13"; Reginald Owen, now in "Madame duBarry"; Jane Baxter, British actress in "The Constant Nymph"; Ralph Forbes, recently in "Twentieth Century"; Eric Blore, who made his Hollywood debut in "The Gay Divorcee," and Ralph Forbes.

Locales are London and an Italian villa.

Charming gayness and absence of heavy drama appear to be the most potent qualities to capitalize.

CONCEALMENT

Warner

This story, featuring Barbara Stanwyck, is of a dramatic character particularly adapted to her talents as established by such recent pictures as "Bitter Tea of General Yen," "Baby Face," "Gambling Lady" and "A Lost Lady." Adapted from an unproduced stage play, it is a gripping yarn of present day political plots, mysterious murders and the impeachment of a governor on bribery charges. The romantic accompaniment to the drama is given an unusual twist. In it Miss Stanwyck, the daughter of the governor (Arthur Byron) is secretly married to the attorney general (Warren William), who is duty bound to prosecute her father. In this situation the possibilities for smash entertainment, involving conflict between love and duty, are readily apparent.

The screen play was prepared by a trio whose recent accomplishments indicate knowledge of this type of story. Tom Buckingham did the scenario on James Cagney's "He Was Her Man." In addition to many others, F. Hugh Herbert recently collaborated on "The Dragon Murder Case" and Mary McCall wrote the screen play for "Desirable." The director, William Diertele, was similarly associated with "Fog Over Frisco," "The Firebird" and "Madame du Barry."

The cast supporting Miss Stanwyck, William and Byron is composed of a familiar list of Warner stock players and one or two outsiders. Included are Grant Mitchell, recently in Universal's "One Exciting Adventure"; Glenda Farrell, in "Kansas City Princess"; Douglas Dumbrille, Henry O'Neill, William Davidson, Willard Robertson, Arthur Aylesworth, Russell Hicks and Vince Barnett.

Not only is there commercial value to the title and personnel, but inasmuch as its release probably will be coincidental with the election season, the political content of the story automatically suggests topical exploitation.

STAKE OUT

Columbia

Semi-gangster in atmosphere, this is an action story of cops and crooks. Original story and screen play are by Lambert Hillyer, who also is directing. Similar pictures with which he has been associated are "Defense Rests" and "One Is Guilty" as director, and "The Man Trailer," in which he functioned the same as in this production.

Bruce Cabot, currently in Monogram's "Red Head," is the story's hero. Judith Allen has the leading feminine role. Supporting players include Ward Bond, Charles Sabin, who is being groomed for bigger things by Columbia, John Kelly, Arthur Rankin, Matthew Betz, Walter McGrail and Maidel Turner.

Thrill entertainment being its essence, the story has Cabot as a police sergeant promoted for the success of his stake-out methods in trapping criminals. When he makes the arrest in a murder, the Sabin headed gang determines to rub him out. Warned by Miss Allen, waitress in a drive-in barbecue, who has dreams of Hollywood screen stardom, he escapes a trap. Later, when he believes the girl to be in league with Sabin's mob, romance cools. However, as the gangsters plan a new job, she informs Cabot and again his stake-out methods prove effective.

The yarn appears to be full of the exciting brand of entertainment.

CODE OF THE WEST

Paramount

Probably the most outstanding showmanship factor of this picture is the fact that it brings Jackie Coogan back, now fully grown up. Millions of theatregoers will remember him for his picture with Charles Chaplin, "The Kid."

The story, an action drama localed in Alaska and the States, is by Zane Grey. It has a rather novel premise, dealing with three crooks who specialize in peddling "salted" gold mines. When they attempt to swindle a man with whom the woman member of the trio has fallen in love, things begin to happen at a fast and furious pace.

The screen play is by Ethel Doherty, who did "Sailor Be Good" and "Men Are Such Fools," and Grant Garrett. Direction is by Arthur Jacobson.

While Jackie Coogan is the big name value, another player, Evelyn Brent, who also has been absent from the screen for some time, will be seen. Last in "World Gone Mad," she has many successful picture appearances to her credit. Sharing top honors with these two is Randolph Scott, who has played in many Paramount westerns, including "To the Last Man," "The Last Round Up" and "The Thundering Herd." Other well known names are Addison Richards, Fuzzy Knight, Lou Sheridan, Richard Carle and Ralph Remley. Lesser known players are Dean Jagger, Howard Wilson, Phillip Morris, Albert Hard, Frances Sayles and Alfred Delcambre.

Elements substantiating Coogan's natural draw are the fact that the story is a Zane Grey adventure yarn, a type of entertainment that never lacked enthusiasts. Many incidents in the production suggests unique exploitation ideas which can be adapted to the current topical subject of gold.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Kid Millions

Comedy and Songs

(United Artists - Goldwyn)

From both an entertainment and sound showmanship standpoint, the producers have incorporated into this attraction just about everything that the public likes to see and all that an exhibitor needs. The picture is comedy, hokum-tanged and sparkling; it's embellished with plenty of eye-filling girl dance glamor, and lively with half a dozen or more catchy song numbers. Moving rapidly, it has plenty of romance, light drama, lots of action, snappy gags and, unusual for this type of picture, there is a substantial story. In the picture proper there is plenty to talk about. In the surprise finale, however, a color fantasy, there is a unique surprise to send patrons out of the theatre talking.

The picture is smart, clean and clever throughout. There is much to intrigue and charm, nothing to shock or abash. Consequently the attraction becomes a big picture offering with a general all-family appeal and by virtue of its climax a juvenile feature as well.

In the yarn, Eddie, a waterfront waif, to the amazement of all his kid companions and longshoremen brothers learn that he is heir to a $77,000,000 fortune left by his long lost father, Egyptologist. Promising the kids a share in the wealth when his ship comes in, he embarks on his great adventure to Egypt. Menaced by Colonel Larabee, who feels that because he financed the original Wilson, he's entitled to a cut, Eddie is thrown into turmoil when Dot, moll of comedy gangster Louie the Lug, also tries to chisel in by posing as his mother. On the way over, lots of knockabout fun, is interspersed with song, music and dance, Cantor incidentally putting over a black-face "Mandy" number.

In Cairo, Eddie meets a couple more menaces. Sheik Mulhulla isn't going to let all that dough get out of his domain, and his daughter, despite all her shrouding veils, is none the less versed in all the latest and most modern American modes of going on the make. Eddie escapes and lands back home.

Then the picture veers. It turns to beautifully tinted Technicolor. The kids have their day. All the rules to which they have been subject since the beginning of time being abrogated, Eddie builds a gigantic ice cream factory. Backed by the "When My Ship Comes In" melody as the hundreds of kid chants "We Want Ice Cream," the chorus girls milk gigantic cows who join in the vocal chorus; great slaps of chocolate and gigantic berries are tossed into the modernistic freezers. Then Eddie, accompanied by his childhood sweetheart, rides down the line of youngsters to drop great gobs of ice cream on their plates. Following him is the reformed Louie the Lug, machine-gunning cherries as the youngsters give loud voice to their delight.

No one need be stymied for salesmanship ideas with which to sell "Kid Millions." The title is one and so is the production itself. There is no lack of outstanding commercial names. Then, there's comedy that's fun for every one. Catchy music, rhythmic grouped dancing with plenty of that necessary feminine appeal. There's action and crackling dialogue and there's the finale.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The White Parade

(Fox-Lasky)

Drama

This picture is entertainment, but not the ordinary kind. Rather it is an attraction so finely human that its possibilities are hardly to be questioned.

Both daring and unusual, "The White Parade," with a few key characters doing the symbolizing, is the story of the great army of young women student nurses who consecrate themselves to the service of humanity. Essentially it is a drama—drama that is distinctively class in caliber, yet within the understanding and appreciation of all. Practically all action takes place within a hospital, yet never is the odor of ether evident. Life begins, ends and goes on.

To the hospital come hopeful, ambitious girls. Their lot is the same; stern discipline, laborious physical and mental toil. All sacrifice much; some drop out, others go on to triumph. Subject to every emotion that is every woman's, there is extraordinary romantic love interest in the stories of these women who are "The White Parade." Told mainly through the characters of June Arden and Ronald Hall, it is the story of human love sacrificed to a noble ideal.

Through understanding direction and real acting, drama is blended with heart touching romance; pathos that touches the most sentimental emotions is blended with sparkling comedy that provokes a laugh for every tear, and the whole tends emphatically to inspire and elevate.

As the picture unfolds upon the screen, it measures up to entertainment and commercial demand, not only in the unusual but in entertainment.

Because of its quality and character, "The White Parade" undoubtedly should attract many who ordinarily don't go to motion picture shows. Therein is hidden the secret of selling the picture. On the surface it might seem that "The White Parade" is a woman's picture. It surely is and because it is, it is also a picture of unusual interest to men. Both sexes appreciate what the story is—sincere heart-touching romance and drama of living persons.

Consequently what not to do assumes more importance in selling the show than what is proper to do. It can be expected that the picture will receive plenty of outside support and cooperation. Without much effort on anyone's part, it will be indorsed and recommended by newspapers, influential personalities, clubs and so on. It will be well to seek cooperation from doctors, nurses, hospitals, civic and fraternal groups, but it certainly is no occasion for harebrained exploitation. Transferring lobbies into replicas of hospital wards, displays of medical paraphernalia, even dressing ushers and attendants in hospital uniforms, would harm rather than help this attraction.

Rather in dignified and straightforward fashion introduce it to your patrons as a picture show you are proud to present. Let them know that it is an outstanding contribution to the screen. By honest sincerity convince them that this is an attraction to plumb the heart and that they will be sorry if they miss seeing it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Anne of Green Gables

(Radio)

Comedy-Drama

Potential showmanship values of this production are embodied in the popularity of the L. M. Montgomery novel, on which the film is based, and the general excellence of production. This one whistles right up the alley of Pollyanna customers, faithfully depicting the adventures of a little orphan girl adopted into a country family. The rural atmosphere is fresh and wholesome. Chalk this picture up as first class program entertainment. Exhibitors will also have a new screen personality to reckon with in Anne Shirley, who should be much in demand from here on.

Well etched characters make the rural atmosphere felt rather than seen. The story itself carries a series of strong emotional tugs balanced with plenty of up-the-sleeve humor.

It is the time honored "ugly duckling" theme with all the garnishings. This dramatic value should find a ready market.

The story revolves around Anne Shirley, who is adopted into the family of the middle aged brother and sister, O. P. Heggie and Helen Westley, through a slip-up on the part of orphanage officials. The couple had ordered a boy and received an awkward, red haired and freckled little girl. The emotional punch centers on whether this youngster, whose mind eternally carries her into worlds of fantastic Utopia, will take root in the heart of hard-boiled Miss Westley or not. She finally does. Then follows a series of kid scrapes brought on by hasty remonstrance against uncomplimentary country gossip by the neighbors. Childhood romance blooms between herself and Tom Brown, son of the man who stole Heggie's fiancee.

This family tragedy culminates in the enforced split-up of the two as they reach the dangerous age of maturity. Anne is sent away to school and Brown becomes the protege and assistant of a famous doctor.

The story is climaxed with the illness of Heggie. Anne drops her schooling just as the final examinations come up, to rush to his aid. In persuading the great doctor to handle Heggie, Anne is reunited with Brown. Heggie pulls through and the two receive the blessings of the family.

This is essentially family fodder and exploitation should be aimed in this direction.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Kentucky Kernels

(Radio)

Comedy

Sheer nonsense is this feature's big entertainment and commercial asset. From beginning to end, it majors in foolish fun in action, situations, dialogue and gags. Quite different from any of the preceding Wheeler-Woolsey attractions, it nevertheless permits the two funsters to indulge in all their typical laugh-provoking antics. Additionally, the supporting cast seems to have swung into the spirit of it. Sell it as the kind of picture that the run of the mill audiences go for.

As old fashioned hokum is the motivating medium, the quality of entertainment and showmanship possibilities can be gleaned from one of the opening sequences in which Willie and Elmer would revive a drowning man by giving him a drink of water, irrelevant though it is to what is to follow.

Anyway, in endeavoring to serve as good Samaritans, Elmer and Willie have on their hands a foundling, Spanky, with an uncontrollable penchant for glass breaking. Trying to return him to the orphan home, they learn that he is the sole heir to a Kentucky estate. Aboard train, they make friends with Gloria Wakefield, and in her home town they find the Wakefield-Milford feud going on in full blast. As Spanky Milford shatters all the glass within range, Willie and Elmer arrange a love feast that will reunite the warring clans. Here is featured the lilting "Teeny Little Kiss" number, the only one in the show. But something goes awry and hostilities flare.

The battle on, with the Wakefields storming the Milford mansion, hilarity reaches its height as the horse which is dragging the boys' wagon imbibes a pailful of Kentucky corn whisky. The ensuing runaway scene all over the mountain countryside is comedy thrill action plus. While this is going on, Spanky, back in the house, is putting every glass object up for the Wakefield to shoot at. The boys have a terrific time ducking the bullets. Willie tosses raspberries into a shotgun to be propelled by Buckshot's blow torch, while Spanky runs an endless chain of light bulbs through a wringer to produce a machine gun effect. Eventually the Milfords are rounded up by Gloria and Hanna and the whole thing winds up in a burst of romantic glee as it is discovered that Spanky is not a Milford after all. The boys start back to New York to leave the warring families to continue their shooting in peace.

This attraction is wide open for all kinds of nutty stunts, staging them with the idea of convincing patrons that the show is good, clean all-family fun, markedly different from what they have seen Wheeler and Woolsey in before.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Man of Aran

(Gaumont-British)

Drama

Somewhere off the western coast of Ireland, lying almost buried in what may well be called the toughest stretch of ocean on the globe, are the tiny Aran Islands. To those islands two years ago went Robert Flaherty, the man who made "Nanook of the North," "Moana" and "Tabu," there to record via the motion picture the struggle for the necessities of life carried on by the hardy and wholly admirable inhabitants.

The result should rank as an outstanding contribution to the screen, of this or any other year. It is not story that makes it so, for there is little of that, as such; nor is it performances, for the players are the natives of Aran. It is rather the manner in which a saga has been told, with few words but magnificent photography, with little elaboration, but with a fine sense of that combination of scenic and basic detail which goes to make up a complete story of a people, told in pictures in the short space of slightly more than one hour.

As far as the exhibitor is concerned, it is a picture with which he can go to all the women's clubs, all the schools and all the local organizations of like character. To them he may promise something unusual, a film which rates on a par with the "Nanook" of several years ago. The exhibitor also may make full use of the known ability and previous work of Mr. Flaherty, and can embellish his lobby with scenic stills.

There are just three persons of importance in the cast, "Tiger" King, the "man of Aran"; Maggie Dirrane, as his wife, and Michael Dillane, as their son. They are all three natives, as are the boatmen, the other players. In recording with vivid detail and often with thrilling action, the lives of these three, the producer has in essence recounted the story of the lives of all the people on the Aran Islands, where independence is the most vital consideration in their lives, while the sea dominates them all.

Highlighting the picture, in addition to the seascapes which the camera has recorded in superb fashion, are the scenes in which "Tiger" and his fellow fishermen go to sea in an open boat no larger than a dory, in mountainous seas, by day or night, and harpoon sharks. Of interest of another sort is the manner in which a small portion of the wholly rocky surface of the island is smoothed, overlaid with seaweed tortuously gathered, on which is strewn earth, accumulated little by little from the rocky crevices and carried on the back in baskets, for the potato "crop."

The utter fearlessness of the small boy and his mother, not to mention the men, in their eternal struggle against the thunderous and dominating sea, imparts to the picture a basic appeal. It is a picture to the selling of which the exhibitor can apply every type of cooperative effort. No matter what the box office may return, the showing of the film appears worth its own weight in prestige for the theatre and for the newspaper support it is certain to receive in most communities.—Aaronson, New York.

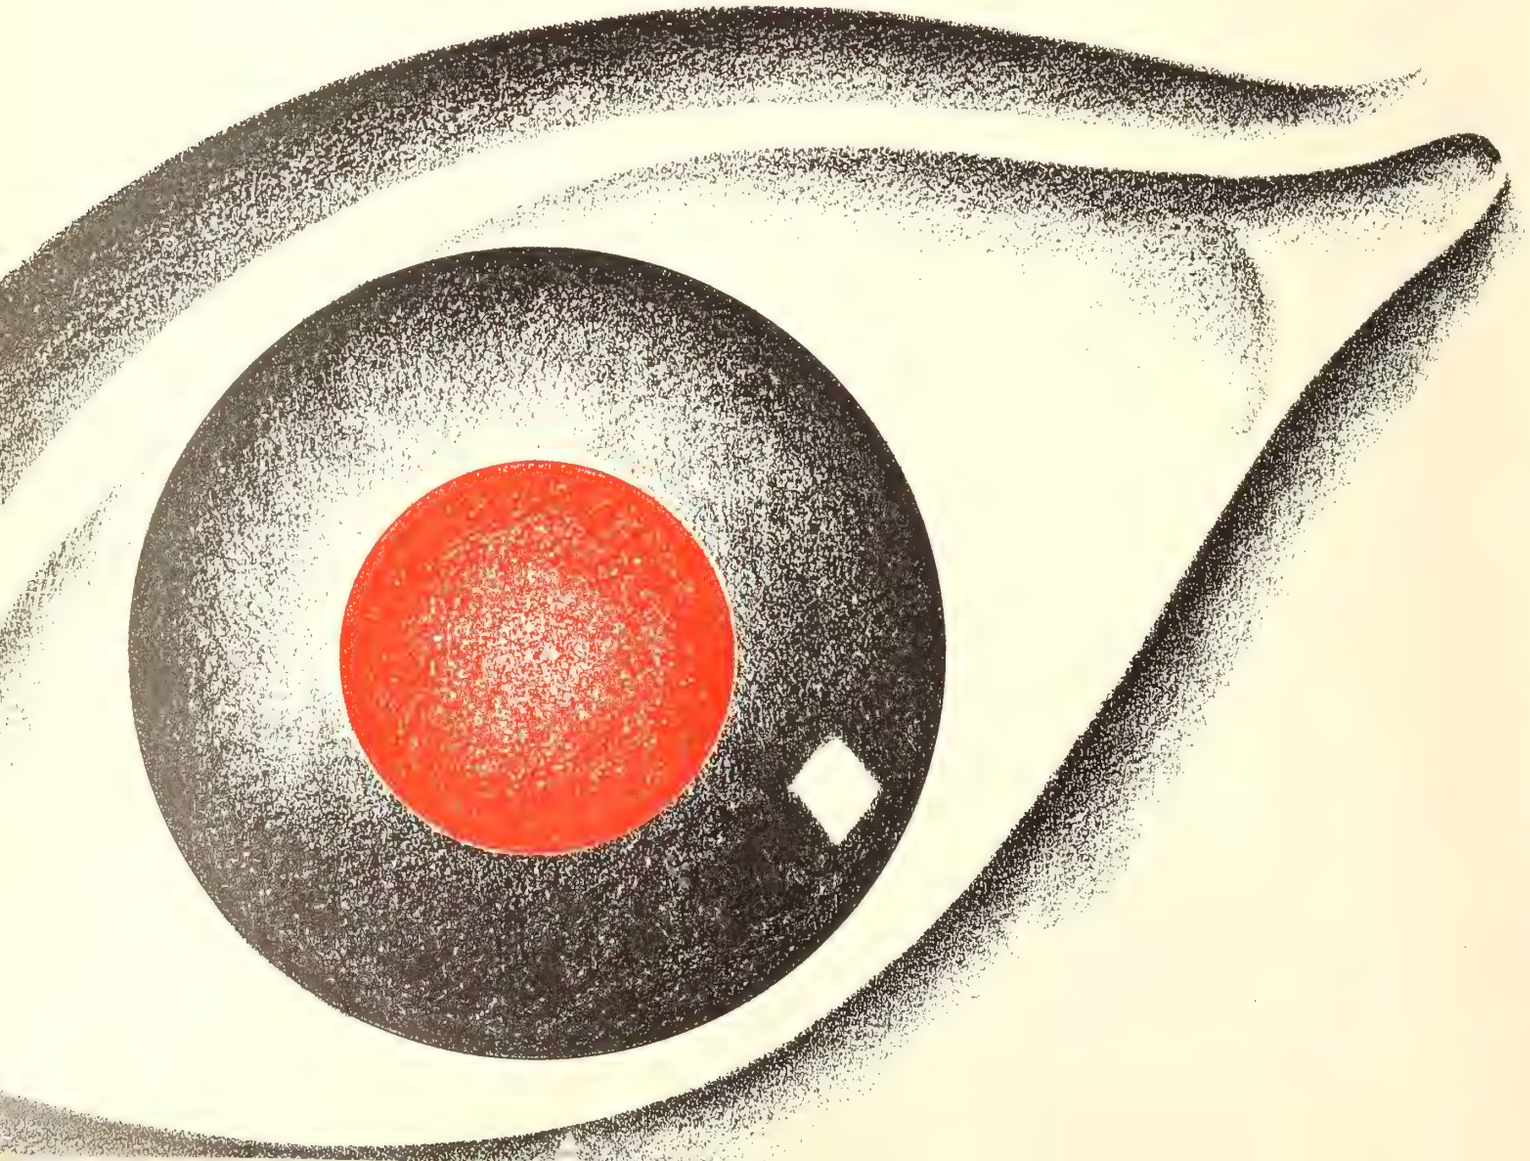
The Captain Hates the Sea

(Columbia)

Romantic Drama

In this, the "Grand Hotel" formula being utilized, and through a series of dramatic, mysterious, romantic and exciting episodes, the unusual log of a steamship sailing from San Francisco to New York is picturized. As such its entertainment is widely diversified. There is plenty that is different to hold interest. Through a crook-detective angle, unity and coherence are maintained. The short interview prologue, establishing the captain as a sea-hater because nothing ever happens, sets the stage for what is to happen.



Much happens beneath the captain's bridge, and reporter Steve spends most of his time before Silver's bar, changes his locale occasionally to listen to Greta's pathetic phonograph record plea, and sees it all. Detective Schulte knows that Danny has the stolen bonds and that his compatriot, Janet, is being passed off to him as a phoney Boston librarian. But he bides his time and eventually the bonds come to him. Mr. Bushmills' whiskers are used as a gag to elucidate the reason the captain is a captain. Steward Layton, harassed by the captain, revenges himself by placing the most uninteresting persons at his table. Mrs. Jeddock's unsavory past being revealed, she gets her punishment from her shamed husband and jumps into the sea, only to be rescued by Schulte. Salzaro, an aspiring South American presidential hero, is politely double crossed into death before a firing squad by his friend Gilboa.

The boat sails on. Schulte falls in love with Janet. The Healy stooges make merry with their orchestral clowning. Mrs. Magruder barges in to make life miserable for the captain and his dignified table guests. Schulte substitutes travel folders for the bonds. The boat docks. Schulte smiles and smirks. Mrs. Magruder "persuades" Danny into taking a trip to the marriage license bureau with her. Smart Janet finds the folders where the negotiable bonds should be. The Jeddocks are reconciled, with Mr. Jeddock occupying the meek and humble seat. Layton wonders what the next trip will bring forth. Steve runs into Greta, the girl he tried to run away from. On the bridge, the bored captain scowls and moans at a life that is so uninteresting.

As a change from pictures constructed along straight formula lines, "The Captain Hates the Sea" holds some unusual business creating possibilities. It can be ballyhooed and publicized in extraordinary ways. Using the gag of in-

The Deserter

(Garrison Film)

Drama

As is common with many of the pictures produced in Soviet Russian by the state-controlled motion picture industry, this has a strong flavor of propaganda for the Russian mode of worker functioning. For this reason, and the fact that the film contains the Russian dialogue, it is obviously for a restricted exhibition market in this country. The smaller, intimate type of houses, generally in the large metropolitan centers, which confine their programs for the most part to foreign films, appear to be the most likely places for the showing of this picture.

Despite the foreign language, there is no difficulty in understanding the thread of the story, since occasional English subtitle translations in English of dialogue serve to fill gaps which action alone would not ordinarily clarify. The cast, entirely native, is of course completely unknown in this country.

By implication the film tends to impress the fact that the current regime in Russia is the Mecca of the workers of the world, where they may be free from the pressure of the heavy boot of oppressive capitalism, happy in their work and their assemblies of workers for the state. It is, again in common with most of the importations from Russia, weightily dramatic, with the occasional laugh permitted to gain entrance into the continuity apparently only by accident, and seemingly out of place.

The picture obviously cannot be sold to the regular run of motion picture patronage over the country, nor would it find a ready acceptability in the average theatre, even on a special program of some sort.

The story is relatively simple. In a major city in Europe, supposedly in Germany, dock workers are engaged in a vital strike, Tseile being the leader of the strikers, Karl and Fritz, and the girl Greta being importantly involved in the strike. Much footage is devoted to the picketing of the docks by the strikers, with the indication of the oppression and hunger besetting the workers. Frequent clashes with the police feature these sequences, characterized completely by the apparently unprovoked attacks of the police upon the strikers, and the excessive brutality to which the strikers are subjected at the hands of the police. After a particularly brutal foray on the part of the law, several strikers are killed.

A meeting of the strikers is called and Karl, who shirked the battle and blood of the picket line, is named as one of a delegation selected to visit Russia at the invitation of that government. There the contrast is apparent, in the studiously prepared happiness exhibited by the Russian workers. Karl addresses the meeting, confesses his previous weakness, calls himself a deserter, but says he has at last seen the light. The picture concludes with Karl, back in his own country, proudly leading a band of marching strikers into the teeth of the advancing police, and carrying the red flag on high.—Aaronson, New York.

Elinor Norton

(Fox)

Dramatic Romance

Most pictures provide some angle upon which a bid for patron support may be legitimately based. This one, however, does not come within that category. There is no interest in the story. So much has it been altered that even those who have read Mary Roberts Rinehart's "The State Versus Elinor Norton," from which it was adapted, will recognize but few incidents. Yet whatever interest might have been engendered has been nullified by the quality of acting, direction and production.

The story is dramatic romance. It is that of a woman who sacrificed much that she might prove to her insanely jealous husband that his mad suspicions of her fidelity and affection were entirely groundless. Moving through an aura of sophisticated drawing room high society, blood and thunder World War sequences and a typical wild west anti-climax, it descends to that brand of entertainment that marked the early experimental stages of picture making.

There is nothing other than the exceptional acting of Hugh Williams that the exhibitor might emphasize.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Lost in the Stratosphere

(Monogram)

Comedy-Drama

Although the title would seem to indicate a maximum of action, thrills and suspense in the upper atmosphere, the actuality is far different. The portion of the film devoted to scientific delving into the upper reaches is confined to but a comparatively short sequence at the end of the picture, so that too much buildup of that phase might result in a disappointed audience, but it is of course a selling angle.

Utilization has been made of the films taken recently on the epoch-making flight into the stratosphere from North Dakota, and the result is effective, although the scenes are much too short to add greatly to the picture as a whole. The story is actually concerned for the most part with the feminine difficulties of two United States air force lieutenants.

The exhibitor will know best the marquee value of the leading names for his locality. William Cagney, brother of the energetic and active James Cagney, and Edward Nugent, play the two lieutenants in something of a Quirt-Flagg combination but considerably less effective, as two redoubtable comrades of the air force and friendly enemies in romance. Both lines and presentation of them were somewhat reminiscent of a high school theatrical. June Collyer is the chief feminine player, with Lona Andre among those present.

Heroes of air mail flights of the army air corps, Nugent and Cagney are restored to regular duty, spending most of their time pursuing girls and outdoing one another in that pursuit. Nugent becomes engaged and when Cagney accidentally meets the girl at the station, she, not knowing he is Nugent's friend, is attracted to him, and he to her. Nugent learns of the state of affairs, he and Cagney quarrel. Shortly after they are assigned to undertake a stratosphere flight. They start, establish a new altitude record, then, as they prepare to descend, they are caught in a storm. Nugent does the manly thing, heaving Cagney overboard to bail out safely, while he crashes in the balloon. Injured, he is able to sit up in his hospital bed, and give his blessing to his former fiancee and Cagney.—Aaronson, New York.

Have A Heart

(MGM)

Romantic Drama

Heavily laden with tear-jerking sentimentality, handily interspersed with laugh-provoking comedy sequences carefully spotted to prevent the film from becoming overloaded with pathos, this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer concoction may be considered run-of-the-mine material which is nonetheless pleasing entertainment.

The suddenly crippled girl who eventually finds happiness with the young man of her choice, although the way to that happiness is a series of trials and tribulations, is the time honored central theme. It obviously opens the way to appeal to the feminine portion of the patronage. The fact that the girl makes dolls to support herself, and that the other half of the romance combination is local salesman for an ice cream stick, vending his way through the streets with horse and wagon, offers an excellent exploitation opportunity of a tieup nature.

The cast is reasonably strong and may be used to good advantage on the marquee, the leading cast names being Jean Parker, James Dunn, Una Merkel and Stuart Erwin, the last two utilized for the comedy which, more often than not, is genuinely amusing. How strong as drawing material Miss Parker's name may be rests with the individual exhibitor, but she has a certain rather fragile appeal. The others are known, and in general, liked.

Miss Parker, a teacher of dancing, is engaged to Paul Page, who proves his caliber by welching on the marriage when Miss Parker, falling from a fire escape during a party at her apartment, is crippled, apparently permanently. Buoyed in spirits to a certain extent by the efforts of her devoted room-mate, Miss Merkel, Miss Parker, unable to dance, makes dolls for a livelihood. Erwin is Miss Merkel's generally unemployed, unintelligent and unquenchable fiance, whose get-rich-quick schemes are all equally well intentioned and impractical.

Miss Parker, from her window, becomes acquainted with Dunn, peddling his candy sticks and happiness to the children of the tenement neighborhood. On a date, which Miss Parker would refuse but to which Miss Merkel forces her, she wears overshoes to conceal her deformity, but when Dunn discovers the affliction, as expected, it makes no difference. When Dunn is arrested and charged with robbing the office of his company of several hundred dollars, Miss Parker, in order to save him, turns over the money she had been saving toward an operation. Dunn misunderstands the action, believes she thinks him guilty, and leaves.

Erwin succeeds in capturing the real criminal, Miss Parker's money is returned, and the operation successfully performed. It is not until Miss Merkel brings them together that the recovery is really completed.

There is no reason why the family should not see the picture, which may be played almost any time during the week.—AARONSON, New York.

The Man Who Changed His Name

(DuWorld)

Drama

There is, in this English-produced picture, an insufficient amount of the mystery generally expected in the mystery motion picture. This despite its origin, a story by the late, prolific Edgar Wallace. The fact that the story was produced on the New York stage last season, with fair success, may be of value in the selling.

It is rather a character drama than a mystery, with the latter element entering only with regard to the actual identity of a chief player in the drama. The film holds the attention well, and has an intriguing title of which the exhibitor may make much. What effect the pronounced English accent on the part of all the players might have on the reception accorded the film, the individual exhibitor is in the best position to know.

The cast is headed by Lyn Harding and Betty Stockfeld, who, in common with the rest of the players, will probably be unfamiliar to audiences in this country. The Edgar Wallace origin, in addition to the title, are perhaps the best selling elements.

In that the story primarily has to do with the manner in which a shrewd man utilizes a past situation to indicate in indirect but none the less emphatic fashion to his wife that the man with whom she has become infatuated is no good should prove interesting selling material.

In its earliest stage the film indicates that Miss Stockfeld, wife of stolid and slow-moving Harding, is carrying on an affair with Leslie Perrins. It also is indicated that Harding, apparently unaware of the situation, plans to lease a piece of Canadian land to Perrins for a long term of years, ostensibly for the timber.

At the Harding country home when Perrins arrives to get the lease are Miss Stockfeld and Ben Weldon, as Harding's Canadian attorney. Perrins happens to know that the land he is leasing almost as a gift from Harding, as a result of his wife's supposed old friendship for Perrins, is studded with silver. As negotiations are carried on, with Harding stalling on the lease, and his wife and Perrins meeting in clandestine fashion, a visitor from the neighborhood, an elderly writer, regales them with bits from his forthcoming book on notorious criminals.

Miss Stockfeld finds in her husband's desk a legal document indicating that her husband changed his name years before in Canada, and it develops that a Canadian criminal, who had murdered his philandering wife and her sweetheart, bore the same name as Harding's original. From that moment Perrins and Miss Stockfeld are haunted by fear of impending disaster, and Perrins clearly indicates the type of man he is. Eventually it is indicated that it is all a scheme on the part of Harding to indicate just that to his wife.—AARONSON, New York.

Trytel. Dialogue by Edgar Wallace and H. Fowler Mear. Running time, 65 minutes. Release date undetermined.

The Spice of Life

(Columbia)

Laughs

In what is virtually a reincarnation of the original "Topics of the Day," and produced by Mentone Productions with the cooperation of The Literary Digest, for Columbia release, there are laughs, it would seem, for any audience. The title of the series, of which this is the first, is that of the humorous department of the magazine, whose wide circulation makes this a salable series, in addition to the fact that the oldsters will well remember the "Topics of the Day." Dr. Rockwell, comedian, chattingly introduces the jokes, effectively screened, and diversified in character.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Just a Clown

Fair Cartoon

A fairly entertaining animated cartoon number rating above average, in which the little circus clown is spurned by the show's star bareback rider, until she is captured by the lion and the clown comes to the rescue of the animated maiden in distress.—Running time, 6 minutes.

What's In a Name

(Master Art Products)

Entertaining

In this number of the Organlogues series, that instrument, with the aid of a fairly effective masculine quartette, is used to review those popular melodies of yesterday and today which have as the central theme of the lyric a feminine name. The subject is melodious and rather entertaining.—Running time, eight minutes.

Daredevil O'Dare

(Vitaphone)

Some Laughs

Ben Blue, comedian of the spindly figure, over-large footgear and expressionless face, contrives to offer a few laughable moments in this comedy, wherein, as Daredevil O'Dare, the one-man circus, he obtains a job in a down-and-out show and gets along famously until the villain of the piece switches handcuffs on him and he cannot free himself in the anticipated 20 seconds. Shemp Howard, in support, is entertaining on his own account. Applied dynamite ends Blue's circus career and the subject.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Aladdin and His Lamp

(Celebrity)

Entertaining

One of the ComiColor cartoon series, this, in elaborate color, tells something of the ancient story of the boy Aladdin and the magic lamp whose secret he discovered quite by accident. When the genii appears, Aladdin has all sorts of wishes fulfilled, including entrance to the palace and romance with the sultan's daughter, with the incidental outwitting of his lamp-buying employer who sought to gain possession of the magic implement. The youngsters, especially, should find the subject entertaining.—Running time, seven minutes.

Scrappy's Experiment

(Columbia)

Amusing

Scrappy, small hero of this animated cartoon, is the subject of the experimentation of a "scientist," who by injections, transforms his victim into a fish, an old man and other unbecoming guises, until Scrappy awakens from his troublesome nightmare. The subject is amusing and entertaining in the fashion of the average cartoon.—Running time, eight minutes.

In the Arena

(Gaumont-British)

Unusual

There is material of unusual interest in this subject, which pictures a strange sport in far-off India, a sport in which man is the spectator, animals the contestants. Initially is seen the manner in which a native, by virtue of a long harsh cry and a basket of grain, calls to his feet hundreds of wild pigs, fast and ferocious creatures. Then in the arena, two huge elephants, separated by a giant log, thrust at each other with all their strength in a pushing contest, and lastly, in a deep, small pit are cornered a newly captured tiger and a wild pig. The resulting battle is exciting, and interesting.—Running time, 12 minutes.

Veiled Dancer of Eloued

(DuWorld)

Weak

Tom Terris, who calls himself the Vagabond Adventurer, is something less than effective in this subject of the series entertainingly titled "Quest of the Perfect Woman." Somewhere in the Near East, Terris and his companion come upon a native dancing girl, follow her when her dance is finished, and are nearly mobbed by a group of natives when they attempt to learn the girl's identity.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Good Golfers Start Young

(Columbia)

Of Interest

The golf "bugs," and they are legion in the country, should find this subject especially appealing, as it depicts the fine points of form in the execution of the game. Seen among the notable players are Maureen Olcott, the feminine star; Johnnie Hines, Johnny Farrell and several others. Of particular interest is the unusual skill of a small boy, Eddie Rule, Jr. An interesting subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Yokel Dog Makes Good

(DuWorld)

Ineffective

One of those subjects featuring a small dog, who leaves her small town home to crash Hollywood and the motion pictures, reaches success, "marries," and loses her popularity, this subject comes close to warranting the indictment of cruelty to animals, since its chief player seems to be hard put to it from time to time in maintaining her poise and performance. An off-screen voice tells the yarn.—Running time, 18 minutes.

It's the Cats

(Columbia)

Amusing

One of the Broadway Comedies series, this features the often amusing Andy Clyde in a comedy which has its entertaining moments and some laughs. Ordered by his employer to take his place as speaker at a dinner given by a women's group interested in a home for homeless cats, Andy walks into the wrong banquet room, from which he is forcibly ejected. The same thing happens when he finds the right place, since he cannot establish his identity. Clyde provides amusement.—Running time, 19 minutes.

RECEIPTS GOING UP AT LONDON HOUSES

Walking Off the Set Is a Popular Pastime; Non-Inflammable Film Regulations to Stop Reds

Box offices are reflecting bigger and better business in London's West End.

"Jew Suss" started off on capacity lines and in a week registered 25,000 patrons, exceeding Tivoli records. Prince George and Queen Marie of Rumania were in the center of the Circle and much of London society seated about them.

Herbert Wilcox's "Nell Gwyn" at the Leicester Square not unassisted by news of its "banning" in New York, has also been pulling them in and establishing new house records. Said banning seems to be a matter of cutting a few feet or so, after all.

The best London run of the moment still was "Blossom Time" at the Regal. In its seventh week, this Tauber feature had left far behind every house record but that of "The Singing Fool."

Walk-Out Season Opens

Either there's something in the London air that makes Hollywood directors sensitive, or something about Hollywood directors that makes London producers come over all apoplectic.

Not so long ago, Rowland Brown walked out of the "London" set and his engagement to direct "The Scarlet Pimpernel." The reason given, by Mr. Brown, was that Alexander Korda wanted to supervise too much.

Now Al. Santell has left "The Dictator," after directing the first scenes at Ealing. The reason given, by the company, concerned "the supervisory policy of Toeplitz Productions not being consistent with Mr. Santell's methods."

Producers like Korda and Toeplitz are scarce; so are directors like Brown and Santell, even though, as in these cases, it has been possible to replace them with other front rankers. Charles Farrell walked out of the "Abdul Hamid" cast at Elstree, as well.

A deputation of exhibitors was duly received by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade and put its case for a revision of the Films Act to meet the problem of "quickie." The result was a special report to be made to the President, and a general sort of feeling that something may be done.

The deputation, fully representative of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, suggested abolition.

Politics in "Non-Flam" Control

New regulations under the Cinematograph Act, drawn up by the Home Office, are expected to bring non-inflammable film under substantially the same control, as regards public performances, as now applies to standard celluloid film.

Some rather important consequences will follow. The nominal reason for the move is public safety; the actual reason is the Government's desire to regulate—and if need be to suppress—the exhibition of communist propaganda films, chiefly of Russia origin, which are widely circulated in "non-flam" form, to workmen's clubs and other institutions.

While the regulation step will be welcomed by cinema owners, who have found the competition of sub-standard versions of popular entertainment films troublesome, the prospect is not so pleasing to those engaged in educational or advertising activities by means of films.

The Government is not worrying about advertising or teaching films. Once it has obtained the right to veto the propaganda material, it will interfere as little as possible with other non-commercial exhibitions. The danger is that, if it puts "non-flam" on all fours with standard film, it may give local authorities a legal right to interfere with perfectly innocent as well as with politically "dangerous" displays of sub-standard subjects.

A. B. C. Issue Succeeds

The offer of £2,500,000 first mortgage debenture stock by the Maxwell Company, Associated British Picture Corporation, appeared successful.

While possibly the merger stories, now exploded, helped this issue, it was likely to go well in any case, as the amount offered was covered by assets of just under £5,300,000 and the interest rate, 5 per cent, is high, even with the issue at 101.

This flotation extinguishes outstanding bank loans and mortgages and gives A. B. C. £274,658 new capital for expansion.

Total A. B. C. capital is now £5,433,557 of which £1,550,000 is in ordinary 5/- (dollar) shares, £1,383,557 in 6% first cumulative preference £1 shares, and £2,500,000 in the 5% loan capital just issued.

Recent consolidating moves have transferred to A. B. C. many theatre properties previously held by subsidiaries. The assets listed in the prospectus included 172 theatres as well as the share holdings in B. I. P. Wardour Films, Pathe Pictures and British Instructional Films, which represent A. B. C.'s interests on the distributing side.

Production Notes

Columbia's next British picture, "The Feathered Serpent," from an Edgar Wallace story, has started at the Nettlefold Studios, A. George Smith producing and P. Maclean Rogers directing. Enid Stamp-Taylor leads.

Albert Parker is to direct "Six Dead Men" from the story by Stanilas Steeman, as a Fox British film.

Michael Powell, at Twickenham, has finished "Lazybones" with Claire Luce, Ian Hunter and Miles Malleson.

Thornton Freeland has finished a big comedy sequence for "Brewster's Millions" (British and Dominions) with Jack Buchanan playing the hind-legs of a dragon.

Lupe Velez has started work in "The Morals of Marcus," adaptation of the W. Locke novel, directed by Miles Mander, at the Twickenham Studios. Ian Hunter is opposite and Noel Madison has the next role.

"Widow's Might" is well into production at Teddington with Laura La Plante, Yvonne Arnaud, Barry Clifton and Esmond Knight. Irving Asher is making this picture for Warner-First National with the definite aim of crashing the American schedule.

Nils Asther, Adrienne Ames, John Loder and Fritz Kortner are the big names in "Abdul Hamid's" completed cast. Karl Grune is directing for B.I.P.

B.I.P. has finished "Radio Parade," which looks like turning into a pretty hot skit on the official British Broadcasting Corporation. Will Hay's next is "Dandy Dick" from the Pinero play. William Beaudine is directing.

Furber Fights for Trans-Lux Control

Percy N. Furber, president of Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation, New York, has addressed a bulletin to stockholders, calling attention to a circular, received by stockholders, from "a socalled 'reorganization committee,'" which, according to the bulletin, was designed to forestall calling of a stockholders' annual meeting in the ordinary manner.

The bulletin directs attention to the fact that "no member of this socalled 'reorganization committee' is a stockholder of record of your company, and we believe all are either directly or indirectly employed by or associated with Archie M. Andrews."

The bulletin contends Mr. Andrews, who was eliminated as a director of the company in 1932, is attempting to gain control of the company by virtue of a substitute merger agreement between Trans-Lux and News Projection Corporation, and which would be detrimental to the best interests of the Trans-Lux company and stockholders. The bulletin further declares that the circular referred to is accompanied by a power of attorney and proxy, unlimited in time, which, when signed by the stockholder, strengthens the hand of the interests looking to gain control of the company, by giving the "reorganization committee" uncontrolled authority over the shares of the stockholder. Mr. Andrews and his family, it is indicated, own about one-quarter of the outstanding stock of the company.

Trans-Lux this week opened another in its circuit of theatres, in Brooklyn, New York. The house has a seating capacity of 500.

Boy Scout Serial Wins Endorsement

The serial in 12 chapters, "Young Eagles." a First Division release, which concerns and features members of the national Boy Scout organization, has received unusual public support in its exhibition in Tennessee and Kentucky, centering in the local release by the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of which Lee L. Goldberg is secretary, in Louisville.

Writing from Danville, Ky., the president of Centre College, Charles J. Turck, addressing local manager John La Due, expressed the hope that the serial would be shown in that town. Working closely in cooperation with both Boy Scout executives locally and the important Better Films Council of Louisville, Mr. Goldberg has caused Scout executives to communicate with Scout leaders urging their attendance and that of the Boy Scouts under their command. Frederick Archer, superintendent of the Louisville board of education, has authorized the hanging of posters exploiting the serial in the classrooms of the local schools. Eight theatres at least are showing the serial on successive Saturday matinees, under auspices of the community Scout troop and the Parent-Teachers Association. The film has been endorsed by the National Council of Boy Scouts, a rare occurrence.

STUDIO CLUB MOVEMENT GROWS
NO GENIUSES, DECLARES LE ROY
16 WRITERS NOW PRODUCING
EIGHT FILMS START, SIX DONE

Linkup of employees and employer in studio circles is being extended to the social realm by the operation of studio clubs.

Studios operating their own clubs are Paramount, Warner and Universal, while Fox and Columbia are now organizing. Fox has appointed a committee to work out preliminary arrangements, while Columbia has reached the stage of actual enrolment, having held a mass meeting at which more than 200 employees signed the charter role. It eventually will be operated on lines as the other clubs now functioning, in so far as group insurance and sick relief is concerned, but for the present it is purely social.

850 in Universal City Club

The Universal City Club, first to organize, is perhaps the most active, with 850 members. It was started in 1921 and as it grew they built their own club house, a huge hunting lodge on the studio lot. The workers contributed their labor gratis and from the club treasury were purchased the necessary materials. It was presented to the studio, the only reservation being that it be their headquarters as long as the club exists.

The club, with Harry Zehner chairman of the board of governors, goes in for various forms of sport, also social welfare work, including insurance and compensation for any members disabled or in need.

Warner Club Includes 2,400

The Warner Club, international in scope and in existence for several years in the East, did not include the studio workers until last April. However, since that time the studio branch, including theatre employees, has grown to a roster of 2,400. The club affords benefits of compensation: $15 per week for 15 weeks during disability, $350 upon death, $50 upon marriage and a similar amount for each birth. In the event a member wants to take up an educational course at night, the club lends the money for tuition, while other employee emergencies are taken care of in the same manner at a nominal rate of interest. A small fee of 25 cents a month keeps each member in good standing, this in turn used by the club for the cost of entertainment.

The club this fall is planning to stage a huge benefit for a clubhouse on the studio lot.

The Paramount Club is more of a social organization than the others, though group insurance is available for death, sickness and disability. It has 450 active members. For social functions, such as periodical dances and picnics, the entire studio is invited at a nominal admission charge.

MGM and United Artists are not contemplating studio clubs at present, but once a year each stages a picnic for all employees. —BILL SWIGART.

Television Ready, Says Goldwyn

With most producers wondering whether the new trend of color films will revolutionize the industry as did sound, Samuel Goldwyn says he isn't worrying, because color isn't that important. This provokes surprise inasmuch as Mr. Goldwyn spent over $200,000 on a single color sequence in Eddie Cantor's "Kid Millions."

"I believe in color for specialized use," he says. "I have always regarded it as a special decorative device. I do not think it ever will supplant the black and white films entirely."

Hollywood producers have decided that only four tri-color films will be put on the market this year, in order that the exhibition field will not be flooded as it was when color first was introduced.

Mr. Goldwyn says the next big thing in screen development will be television. "I believe it is nearer to perfection, as an artistic and commercial proposition than color films," he declared. "Television is ready when the people who have it want to put it on the market. It will not throw the present film business into a shamble, as many suppose."

No Geniuses, Says LeRoy

"There are no geniuses in Hollywood," so spake Mervyn LeRoy, referring to directors—himself included.

With big black cigar poking humorously out of boyish features, diminutive Mr. LeRoy is convincing while his eyes sparkle with the merriment of a "gag man," which he was at one time.

" 'Box-Office Champions' are not made by the director alone," LeRoy said. His eyes skipped nervously to all portions of the set, checking to see that all is well with "Sweet Adeline," his current Warner film. His fingers drummed a persuasive staccato on the listener's knee.

"There can be no geniuses as far as directors are concerned, because it's impossible to make pictures out of nothing," he explains. "The story is the first consideration, and it has to be right." He added that a great story is much more difficult to bring to the screen than a fair story.

"Every picture I direct is my first. I follow the film right on through from the scenario department to the cutting room."

LeRoy contended that the major companies are making too many pictures, that instead of budgeting programs to 40 films a year, production should be limited to seven or eight, then the "hit and miss system" would disappear.

"Double bills must go, sooner or later," was his answer, "and a cut in annual product would be one sure way of wiping them out entirely."

Lasky's Own Parade

Showmen whose memories go back to pioneer days of Jesse Lasky's silent gems of photographic beauty, when the quality of Lasky lighting gave value to Paramount pictures, are now renewing faith with him after seeing his latest work, "The White Parade," which glorifies the American nurse.

Critical x-ray of the preview boys and girls reveals a conviction that Mr. Lasky is staging a comeback not only in artistry but with a box-office smash in his hands.

"The White Parade" may also serve to elevate Loretta Young to stardom, with Irving Cumming included in the select circle of best directors and mark Jesse Lasky's return, bearing the fatted calf with him.

16 Writers Now Producing

Sixteen of Hollywood's ace writers are now listed with the better known producers.

Warner studio leads in picking writers from the scenario department and promoting them to production jobs. Five thus honored in two years are Robert Presnell, Edward Chodorov, Lou Edelman, Robert Lord and James Seymour.

Paramount reports three promotions: Benjamin Glazer, Louis Lighton and Bayard Veiller. William Le Baron also started as a writer.

At MGM Lucien Hubbard and Hunt Stromberg were both scripters. Universal recently handed out producer contracts to Rian James and William Anthony McGuire. Columbia has Jules White, recently made head of the short subject department, and Everett Riskin. At Fox, Martinez Sierra holds a writer-producer contract on Spanish productions, in effect on his next picture.

Eight Films Start, Six Finished

Eight new pictures were started in the past week. Columbia is credited with two. Six others, one apiece, were started at Universal, Chesterfield, Majestic, Monogram, Radio and Warner. Of six completed, four were checked in at Radio, and Hal Roach and Columbia were responsible for one each.

First of the newly started Columbia activities was "Mills of the Gods," the cast headed by May Robson, Fay Wray, Victor Jory and Raymond Walburn. The second, "Quicksands," stars Tim McCoy, with Jacqueline Wells, Steve Clarke, Charles Middleton, John Darrow and J. Farrell MacDonald in support.

At Universal, "Strange Wives" went into work. Roger Pryor, June Clayworth, Esther Ralston, Ralph Forbes, Valerie Hobson and Ivan Lebedeff are the principals. Radio's new feature is "Enchanted April," in which Ann Harding, Frank Morgan, Katherine Alexander, Reginald Owen, Jane Baxter and Eric Blore will be seen. "Black Hell," starring Paul Muni and Karen Morley, began at Warner. Among the supporting cast are William Gargan, Sarah Haden and Harry Tyler.

Chesterfield started shooting on "The World Accuses," with Russell Hopton, Vivian Tobin, Dickie Moore, Cora Sue Collins, Harold Herbert, Barbara Bedford and Mary Carr. "The Perfect Clue," in which David Manners, "Skeets" Gallagher, Dorothy Libarie, Ralf Harolde and Betty Blythe appear is a Majestic feature. Last of the new activities is Monogram's "Mysterious Mr. Wong." The cast is headed by Sela Lugosi, Arline Judge, Wallace Ford and Robert Emmett O'Connor.

With four, Radio dominates the list of completed pictures. "West of the Pecos" features Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper, Pat West, Louis Mason, Samuel Hinds, Maurice Black and Maria Alba. Also finished is the tentatively titled "Portrait of Laura Bayles," starring May Robson, the cast including Hale Hamilton, Mary Carlisle, Fred MacMurray, Alan Hale and Etienne Girardot. "Romance in Manhattan" teams Francis Lederer and Ginger Rogers, with Helen Ware, J. Francis MacDonald and Lillian Harman in support.

At Roach Studio the Victor Herbert musical fantasy, "Babes in Toyland," was completed. The cast features Laurel and Hardy, Felix Knight, Florence Roberts, Ferdinand Munier, Johnny Downs and Jean Darling.

Columbia's completed feature, "Burnt Ranch," is a Tim McCoy with Marion Shilling, Robert Allen and Oscar Apfel in the supporting cast.

HITS CRUSADING SPIRIT RUN WILD

"Cheap balderdash, typical of the exaggeration, the intolerance and unfairness of the misdirected crusading spirit run wild." Thus did William G. Stiegler, dramatic editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, react to the statement by Mrs. Robbins Gilman, president of the National Motion Picture Council, before the Ohio Congress of Parents and Teachers at a Columbus convention, [Story appeared in Motion Picture Herald issue of Oct. 20] that "the movies have been exploiting our children long enough."

Mr. Stiegler continued: "It is time to pin the sponsors of some of these wholesale accusations down to specific instances. . . . We should like to add that neither the producer nor the exhibitor is responsible if films made and plainly intended for intelligent adult audiences are attended by children whose parents are utterly indifferent to their entertainment. When the producers make fine films . . . for the kind of children Mrs. Gilman is championing, they suffer heavy losses because children fail to attend."

Academy Code for Assistant Directors Effective on Coast

Now in effect, following all necessary ratifications, is a code of ethics governing the relations between producers and first assistant directors of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast. The code is applicable to the employment of first assistant directors of feature length pictures produced by Columbia, Fox, MGM, Paramount, Radio, Universal, Warner, signatories.

It is recommended in the code that producers employ the assistants under term contracts for a period of six months or longer; assistants employed on a free lance basis for one picture only are to receive a bonus of one week's pay upon the completion of the assignment. The producers recognize that the work of the assistants is a definite function and there shall be one position on each feature which shall be governed by the provisions of the code. Producers also agree to furnish a notation of the pictures to the credit of each assistant for publication by the Academy.

The code was formulated as the result of a series of meetings between a committee representing producers and another representing the assistant directors' section of the Academy. The assistant directors' committee included Scott R. Beal, chairman; Sid Brod, Gordon Hollingshead, Lester R. Selander, Charles Stallings. The producers' committee was composed of Louis B. Mayer, chairman; Samuel J. Briskin, Fred Pelton, J. J. Gain, William Koenig.

Mrs. Gilman Asks Boycott on Films

A national boycott of motion pictures by women's organizations to obtain "cleaner" films, strict government control of the industry and socialization of all children's recreation, was advocated at a conference in Boston last week of the National Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations, the Twentieth Century Club and the Massachusetts Civic League.

Mrs. Robbins Gilman of Minneapolis, permanent chairman of the Parent-Teacher Congress, was chief advocate of the boycott.

In the addresses there was a sharp exchange of ideas between Mrs. Gilman and Dr. Helen I. D. McGillicuddy, chairman of the Catholic Order of Foresters for Massachusetts. Dr. McGillicuddy expressed the belief that the motion picture industry is not wholly to blame "because they are merely trying to provide the kind of entertainment which people demand and which box office figures show as profitable."

Adolph P. J. Bendslev, an exhibitor from Wellesley, Mass., asserted that any claim that block booking had been eliminated "is a lot of applesauce." He said:

"I made a special trip to the office of Will Hays in New York to try to get a selective contract with a certain producer giving me the right to pick the pictures I wanted to show in my theatre. All I got was a lot of applesauce and a runaround."

Mrs. Gilman charged Mr. Hays with bad faith, declaring he had promised last summer to clean up the industry but had failed to do so.

In Atlantic City, the House of Bishops at the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States voted concurrence in resolutions already adopted by the House of Deputies, urging federal control of the industry, organization of a church Legion of Decency in every diocese, continued boycott of indecent pictures and an appeal to President Roosevelt for direct aid in accomplishing these aims.

In her biennial report to the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Mrs. James F. Looram, head of the motion picture bureau, said there has been a definite improvement in films since inauguration of the Production Code Administration.

In Detroit this week Mrs. Gilman decried the historical inaccuracy of films.

Court Orders Sunday Closing in Seattle

The superior court in Seattle last week issued a writ of mandamus requiring the closing of all theatres in Seattle and King County as well as all other forms of amusement, on Sunday. The writ also includes all drug stores and grocery stores.

No attempt was made by local officials last weekend to enforce the ruling but all who were open were directed to appear in court to show cause why the Sunday closing law should not become effective immediately. The suit appears to be an attempt to make the old Sunday closing law so universally unpopular that repeal as well as the sale of beer on Sunday will be easily accomplished. Local theatres are organizing to contest the court order.

AIR-CONDITIONING FOR THEATRES

Now another nationally-advertised name can take its place on your theatre's marquee: Air-Conditioned by Chrysler.

The genius that developed not one, but four great lines of cars and advanced them from 7th place in output in 1924 to 2nd place in world output in 1933, will now effect a revolution in the virtually new industry of air-conditioning.

The Chrysler-made equipment in this field will possess the quality and excellence of this mighty manufacturer's automotive output.

A special organization has been formed to bring the air-conditioning systems produced by Chrysler and marketed by Airtemp Incorporated into the theatres of the nation. Turn for the Announcement—

This

ORGANIZATION WILL SELL IT

Control Corporation of America has been organized to sell, install and maintain the Chrysler-made air-conditioning system in the theatres of the United States. It has been organized and is headed by F. B. Warren, who for twenty years has been known to almost everyone in the field of theatre ownership and management.

Installations will begin in December in a group of the country's outstanding theatres. Between January and May 1, 300 installations will be available. One-half of these have been allotted to those states where summer is at hand by May. Each installation is a tailor-made job designed to meet the requirements of your theatre.

A national sales-engineering staff has been assembled to solve your specific problems. Price quotations of most attractive character will be made after a survey from the New York head office of Mr. Warren's organization.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

QUESTION NO. 245.—(A) Is there any real objection to location of a motor-generator in a room immediately adjacent to the projection room? (B) Name such objections as there may be against location of a motor-generator in the main projection room. (C) Should frame of a motor-generator set be grounded? If so, how and why? (D) What do you consider the best method of eliminating noise and vibration in installing a motor-generator set? (E) Is it important that a horizontal type motor-generator set be perfectly level endwise?

Answer to Question No. 239

Bluebook School Question No. 239 was: (A) How would you calculate the E.F. of a projection lens to project a given picture width at a given distance? (B) How would you proceed to determine whether or not your projection lens permits the entire light beam to enter? (C) Name the effects if it does not all enter. (D) Suppose the light beam does not all enter the lens, what, if anything, could be done to remedy the condition?

The satisfactory answers were selected from a total of 953. All the rest failed partly or wholly on one or more points. For example, I counted 347 who answered Section A merely by saying there would be loss of light. One said (I quote word for word), "The light does all get in, for the aperture is always smaller than the lens diameter. The light we see outside the lens is all light reflected from edges of the white spots in the film." Zowie! Those answering correctly were:

S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; C. Oldham; J. Arnston; D. Ferguson; A. F. Sprafke; J. Wentworth; C. E. Wainscott; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; S. Carberry; L. F. Evans; I. D. Atkerly and O. Thum; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; R. F. Hall; D. C. Coates; C. Conforti and C. F. Davis; T. H. and J. N. Williams; P. Jackson and B. Diglah; H. C. Lake; H. D. Schofield; D. R. Sackley, J. B. Langdon, P. Lee, T. L. Kenney and A. L. Hickey; G. N. Bagley and L. D. Richardson; O. L. Daris and M. Simms; T. L. Edwards; J. M. Dillon; W. and S. F. Love; P. and L. Felt; G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; T. L. Turk and O. Davis: F. H. and L. Klar; M. and J. Devoy; H. Pitchkey; H. T. Farleigh and T. Patterson; G. Wayne and T. Stellegos; R. Ryker and D. H. Samuels; N. Williams and R. S. Allen; D. O. Dorfel and L. M. Hartman; F. J. Felton, L. F. Erwin and K. Erwin; R. S. Conrad and L. Biello; B. T. Caldwell; W. Wheeler and R. Suler; J. Hawkins and C. Hawkens; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti: T. Kelley and C. Cummings; E. F. Griffin and C. Abrams; B. L. Sarno and H. B. Roth; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; R. H. Patterson and L. H. Danville: D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; B. L. Stephens; O. Allbright; S. Peterson and D. R. Bainbridge; D. U. Granger; L. Thomas and N. N. Boyd; D. N. Anderson and H. May; M. C. Mellinger; D. R. Peters and D. Holler; T. E. Mantol and H. Hughes.

(A) We will listen to G. E. Doe on this one. He says, "Almost invariably there is a projection angle, in which case the width obtained will apply only to the vertical center of the screen image. Above the center the width will be less, and below it greater than at the center. The rule is (using present standard aperture width of 0.825 of an inch):

(B) H. Edwards says, "The thing may be done in several ways. The easiest method of forming close judgment is to focus a picture on the screen, remove film, open mechanism casing door and hold a sheet of white paper up against the rear of the lens. Looking on the lens side of the paper, one can see whether or not the beam is overlapping the outside of the barrel, and by blowing smoke into the beam one may judge whether or not the whole of the beam gets into the lens. This latter may possibly not be judged exactly if the beam and free lens opening be nearly alike, but it will be pretty close."

Brother Danielson sets forth what I regard as a better way. He says:

"On a sheet of non-glossy black paper, which may be secured from any photographer without charge, draw a circle with a pointed white crayon, exactly the diameter of the free opening of the rear projection lens element. Hold this against the rear end of the lens."

(I would suggest a piece of dark-colored sheet metal instead of paper. Pretty hot there.—F. H. R.)

"Another method is to draw a straight line as long as the distance from mirror or converging lens to face of rear element of projection lens. At the left end of this line make two dots spaced equidistant from the line and as far apart as the diameter of the light converging element. At the exact position occupied by the aperture (distance from lens) make two dots .825 of an inch apart, also spaced equidistant from the line.

"Now draw a straight line from the left-hand upper dot through the lower aperture dot, and another from the left-hand lower dot to and through the upper aperture dot. Next measure between these lines at the right-hand end of the line and compare with the lens diameter. The idea is illustrated in Figures 50 and 51, pages 186 and 187, volume 1 of the Bluebook."

(C) Friend Arnston says, "If the light beam does not all enter the lens the screen image will not be evenly illuminated; also, there will be loss of light. The first named fault will have much the greater evil effect."

G. E. Doe says, "There will of course be loss of light proportional to the amount of the beam not entering. That this may amount to considerable is made plain by a study of Figures 52, 53 and 54 of the Bluebook, especially Figure 52, in which is shown that while the light intensity at the center of the lens is high, it also amounts to a lot at the outer zones when their aggregate area is considered.

"There also will be added uneveness of screen illumination. I say added for the reason that under no condition found in present day projection is screen illumination even. This to some extent detracts from depth of focus, I believe, though as to that I am not altogether certain."

(D) M. and J. Devoy say, "In this matter 'all that glitters may not be gold.' In theory the beam might be narrowed at the lens plane by pulling the collector-converger (mirror or condenser) farther back from the aperture, but this immediately involves lengthening the distance from light source to collector and thus setting up as much or more light loss as is caused by the condition complained of, though of course it would cure the other evils. Also, in case of a mirror it would be necessary to install one of different focal length.

"On the whole I believe the only practicable method would be either to use a three-element projection lens, which would move the rear element back to a shorter working distance, or else, if the limit has not already been reached, to install a projection lens of larger diameter."

STUDIO'S FATE WRITTEN IN TABLECLOTH FIGURES

Canadian Epic Never Got Past Dream Stage at Plant Now On the Auctioneer's Block

By J. A. COWAN
Canadian Correspondent

Most definite indeed is the policy of the new Ontario Government to produce no pictures and it's certain that should any potential buyer appear on the scene for the studio at Trenton, Ontario, he would not be kept waiting on the doorstep.

Demise of Ontario Motion Picture Bureau erases the jobs of Major George Paton, director, and 24 of the staff. The eight others are to be placed in the department of education and the studio sold.

Ever since the end of the war this barn-like structure has been periodically ballyhooed as the approaching birthplace of a native epic in celluloid, but the epic output has been negligible, though the financial activity in connection with this or that proposed film has, at times, reached feverish heights. In recent years, the studio has been taken over and used by the Ontario Government Motion Picture Bureau as a laboratory and for the shooting of educational one-reelers for nontheatrical distribution. The Government has usually been willing to cooperate with ambitious would-be producers at a reasonable rental, but since sound, which naturally put most of the equipment into the outdated class, its functions have chiefly been for developing and printing as well as research into methods of aiding the hard-of-hearing. Now the checkered career of the studio seems to be over.

"The Great Shadow" Made

It was here, at the end of the war, that "The Great Shadow" was shot with Tyrone Power as the star. This had the red menace as its theme in the days when communism was still a brand-new bogey. The cast was imported, but the list did not include, among the bit players, a James Cruze. A well known Canadian author, who still after all these years does not make public his connection with the matter, put the story into shape. He did it only because the original script, brought to him to read, was so patently impossible that he did not like to think of the young and hopeful producing organization carrying this unnecessary handicap as well as all the others it unavoidably must face. The picture was completed, and while nothing to make California tear its hair, was not bad. It ran with fair success in Canada, but did not, as expected, turn out to be the first of many such.

Figures on Table Cloths

In the hiatus which followed, a plan to base a picture on the life of Father Lacombe did not get beyond the financing stage, though stock-selling operations were carried on with eclat and something in the neighborhood of $100,000 is reported to have gone somewhere in the process. The money was Canadian.

When a decade ago, the Government accumulated the studio property, the town of Trenton already had become thoroughly cynical about its own dreams of a Canadian Hollywood. Too often, at the leading hotel, well-dressed visitors had announced themselves as on the verge of revolutionizing the cinema, but departed, leaving behind them nothing but staggering figures penciled on the tablecloths for the laundress to wash out.

For the next few seasons, the studio was staffed and operating, making a steady flow of short scenics and educationals for Government distribution to schools and clubs. The Ontario Bureau, in this period, grew to be one of the largest nontheatrical distributors in the world.

Then Canadian International Pictures hove over the horizon to make "Carry On, Sergeant," a war picture, and its sponsors collected from some of the country's best bankrolls. The bond house of Stimson, which like so many others sank in the recent economic storm, was engaged in the financing and the total raised was in the neighborhood of a quarter million. Bruce Bairnsfather, famed Better 'Ole cartoonist, was brought in to do a story and direct. A large and very well paid cast went enthusiastically to work. Among comedians was Jimmy Savo, and Hugh Buckler, English stage star, had the lead. The picture was silent and the argument as to whether it was or was not any good was settled by the arrival of sound and dialogue. The screen, which showed its first signs of learning to make noises as the war film went into production, was already talking understandable English when it was finished. A week's test run in Toronto produced a terrible lack of business and the picture went on the shelf, but, up until four weeks ago, efforts to salvage something were still reported.

"Empire" Project Fades

Since that major smash, little has been heard of Trenton. A proposal to make "Empire" pictures was based on the hope that Canadian-born stars would return for single pictures and quota laws would make it possible to sell the product. Every film player of Canadian birth was mentioned, including Mary Pickford, the late Marie Dressler, Norma Shearer, Raymond Massey, David Manners and Fay Wray. The promoter had gone so far as to telephone Government officials and ask rental rates on the studio and to issue statements to the newspapers.

That was Trenton's last break as a film center until the current announcement that all is over. It has been the scene of the most persistent efforts at Canadian feature productions, almost invariably ill-starred. At the moment, there is no one in sight seeking to uphold and carry on its traditions.

Three Join Carriers

Three additional film delivery companies have joined the National Film Carriers Association, according to James Clarke, president. They are Northwest Film Delivery Service, Seattle; Amsler and Waltz of Columbus, and Theatre Transport Company, Toledo. There are now 30 companies in the organization.

Review Is Refused In Zoning Decision

Reversal by the ninth district circuit court of appeals of a judgment of $35,336.15 awarded by a lower court as damages for a change in zoning was given the tacit approval of the United States supreme court this week when that body denied a petition of Fae Robison of the Seville theatre, Inglewood, Cal., for review of the case.

The court's order was rendered without comment.

The case was originated in the United States district court for Southern California, where the plaintiff brought suit against First National Pictures, Inc.; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Fox Film Corporation, and the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade, charging violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act in that the defendants, "acting under the advice of plaintiff's competitor, conspired to refuse, and did thereafter refuse, to furnish plaintiff with motion picture films in fair competition with said competitor" and charging that the film companies, by means of the standard exhibition contract and the zoning and clearance control provisions thereof, through the Film Board of Trade arbitrarily rezoned the Seville theatre, and only the Seville, "out of the Inglewood zone, where it was built, situated and operated profitably, into an arbitrary Los Angeles zone where it was never situated."

The district court found in favor of the exhibitor, but its decision was reversed by the circuit court of appeals.

OF THE two new setups unfurled this week, Fox Movietone with Lowell Thomas is the most colorful and varied. But Movietone, longer than usual, presents almost a complete newspaper, starting with a limited number of the leading news highlights and embracing departmentalized clips on fashion, sport, personals, an interview and even a bit of a travelogue.

IMPORTANT ADVANCE INFORMATION!

We urge you to screen at your first opportunity HELEN HAYES in "WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS." This is truly one of the finest, sincerest, most human pictures of our time. We suggest that your advertising should take the form of a personal recommendation. Tell your patrons that again you advise them to attend a new Helen Hayes picture. Tell them that their faith was justified when you recommended "Sin of Madelon Claudet." You can go on record emphatically in your approval of "WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS." Remember, it is Sir James M. Barrie's great play. In the cast, Brian Aherne and Madge Evans. M-G-M is heartily proud of it!

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Omaha, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

Those of you who don't know Regina C. Molseed are out of luck and have our sympathy. Regina is the secretary of the local Code boards and if we had a grievance of any kind against a film company we'd sooner have Regina adjust the matter for us than to take it before the Code Authority. Like all other girls, however, she has one fault, she doesn't seem to be able to recognize "beauty unadorned." We have asked her to go to lunch with us but she always has an alibi. The other day we saw this "alibi" and he was a tall-slim-heavy-set Polander with red hair and freckled face.

Miss Regina is different from Lola Gentry, the secretary of the Film Board at Los Angeles, for she said she would go to lunch with us any time we asked her, which goes to prove that it is "very unusual" out there.

Charles Lee Hyde of Pierre, South Dakota, writes an open letter to us in the HERALD telling us of a fire in his home recently. We are very sorry to learn this and we hope that the damage was slight. He also tells us that Freddie Horn did a lot of work helping him put the fire out. We have known Freddie for some little time. He is a film salesman for RKO out of Sioux Falls, S. D., under the direction of Sherm Fitch, the manager, and if Sherm would make an affidavit that Freddie actually worked, we might take some stock in it, but Sherm wouldn't do that, not that we doubt Charles Lee, but Sherm isn't that kind of a guy.

Billy Youngclaus tells us that he has sold his theatre at Columbus and has bought the Empress at Grand Island, Nebraska. He says he is having the house redecorated and as soon as it is finished he intends to open it at 10 and 15 cent prices. Since the crops around Grand Island were destroyed by the dry weather and excessive heat, it is likely that 10 and 15 cent prices will appeal to the theatre-going folks of that section.

Through the courtesy of Ted Mendenhall, Paramount Exchange Manager, we were permitted to witness a showing of "Cleopatra" at the World theatre. We are not a critic of pictures and we don't pretend to know very much about it, but our guess is that if this picture had been made back in the days of the "Birth of a Nation" it would have given that picture a hard run for first place, as a screen classic.

This is a very spectacular production, directed as only Mr. Cecil B. De Mille can direct them, and Claudette Colbert, as Cleopatra, was excellent and supported by an excellent cast. If your audience likes spectacular productions they will surely like this one. This isn't a criticism, it is a statement of a fact. We liked it because of its splendid direction and its splendid cast.

And Another Thing

And then, there's another thing, as Andy Gump said to Min. If you will go and see Columbia's "One Night of Love" and hear Grace Moore sing "The Last Rose of Summer" and selection from "Carmen" and "Madam Butterfly" and don't say that she has the loveliest voice you ever heard you can set us down as not knowing very much about it. This picture is built somewhat on grand opera, with not enough grand opera in it to hurt anybody. It has a love scene in it that will take you back to the moonlight evenings and the old garden gate after the old man had gone to bed. When Miss Moore sings "The Last Rose of Summer" you will be sorry that the roses are all gone.

Louis S. Wintroub, of Fontenelle Film Company, and his twin sister, Gerry Wintroub, are soon to stage a double wedding. Louis told us that he was going to marry a girl and Gerry will marry a boy. Louis says there will be no pork chops at the wedding dinner. We'll betcha it won't be carp. Good Luck to both of them.

MGM shot both barrels when they made "Hideout," with Robert Montgomery and Maureen O'Sullivan. This is a semi-gangster picture, minus the rough stuff that so often appears in this kind of entertainment. It is full of comedy situations and Montgomery and Miss O'Sullivan make a good pair and they give a very excellent performance in this comedy-drama. It should leave a pleasant memory with all who see it. Robert Montgomery is a gangster who is wounded by the officers and he gets away and finds refuge with a farmer. Here you see cows, chickens, turkeys, geese, rabbits and the farmer's daughter, Maureen O'Sullivan, and when Robert gets his eyes on Maureen he loses all sense of direction.

The farmer's mamma falls for Bob in a big way and so does Maureen, and the love scenes between Maureen and Robert never were surpassed except by Eddie Dowling in "The Rainbow Man," and Eddie's love scene in that picture still stands out in our memory as having been done just as it ought to be done.

Something to Write Home About

When you see "Hideout" you will have something to write home about, and while you are writing you better write to MGM and tell them this is one picture that the Legion of Decency couldn't find any fault with. Maybe they would like to know that. And you might say also that a few more pictures like this one will put the picture business back on a paying basis where it ought to be. You might also tell 'em that that kid in the picture they called "Willie" is about as good as any youngster you ever have seen.

We were at Scribner and had a delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, who operate the Scribner theatre. Mr. Robertson tried to run his theatre without the HERALD for some little time but found it was too much of a task.

We have received a copy of the San Marcos Daily News of San Marcos, Texas. There are a lot of towns in Texas that probably you don't know anything about—even Texas don't know all of 'em herself—but San Marcos is the town where F. W. Zimmerman runs the Palace theatre. He recently had a celebration down there, the occasion being the twelfth anniversary of the opening of the theatre. The San Marcos Daily News is given over almost entirely to this Anniversary and Zim received a basketful of letters and telegrams congratulating him, and they came from about everybody in Hollywood—Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Stan Laurel, Greta Garbo, Helen Hayes, Wallace Beery, Norma Shearer, Walt Disney, Marion Davies, Myrna Loy, Will Rogers and a host of others—and from the way Zim writes about it, somebody has to sit up with him. Zim is a good theatre operator but we have to teach him how to catch bass in Red Wing lake.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

No. 80—PREMATURE ADS AND RIGHTS OF EXHIBITORS

QUESTION—I am designated as first-run on my contracts by the distributor, there being no opposition in my town. My competitor is 17 miles away, in a town connected with mine by a modern highway. With modern cars it is only a comparatively few minutes away to the competitor's theatre (also a first run). Now, this exhibitor comes over to my town and plasters posters, billboards, window cards, heralds, passes, newspaper ads and the like. As a result he gets the cream of the business. The distributors give him preferred playdates on the grounds that he pays a little more rental. As I understand it, his activities are in violation of the code. Can I compel the competitor to discontinue this practice? As the situation really exists I am not a first-run. Of course, the distributors do not consider it that way. Their intentions are to get all the rental they can. Your advice will be appreciated.—TEXAS.

ANSWER—The motion picture code specifically says that a subsequent run theatre shall not advertise the same pictures that are played by the prior run previous to their exhibition at the theatre which has the right to the prior run. The point at issue in this case appears to be who has the right to the prior run, and, therefore, it is suggested that the situation be placed before the local Grievance Board located in the exchange city in the territory in which the theatres are located, and the board will decide such point.

In any event, the competitor is not permitted to flood the complainant's town with passes, and such a practice is sufficient cause to file a complaint against the competitor with the local Grievance Board, which would undoubtedly order the competitor to cease and desist from issuing such passes on the wholesale. The clause in the motion picture code which controls such a practice specifically says that "no exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes, reduced script books, coupons, throw-away tickets, or by two-for-one admissions."

No. 81—ELIMINATION PRIVILEGES ACCORDED EXHIBITORS

QUESTION—As we understand it, we are entitled to eliminate one picture under the code after we have played 10 from all the different film companies, if we have the complete product of features under contract. However, Metro has released since December 7 some pictures on this year's contract and some on last year's contract. What we want to know is do all the pictures released by Metro since December 7 count when you are eliminating, or do you just count those on this year's contract? We were under the impression that you would count all pictures released since December 7, regardless of on what contract they were when you figured the elimination.

Another question is this: I have a contract from RKO which in the form-part of the contract says, "Number of Features Offered, 52; Number of Features Contracted for, 27." In the body of the contract written by typewriter it says the exhibitor may reject not exceeding 25 features, such rejections to come from the lowest allocated license fees, etc. You see this year RKO only released 42 features, I believe, and, if you took 25 from 42 that would leave only 17 features to play. Now, which is the least number of features that according to our contract we must play?—MISSOURI.

ANSWER—Regarding the first question, about the right to eliminate pictures under the code, the elimination clause in the code permits an exhibitor to eliminate from a single contract 10 per cent of all pictures released after December 7, 1933, even though such pictures were contracted for prior to that date; provided, however, that the exhibitor's specific contract under which he seeks the elimination is in good standing; and, provided further, that the average rental for each picture of the group is not more than $250 per picture; and, provided further, that the exhibitor purchased at the one time, under that contract, all of the pictures offered to him by the distributor.

The last of the foregoing provisions means that if the distributor offered to the exhibitor 50 pictures and the exhibitor contracted to take the entire 50, then he is eligible under that contract to eliminate 10 per cent of the group, provided the contract is in good standing and also provided that the average rental for each picture is less than $250.

If the distributor offered to the exhibitor 50 pictures, or any other number, and the exhibitor accepted any part of the group and rejected all others, then he would not be permitted to eliminate 10 per cent of the partial group of features accepted. All of the pictures offered by the distributor to the exhibitor at one time must be contracted for, otherwise the elimination clause under the code would not be effective.

Regarding the second question, because the inquiry involves a purely contractual matter and does not come under the code, it is suggested that the exhibitor discuss his problem with the exchange.

No. 82—DISTRIBUTION OF PREMIUMS TO PATRONS

QUESTION—We are considering giving premiums away at the theatre with each paid admission. Is this permissible?—PENNSYLVANIA.

ANSWER—The motion picture code permits exhibitors to give away premiums to each patron entering a theatre, or to each class of patron (such as premiums offered to all children, or to all women, or to all men), unless 75 per cent of the number of exhibitors actively and continuously operating theatres in any territory shall have declared in writing that premiums shall not be permitted in that territory and such notice shall have been filed with the local Grievance Board in the exchange city in the territory in which the theatres are located, and in the event of the filing of such notice then premiums shall automatically be outlawed in the territory, and, consistent refusal of exhibitors to abide by this decision can result under the code in the severance of their film service by the exchanges.

Business Queried On NRA Effect

The Merchants' Association of New York last week sent to 12,000 local representative business men a questionnaire, comprising seven specific questions on the national recovery program, designed to ascertain definitely what effect the NRA has had on business of various types.

In an accompanying letter, Louis K. Comstock, association president, pointed out that it is just a year since the gigantic NRA parade which launched the recovery program in New York. Queried were all fields, including foreign trade and shipping, finance, general trade, building, insurance, hotels, restaurants and amusements, professions, public utilities, advertising and publishing.

The association indicated the questions were planned to elicit information concerning the effect of NRA on business activity and profits, the attitude of business men toward government labor policies, whether the codes in industries are being enforced.

The seven questions are as follows:

1. Has the government recovery program helped or retarded business activity in your industry or trade? Has it increased profits? Decreased profits?
2. Do you think the present policy of the government with respect to labor tends to discriminate unduly in favor of employer? Or employee?
3. Is the code for your industry being reasonably well enforced?
4. Do you think code administration and enforcement should remain in the hands of industry? Or be taken over by the government?
5. The national industrial recovery act expires June 16, 1935. In your opinion is it in the best interests of the country to re-enact it? Modify it? Abandon it?
6. In your judgment, what features of present government tendencies are harmful?
7. In your judgment, what features of present government tendencies are beneficial?

Skouras and Kent Confer on Circuit

Early recovery of the Fox West Coast Theatres group from its bankruptcy status was looked for this week as conferences got underway in New York to complete a plan of reorganization. Charles Skouras, FWC operating receiver, and Edward Zabin, his assistant, went into extensive conversations with Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, and representatives of Chase National Bank and Hughes, Schurman & Dwight.

At Kansas City, over the week end, Mr. Skouras and his party had conferred with Elmer C. Rhoden, operating head of Fox Midwest.

A foreclosure sale of Fox West Coast properties is expected in six weeks. Trustees have appropriated $150,000 for 100 per cent settlement of claims up to $30,000.

Reports have been current in New York that reorganization of FWC and its subsidiaries would be accomplished by the end of November, with each of the present operating heads to continue as presidents of newly formed companies, all to be controlled by a holding company headed by Mr. Kent, and with Spyros Skouras continuing as operating head of all FWC subsidiaries.

On the petition for reorganization of Fox Theatres Corporation, Archibald Palmer, counsel for a group of Fox Metropolitan bondholders, brought out in an examination of A. C. Blumenthal that Mr. Blumenthal had discussed the making of a bid for Fox Theatres assets if the petition for reorganization were successful. Mr. Blumenthal testified he had made a "gift" of his $350,000 claim against Fox Theatres to his sister, Miriam Rogers of Boston.

Mr. Blumenthal also said he had discussed possibilities of a reorganization of Fox Theatres with his sister's attorneys in Boston, with Ernest W. Nivers and Alvin J. Schlosser of Halsey, Stuart & Co., with various creditors of Fox Theatres whom he said he could not remember, and with "an attorney associated with Nathan Burkan," Mr. Blumenthal revealed that the petition for reorganization subsequently was joined by his sister, who identified herself as a creditor of the corporation on the basis of the claim assigned her by him.

Mr. Palmer then asked Mr. Blumenthal if counsel for his sister, ex-Judge Charles Kelby, also counsel for petitioning creditors, had told him that "he could get some money out of a reorganiaztion of Fox Theatres." Mr. Blumenthal answered that it hasn't been "put as bluntly as that."

The petition was voluntarily withdrawn by ex-Judge Kelby Monday, at a hearing before Federal Judge Martin T. Manton. Judge Kelby said all claims filed against Fox Theatres would be examined on their merits by a special master November 8 and received Judge Manton's permission to reinstate the reorganization petition thereafter.

Hayden, Stone Co. soon will make a new bid for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses assets, it was learned, the first bid of $4,500,000 having been rejected by the bondholders' committee. The new draft, it is understood, will incorporate a stock issue.

A move is reported on foot in New York by local independent exhibitors to merge 50 theatres into one big circuit.

Sale To Do Six for MGM

Charles (Chic) Sale will make six one-reel novelties for MGM. He is under contract to Hal Roach.

Sonotone Meeting Told Sales Better

The Sonotone Corporation, devoted exclusively to the manufacture and sale of devices to aid the hard of hearing, held its second annual convention at the Park Central Hotel in New York on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Dr. Hugo Lieber, president, announced three new developments in the apparatus of the company, a new single transmitter, which has the appearance of a jewel, rather than a piece of equipment; a development in the group equipment field for theatres, churches and schools, and a new portable recording equipment whereby the human voice can be recorded and later reproduced for schools and colleges.

Approximately 350 representatives, from the United States, London and Paris, were in attendance at the convention. Dr. Lieber declared that a new era for the hard of hearing is at hand, in view of the fact that for the first time individuals afflicted with hearing difficulty may have instruments fitted to their particular needs, such as glasses are fitted in the case of eye troubles. A 100-foot theatre trailer is planned to acquaint the public with the devices.

An increase nearly doubling the total number of dealers in the United States was announced, more than 700 now active comparing with 350 at the same time last year. An increase was likewise reported in the foreign field, 35 at present comparing with six in 1933.

Sales for 1934 are expected to approximate $1,250,000, comparing with $766,000 last year and $242,000 in 1932. For the first eight months of this year, sales amounted to $881,369, as compared with $394,292 for the same period in 1933. Dean Babbitt, vice-president and general sales manager, introduced the speakers at the convention.

Finishes Industrial Film

Emerson Yorke, formerly of Paramount Studios, has completed production on a two-reel industrial subject, "Romance of Rugs," called "an educational photographic theme in two studies." The film pictures the making and care of Oriental rugs, and is available in 16 mm. and 35mm. sizes.

Asks Reorganization

The Alameda Park Company, operating at Alameda, Cal., has asked the federal courts for permission to reorganize under the bankruptcy laws in order to gain time to pay its creditors. The company owes $379,520.

Loses Suit on Appeal

The United States circuit court of appeals, at Richmond, has decided against Nathan Schwartz, in his suit against Universal Chain Theatres Corporation, for alleged breach of contract.

Seider Moves Office

Joe Seider has moved the offices of the Prudential Theatres in New York to the Paramount Building from 630 Ninth avenue.

NINTH GUEST, THE: Donald Cook, Genevieve Tobin, Hardie Albright—An average mystery picture that didn't do average business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Oct. 9-10.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray, Walter Connolly, Mary Carlisle—A very good picture that, for a reason I cannot understand, Columbia gave a very poor title. The picture was to me equal to "Men in White," but the trailer and title were so misleading that the progressive patrons did not know what to except. Business average. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Sept. 27-28.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—Just a program picture that won't help matters any. Business below average. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN: Elissa Landi, Frank Morgan, Joseph Schildkraut—A good picture played on a double feature bill and got film rental but no more.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt—Have played several Holt pictures this year and was somewhat disappointed but this one was plenty good. Showed to better house second day than first. Many favorable comments. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 10-11.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Rural and small town patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—Pleased nearly all of those who saw it; but was only average at the box-office. Played Sept. 25-26-27.—Ivan Ashcraft, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly —This picture shows the sinking of a deluxe liner and is a tieup with the Morro Castle. It does big business. Play it quickly. In the press books no mention is made of the big scenes even if they are gigantic. They confine themselves to the kind of chewing gum chewed by the star and what color the leading lady's shoes are.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

First National

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell—Nothing to write home about although it is a good show for the type. Plenty of comedy and being a banned picture you can use your own judgment in playing it.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—The picture is all right if your patrons like that kind of story. Mine don't. No business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE: Warren William, Margaret Lindsay—A good murder mystery that is solved in a logical manner. After a slow start it holds tense interest. Advertise that it is adapted from an S. S. Van Dine story. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 11-12.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez—The best Robinson picture in some time. However, still did not draw at the box-office. Business below average. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Sept. 9-10.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak, Helen Chandler, Helen Lowell—The picture was very good and pleased those who came. Business only fair.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak, Helen Chandler, Helen Lowell—The best Barthelmess picture since "Cabin in the Cotton." Business average. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Sept. 20-21.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

RETURN OF THE TERROR: Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot—Personally, I thought this was a washout. I saw it four times and don't know yet who killed who and why. More thunder, lightning and rain than the State of Kansas has seen in five years, with guards in shiny slickers, arsenic, carving knives, skeleton and screaming females in a nightmare of horror. That's my opinion. Had so many favorable comments from my patrons it must be a good show. So, I will rate it as excellent. Just the same, I could have gotten along nicely without seeing it.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SIDE STREETS: Aline MacMahon, Paul Kelly, Ann Dvorak—Not as bad as I expected. Pleased most of the bargain night crowd. Business average. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Sept. 25-26.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson—Not the special one could expect. You won't miss much if you pass this one up.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—A good picture without any drawing power. It pleased all who saw it. Business fair. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: James Dunn, Claire Trevor, Shirley Temple—This is a very good picture that pleased the majority of our patrons. It is a comedy drama, with plenty of comedy, drama, romance and a touch of music and one song. Shirley Temple stole the show and her name got the business. There is one objection, starring a kid in a story with a gangster atmosphere and here's hoping this will be stopped. Business only fair two days. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Oct. 8-9.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: James Dunn, Shirley Temple—Everything I could say wouldn't be enough for this one. James Dunn and Claire Trevor are fine and Shirley is simply splendid. By all means, get this picture. I played it second run and did a good business. Played Oct. 8-9.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Rural and small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: "Pat" Paterson, Spencer Tracy, John Boles—Music, comedy, and it's good. Played Oct. 10-11.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CALL IT LUCK: "Pat" Paterson, Charles Starrett—The picture went over good. It is a good, clean comedy.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young—An outstanding musical production. Recording excellent. Played three days to satisfactory business. Special appeal to society class of people. Running time, 11 reels. Played Oct. 9-11.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

CAT'S-PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—An entertaining story with plenty of action and a strong supporting cast that didn't pull as we had expected, due possibly to the weakness of Lloyd's previous picture. Thoroughly enjoyed by those who came. This should re-establish Lloyd. Running time, 97 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans —This picture seemed to hold interest from start to finish. Not the best but it will please. Showed it at a bargain price and did not lose, so why should I worry. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson—Pretty fair program picture. "Pat" Paterson very beautiful. Her voice is excellent. I am hopeful she will be starred in some great picture because she is pleasant to look at and has plenty of smiles. And all this beauty and smiles, you will never find anyone who will object to it.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye, Helen Twelvetrees—Nothing big but we considered it a good picture. Shirley Temple is in one short scene only. Very little business on this one. Running time, 10 reels. Played Oct. 8-9.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—A good family picture. Should appeal to all classes in small towns or the larger cities. Satisfactory business. Running time, 10 reels. Played September 30-Oct. 2.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—A fair romantic comedy that satisfied our Gaynor fans and held the interest of our audience. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Sept. 30-Oct. 1.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—This is a nice picture and pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles—Ran this Saturday night and it seemed to please. I call it a fair picture. Good print and fair recording. Running time, 77 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—The picture was very good. Too long but the acting was O. K. Did not draw. Sold to me as a special and is only program.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Franchot Tone, Madeleine Carroll—We liked it but some of the ladies thought it had too much fighting in it. The battle scene is very good. Stepin Fetchit gets some laughs. Running time, 10 reels. Played Oct. 1-2.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

MGM

CHAINED: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford—Failed to attract college patronage. It is good entertainment, very nicely done. Fine acting, beautiful clothes and settings. Metro cameramen certainly give us the finest photography. Dialogue is excellent. Still, it failed to draw. Should please those who like the stars. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 9-10. —Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—Good entertainment. Ted Healy and Nat Pendleton make excellent team. Fair business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Sept. 29.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Lionel Barrymore—Swell entertainment in which Jean, as usual, "gets her man." I saw nothing objectionable in this one, merely envied Jean her technique. Jean is popular with my patrons. Franchot Tone and Lionel Barrymore are always good, while Patsy Kelly does some excellent acting. A fast moving show that pleased nearly everyone. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Sept. 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—A dandy show for the whole family. Sweet and amusing story with plenty of laughs. A good bet for your best days. Jean Parker is a comer. Pleased our customers. Played October 6. —J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART: Marie Dressler—A splendid picture and fully up to the standard set by both the stars. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Sept. 27-28-29.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—Thanks, MGM, for coming down to earth with some entertainment. "Hideout" is a pleasing, little show; has its romance, its fun and appeal to all classes and ages. If you can get the customers in, they will surely be pleased. Played October 4-5.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—It's a pleasure to run pictures like this. One swell show that pleased 100 per cent. Average business. Played October 6.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Mickey Mouse, Laurel and Hardy—More stars than the Milky Way. Less story than Mother Goose. Mickey Mouse and his Hot Chocolate Soldiers were the hightlight. This is a dandy reel in color that pleased old and young alike. Laurel and Hardy are always good, but there is little entertainment in this one. The everlasting Jimmy Durante and his big nose spoiled several reels of good film. Sorry the lions did not eat him. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon Theatre, Kan. Small town patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Hersholt, Elizabeth Allan, Otto Kruger—An excellent picture that we played too old. Business disappointing on this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 30-October 1.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Otto Kruger, Robert Young, Madge Evans—Only fair. Too much nonsense and make-believe. No feeling. Just see it and you won't be bothered with trying to remember how good it was. You will not care to see it again. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—Went over good with the young people. A 10-reel picture, with five reels showing a drunk and the other five reels showing worse than drunkards. But it draws them in because it's John Crawford. Played October 13-14.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—A splendid picture. Star fine and story entertaining. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan, Neil Hamilton—Although we played this one late, it pleased and did better than average business. No adverse comment because of the swimming scene either, although I rather expected it. Running time, 116 minutes. Played October 11-12.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Well produced picture that was well liked. Draws the kids mostly, but will please adults, too, if you can get them in. Running time, 103 minutes. Played September 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Marvelous production. Wallace Beery again outstanding. Failed at the box office. Entire cast and direction splendid. It is sure to please all who see it. Running time, 110 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

Monogram

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells, William Farnum, Noah Beery—A fine action picture. Lots of comedy that was funny. This is an extra good program picture. Clean and entertaining.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells —A good little program picture of the action type, being the airplane squad of the border patrol in flying stuff. This, played on a double bill with a John Wayne western, gave the fans a program right up their alley, and they went out shouting the praises of the show. Walker doesn't get any money as he doesn't seem to be known, but the combination bill played to best business in weeks. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 5-6.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

HOUSE OF MYSTERY, THE: Verna Hillie, Ed Lowry—A picture crammed with hokum, but it did the business, so I am pleased. The posters all carried pictures of apes and that brought the kids in and they brought the old folks. Business above average on bargain nights. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 2-3.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

KING KELLY OF THE U. S. A.: Guy Robertson, Irene Ware—I haven't run this picture other than at a screening, so I don't know what it will do at the box office. However, I was impressed with it when screened. It will probably never be an outstanding box office picture, but it really is a pleasing musical that Monogram should be proud of. Will report it again after showing. Running time, 70 minutes.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne, Virginia Brown Faire—A good western that drew average business on Saturday. Running time, 55 minutes. Played September 15.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—A very nice picture that I used on Friday-Saturday and it pleased my patrons. Business good. Ray Walker is always welcomed by my patrons. He made a hit here in "He Couldn't Take It."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—A western with a lot of fake shots but plenty of action. The western fans ate this one up and business was average, so why worry. Running time, 55 minutes. Played October 13.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

MONEY MEANS NOTHING: Wallace Ford, Gloria Shea—A very ordinary program picture that didn't draw. Business below average. Running time, 70 minutes.—Played September 4-5. H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

MONEY MEANS NOTHING: Wallace Ford, Gloria Shea—A mighty good program picture. Good story and good cast gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MONTE CARLO NIGHTS: Mary Brian, John Darrow—A picture that surprised me because even though it lacked names in the cast, a good trailer and a good title that had a real writer back of it put it in the average business class. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 11-12.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

MOONSTONE, THE: David Manners, Phyllis Barry—A hokum mystery with all the tricks of the trade, but it made a great combination with a western on our Friday-Saturday change. My patrons on this change aren't too particular, and they liked it. Business was best in weeks, as it caught on and drew them in despite the lack of star names. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 28-29.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

RANDY RIDES ALONE: John Wayne—An average western in production, but John Wayne means money in the bank to this house, being my best outdoor star at the box-office. Double billed with "Happy Landing" on the action change. Running time, 54 minutes. Played October 5-6.—A. West Johnson. Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore.

STAR PACKER, THE: John Wayne, Verna Hillie—Hats off to Monogram and John Wayne for one of the best western pictures of all time. It is a good story, full of action, thrills and everything that goes to make a western. With the good stories Monogram has been giving Wayne, he has reached the peak of western stars and always draws good business here. If you want a good western, book this one. Business above average. Running time, 54 minutes. Played October 13.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

ELMER AND ELSIE: George Bancroft, Frances Fuller—Bancroft wasted again. The picture moved too slowly and was pointless. Patrons kicked on this one. Business below average. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 18-19.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—Beautiful settings, fairly amusing comedy after it gets started. The Wampas stars furnish plenty of beauty. A wild attempt at sophisticated comedy. However, it pleased our patrons. Played October 2-3. —J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—This is a lively comedy that is full of action, romance and comedy situations. It is straight comedy set in the atmosphere of a modern beauty salon. The Baby Stars of 1934 add much to the entertainment and the entire cast turn in a splendid performance. We played this on a late Saturday night show to average business, and pleased our entire audience. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 13—10:45 show.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Drake—A very light piece of entertainment. Satisfied those who came to see it, but not many came. Don't waste a playdate on this weak sister. Running time, 63 minutes. Played October 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dell, Shirley Temple—Not near so good as "Baby Take a Bow"; with James Dunn acting as Shirley Temple's father it was more than wonderful. In "Baby Take a Bow" she dances, she sings and she gives the children amusement that keeps them loving her from start to finish. Give her James Dunn acting as her "daddy," for he likewise can dance and sing, and this great little star will be the greatest draw for us theatre people. Changing daddies so much makes our little folks at the theatre wonder how this is. Give her James Dunn and watch her grow. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Excellent western picture for my family night trade. Pleased everybody. —A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

BRANCHES IN ALL PRINCIPAL CITIES

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Gracie Allen, George Burns, George Barbier, Joan Marsh, Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians—Went over big. It may be silly, but they eat it up. Best Saturday business in months.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—The title must have kept them away. The picture is good.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Jack Oakie, Kitty Carlisle. It would have been called a big picture if they had left out the murder part. There are lots of fine dressed girls and the song number "Cocktails for Two" surely was fine. You will admire the excellent heap of fine clothes in this show. Running time, 86 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—A real production on which a lot of money is spent. Two plays in one—a well worked out mystery and a gorgeous musical. In future Vanities they will no doubt put more clothes on the girls. For the same reason this barely drew average business for me.—J. E. Stocker. Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh—This is a good little picture that pleased our patrons. It is fast moving with plenty of thrills, drama, romance and comedy. It is the story of a notorious feminine jewel thief. This will make good entertainment for the adults, but the theme is not suitable for the children. The excellent supporting cast play their roles very good. Played one day to only fair business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played October 10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple—This picture is too much of a story and it was too deep for children to understand. Not near the picture "Baby Take a Bow." Now the producer should know when it comes to starring a mere child that the children who come to see her expect a child-like picture. Running time, 85 minutes. Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple—This is a good picture and it did above average business. We gave Shirley Temple credit for one-half of the business on this one. Running time, nine reels. Played October 10-11.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

OLD FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy, Judith Allen—This is only fair entertainment and not as good as the last W. F. Fields picture. It is straight comedy, full of spicy dialogue and laugh situations from beginning to finish. It will keep your audience laughing throughout. If your patrons like good clean comedy, here it is. The excellent supporting cast adds much to the entertainment. Played one day to fair business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie, Dorothy Dell, Arline Judge—This picture did not please or draw. Not much to it.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie, Dorothy Dell, Arline Judge—Was disappointed in the business this picture did. I personally liked the picture, but the audience as a whole weren't pleased. Business down. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 23-24.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn—I like them with a little life, but this one knocked my ears down for being hot. Paramount should take this one clear out of service. It is too damn hot. How this one got by the censors beats me. Lay off this one.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—Very good picture. Pleased all patrons. Good business. Lee Tracy wowed 'em with his wit. Running time, eight reels. Played October 5-6.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—A dandy comedy that pleased. Business good. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Oct. 8-9.—Beauty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can.—Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, "Buster" Crabbe, Adrienne Ames—Good comedy that pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

RKO

ADVENTURE GIRL: Joan Lowell—Joan Lowell doesn't mean much to my patrons, but they were curious as to what this one was all about. It can be sold and sold big with a circus campaign, but in that case it will probably disappoint, as the picture really isn't outstanding in any respect. The kids loved it, however, and it would make a swell picture for the action change with just a little extra advertising. Business better than average, due to the curiosity of the trailer. See it, the sensation of the year for mother, father, sister and little Billy and Ann.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY: Wheeler and Woolsey Good comedy picture. Drew fairly well. Played October 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Reginald Denny—Very wholesome change from what we have been getting from this company lately. This excellent picture is what our patrons are asking for—different story, etc. It is sure to please. Miriam Hopkins is fine; others in the cast lend sturdy support. Give it your best days. Numerous comments on this one. Everyone thoroughly enjoyed it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 13.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene, Dorothy Wilson—An excellent western that pleased the Saturday crowd. Business average. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 22.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne—Good play. Irene Dunne's singing is what put this play over. Dix was not bad, either. Mary Boland almost ruined it, though, by singing. She is a great comedienne, but her singing isn't even funny. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 22.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SUCCESS AT ANY PRICE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Colleen Moore, Genevieve Tobin—Another picture that did not draw expenses. Why I don't know, but they just did not attend. The few we got liked the show.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—A good animal picture. Running time, 96 minutes. Played Oct. 3-4.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—One of the best educational shows. The shots showing the capture of wild animals are wonderful. Through the cooperation of the superintendent had a good attendance from the school. Other patronage below average. For a small town where many have never visited a zoo this is both educational and entertaining. Running time, 96 minutes. Played September 26-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—A wonderful picture. The best animal picture we ever played and all were well pleased with the show.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Fredric March, Constance Bennett, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—This picture will not please in the small town. Some liked it; others thought it terrible. Frank Morgan completely dominates the show. He is excellent. Constance Bennett is losing her popularity; her voice is unrecordable. Poor business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 11-12.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Constance Cummings—Old, but good. Lots of entertainment and that's what the cash customers want. The dialogue is risque in spots, but done in such a way that it goes over. Business above normal. Played Oct. 14-15.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

GALLANT LADY: Ann Harding, Clive Brook, Otto Kruger, Tullio Carminati, Dickie Moore—This is a very good picture that will please practically all patrons. It is a drama with romance and a typical Ann Harding picture. The "going to have a baby" scene in the first reel is the only objection. Here's hoping the Decency League will do something to eliminate this occurrence in practically every love story. A little old, but business good for two days. Running time, 86 minutes. Played October 1-2.— J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss, Robert Young, Loretta Young—A great picture. Drew from all around. Pleased all. It is a great box-office picture. The SRO sign was up before first show ended on both Sunday and Monday. Played September 30-October 1.—Ivan Ashcraft, assistant manager, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Constance Cummings, Jack Oakie—A very good entertainment picture. Very good at the box-office, which is the main thing. People raved about this one. I believe it pleased all of them. You cannot advertise this one too highly. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 23-24.—Ivan Ashcraft, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Constance Cummings—An excellent, fast moving comedy-melodrama that entertains and holds interest throughout. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 2-3.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

CLEAN COMEDY CALLED BIG NEED

Speaking of Eddie Quillan, as have Exhibitor Vaveris and Jaysee Jenkins, here's a word from Mrs. B. Smith of the Joy theatre at Rockmart, Georgia:

In a recent copy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD appeared a letter from Mr. Vaveris of Johnstown, Pa., in which he wrote of the popularity of Eddie Quillan's pictures in his territory.

This letter was very interesting to me as I had met Eddie Quillan when I attended an exhibitors' convention in Hollywood. He was then making comedies for Mack Sennett, and so outstanding was his work in these that I have followed with interest his progress from short subjects to feature pictures.

I was glad to learn that a reissue had been made of "Big Money," as it was one of the best features to have run in my theatre. He has always been popular with my patrons, and other exhibitors in my territory tell me he is just as popular with their patrons.

I noticed also in the HERALD that an Eddie Quillan picture would be released soon; this should be appreciated by the exhibitors as we are badly in need of the clean comedy type of pictures Eddie Quillan has always made.

mentioned above. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 10-11.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

CHEYENNE KID: Tom Keene—A good western play. Will please any western fan. Tom Keene was extra good in this play. A good play from a good company. Running time, 57 minutes. Played September 29.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—The best Wheeler and Woolsey show I have seen. Had been shown in three adjoining towns, which cuts down the attendance, but pleased those who came. Some very good song hits. Running time, 72 minutes. September 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Wheeler and Woolsey are poison here and that's what I think of Cockeyed Cavaliers. Playing this on a bargain night didn't help, either. It's beyond me why producers continue casting this team, Marx Brothers, Durante and a few others. Running time, 70 minutes. Played 20-21.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Sidney Blackmer, Sidney Fox—Does not line up to its forerunner, "Flying Down to Rio." Did not appeal to the fans. I believe Radio could concentrate on better pictures instead of ballyhoo. Running time, seven reels. Played October 7-8.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Polly Moran, Mary Boland, Sidney Blackmer, Sidney Fox—Very poor picture that was absolutely not liked here. A great step downward from "Flying Down to Rio." This is not the first failure, either, from this company over a short period. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 6.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Sidney Blackmer, Sidney Fox—Some one got this one all messed up. A lot of good talent wasted. A little funny business. Big shots and good singing. I can't tell what it lacked, but something was lacking to make good entertainment out of it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This picture's trailer has a dirty crack that all exhibitors should cut out. Why don't the producers simply run "Filthy Picture" after the manner of Parisian postcard vendors and cut out the rest

NANA: Anna Sten—This new star should give a good account of herself if given the right material. A great effort was put forth to make "Nana" a great picture, but the story is too sordid and tragic. By no stretch of the imagination could a story like that prove a success with the great majority of movie patrons, who have shown in the past unmistakable preference for happy, clean romance and straight adventures. Better luck next time, Anna Sten. You have the ability to make good.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII, THE: Charles Laughton, Robert Donat, Binnie Barnes, Elsa Lancaster, Merle Oberon—This is a good picture that will appeal to only a few of the older patrons. It is a comedy-drama, located in England in the 16th century, with Charles Laughton as the historic King Henry VIII. Laughton is the principal character and this is strictly a one-man picture. The rest of the cast are English players and not known here. Played one day to only fair business. Running time, 97 minutes. Played October 4.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Universal

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, June Knight—The picture drew a good crowd. Pleased all that saw it. Average business. Played September 11-12-13.—Ivan Ashcraft, assistant manager, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Ruth Etting—It is a swell picture. The SRO sign was floating around a good long while before the first show ended. It is a great drawing picture. You can't advertise this one too highly. Played October 7-8.—Ivan Ashcraft, assistant manager, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—Right entertaining show with a flock of radio stars. But if you take Universal's advice and tell the folks it's the greatest show ever, you may be sorry. It just isn't that much show. Played October 1.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—Booked for three days, this one was held over for five days, which is always considered a long run in this city. Went big with the younger people, as it has a certain gaiety and charm that makes for good light entertainment. The many stars do not contribute much to the picture, but it makes for a great selling angle that will draw them in and, once in, they'll go out more than satisfied. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 30-October 4.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—This picture did not do as well as it should have. It certainly pleased everyone. Some good music by a big cast of radio and stage stars. Lowe is excellent. I don't think you can go wrong on this picture. Try hard to get them in to see it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—A breezy comedy with music that gave good entertainment and satisfied 100 per cent. Advertised it as a parade of stars in another "Big Broadcast" and did good business downstairs and colored balcony. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 7-8.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—If memory serves me right, this is an improvement on the old silent picture, "Alias the Deacon." Sound adds the improvement plus the masterful performance of Berton Churchill as the Deacon. You can promise them real entertainment. Drawing power a little above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HONOR ON THE RANGE: Ken Maynard, Cecilia Parker—The picture played to excellent business. Nothing outstanding; Ken has made much better pictures. Pleased nearly all the western picture fans. Played September 21-22.—Ivan Ashcraft, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Wynne Gibson, Paul Lukas—This is located in New York and Paris, and set against a background of art, artist and models. It is the story of a suffering woman, and tears will be plentiful at the ending. The stars are not well known and as our patrons do not like this type of entertainment, we played two days to very poor business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 11-12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—This is a very fine picture, if your patrons like Tracy. Will do for Friday-Saturday show. Advise exhibitors not to use this at the same time that "World's Greatest Thrills" is shown.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LET'S TALK IT OVER: Chester Morris, Mae Clarke—A very good comedy picture. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW? Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery—A great picture. Fine story. Great acting by both of the stars, but did not draw business. All were satisfied that saw it, but not enough to pay expenses. No fault of the picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes—A good picture. Plenty of entertainment if you don't mind the gangster stuff, but nothing to sell. Edward Arnold does a fine job as the gangster boss freed from prison, and the rest of the cast are capable. However, the picture threw me for one of the worst losses in months. Of the patrons who did come, about 80 per cent were men, which explains the poor business. Maybe I didn't sell it right, but I don't think the box-office is there. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 7-9.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—Another rootin', tootin', shootin', son of a gun western that the boys with mud on their shoes will get a kick out of. O. K. for Saturday nights.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

UNCERTAIN LADY: Edward Everett Horton, Genevieve Tobin—Didn't click with my patrons, despite the fact that there are some good situations. The marital farce nowadays has to have some positive brilliance before it becomes noticeable, and this one just falls short of sparkling. Business was better than average, but due to companion picture, "Adventure Girl." Running time, 66 minutes. Played October 10-11.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—A good western. Played to good business. A good Saturday picture. Pleased nearly every one. Average business. Played September 7-8.—Ivan Ashcraft, assistant manager, Midway Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

Warner

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Very good production. Powell's singing was not so pleasing as in "Twenty Million Sweethearts." Business good.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Another good musical from Warners. While not up to their previous success, it still was a good show. Keeler didn't get a chance to dance enough and there were no songs that were real hits, were the most frequent complaints from the paying customers. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 7-8.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

DR. MONICA: Kay Francis, Warren William, Jean Muir, Verree Teasdale—This is good entertainment that will please the adults. It is far too deep for the kids and will appeal mostly to the women patrons. It is a drama dealing with a delicate subject—that of an unusual love triangle situation. Will the producers never get away from the baby theme? If not, the industry is lost. The trailer sold the picture and we played one day to good business. Running time, 52 minutes. Played October 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charlie Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—A very good comedy. Played on a double feature bill and got film rental out of the show. Nothing the matter with the picture. It is good and funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—After a slow start it develops into a good farce with plenty of laughs that will please all. Played on a bargain night with only fair business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 25-26.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

HOUSEWIFE: George Brent, Bette Davis—A nice little picture that didn't draw. Those who saw it liked it, but the title just wasn't. Business below average. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 4-5.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Here is a great picture that is sure to please all types of patrons. It is a comedy-drama, full of action, thrills, comedy, romance and is good entertainment for the whole family. It is fast moving and set against a background of the U. S. Navy. The trailer sold the show well in advance for us and will do the same for you. Played two days to unusually good business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played October 15-16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien—A snappy comedy that pleased every one. Joan Blondell and Pat O'Brien are good, while Allen Jenkins nearly steals the show. Glenda Farrell is another who always goes over big. Running time, 66 minutes. Played October 3-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

KEY, THE: Edna Best, William Powell, Colin Clive—A very interesting story and acting fine. Gave good satisfaction. A fine program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—The picture is fast and it went over good.—W. H. Hardmen, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—This is a good picture that pleased our entire audience and played to the best business ever on a late Saturday night show. It is straight comedy and fast moving with the same cast that made "Convention City." It is an all-laugh show and is good entertainment for the whole family. The trailer will sell the picture for you as it did for us. Hats off to Warner Brothers for a good show. Running time, 64 minutes. Played October 6, 10:45 show.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

World Wide

LONE AVENGER, THE: Ken Maynard—An old western we picked up that hadn't played this town. Did average Saturday business and pleased that crowd. Running time, 59 minutes. Played September 29.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

Short Features

Du Bray

GRAIN THIEVES: Very educational subject on smut in barley, wheat and oats. This is a gratis reel and is well worth showing. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

Educational

MICE IN COUNCIL: Terry-Toons—Amusing Terry-toon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

COAST OF CATALONIA, THE: Magic Carpet Series—Fair travelogue.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

AFRICA, LAND OF CONTRAST: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—All of this series has been interesting.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ATTENTION, SUCKERS!: Oddities—This is a good one-reeler showing many interesting card tricks. However, the average movie fan does not care for this type of entertainment. The remarks by Pete Smith are good and they practically put the show over. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BIG IDEA, THE: Musical Revues—A very good two-reel musical revue. These musicals are nearly all good and go over big. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CAVE MAN: Willie Whopper—This is a very good cartoon comedy that will please the average fans, especially the kids. Metro seems to be improving this series and there certainly was lots of room for improvement. Come on, Metro, I know you can make good shorts. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: No. 6—Not much to these shorts if I am a good judge. I have had several complaints on these subjects. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

HI, NEIGHBOR: Our Gang—A gang comedy that went over good. There are laughs in it for the young as well as the old. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

I'LL BE SUING YOU: Todd-Kelly—Not much comedy. Hal Roach has turned out some poor comedies lately. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE DAY: Charley Chase—Only a few laughs in this one. All comedies have been sorry lately. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

METRO NEWS: New Issue—Very good. Edwin C. Hill should speed up his comments. The first of this series has not had enough rapidity for a good newsreel. Recording and photography not up to standard. Running time, one reel.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

METROTONE NEWS NO. 204: Edwin C. Hill, Globe Trotter—So this is what Metro calls a good newsreel? This is the first issue with Hill as Globe Trotter and should be his last one. The photography and dialogue are terrible. Metro certainly made a great mistake when they made this change and I sincerely hope the future issues will appear much better. All of my patrons were disappointed in this and, personally, I think I could talk much better than Mr. Hill. Metro should discontinue their venture in this new field. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NEXT WEEK END: All Star Cast—This is only fair entertainment of the slapstick variety. The story is very weak and, although there are a few laughs, it is entirely too silly in spots. Not up to the standard set by Metro in the past few years. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PRO FOOTBALL: Oddities—Your patronage does not have to be football minded to enjoy this very excellent short. Congratulations, Pete Smith and Metro. This is real entertainment for everyone. The best single reel this season. Running time, 10 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

RASSLIN' ROUND: Willie Whopper—I think this is one of the poorest cartoons on the market today. Metro should be ashamed to sell it or even give it away. Running time, seven minutes.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

SPEAKING OF RELATIONS: Irvin S. Cobb—This is the best comedy I have played in the last six months. Advertise it big. It will get you some extra business. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

THREE CHUMPS AHEAD: Todd-Kelly—Good comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE JAZZ?: Musical Revues—The best of this series. Metro should feature more of these first-class orchestras. This was fairly warm in spots, but our patrons enjoyed it. Running time, 17 minutes. —Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S LIFEGUARD: Not so good, but will do. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S LITTLE PAL: Betty Boop Cartoons—This is another good cartoon from Betty. We liked it here. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S TRIAL: Betty Boop Cartoon—This is a very good cartoon comedy that pleased my patrons. This series has not been as good as last year's, but this one is of the best ever. Paramount is falling down on their shorts. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CAB CALLOWAY'S HI-DE-HO: Headliners—This was not as good as we expected. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchon, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 9—This is a good one-reeler showing many interesting and beautiful scenes of the movie stars and Hollywood. These are good entertainment, but our patrons do not seem to like them. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OLD BUGLER, THE: Chic Sale—Good comedy, but only fair recording. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL—No. 7: These are always good. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Betty Boop—Betty Boop in the best example of color cartoon work we have had. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

SHIVER ME TIMBERS: Popeye, the Sailor series—Not as good as most Popeye cartoons. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

STRONG TO THE FINICH: Popeye, the Sailor series—Popeye cartoons are very popular. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

TUNE UP AND SING: Lanny Ross—Unique cartoon, clever and well presented. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

RKO

AUTOBUYOGRAPHY: Leon Errol—A real good comedy with lots of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes. Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. General patronage.

DERBY DECADE: Ruth Etting—Fair entertainment. Why not give your shorts and features more light, RKO? This short in particular was very dark. Running time, 22 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

HENRY, THE ACE: Bert Lahr—This is the best comedy we have played from RKO and hope there will be more of these. Our entire audience enjoyed this one and they laughed throughout the entire two reels. Come on, RKO, keep up the good work and give us good shorts. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KNIFE OF THE PARTY: Jack Good, Lillian Miles—This is a very good comedy that will please your patrons. It is a musical comedy, with beautiful girls, good music and a few songs. This is one of the best of this series and I certainly hope there will be more like it. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LION TAMER, THE: Amos 'n' Andy Cartoons—Poor cartoon. Not liked here. Animation was poorly executed. Running time, 7½ minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

LOVE AND HISSES: Clark and McCullough—Poor. RKO comedies do not go over here. Running time, 17 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

BIG BENEFIT, THE: Mentone No. 3—Good entertainment.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DIZZY DWARF: Oswald Cartoon Series—The animation is very good, but not a laugh in it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GINGERBREAD BOY: Oswald—Good except for some unnecessary scenes in lavatory. Running time, six minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

GOLDILOCKS AND THE THREE BEARS: Oswald Cartoons—Fair Oswald cartoon. Music better than animation. Running time, eight minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HEARTBURN: Sterling Holloway—Another good Holloway, but they are nearly all alike, but the people laughed and laughed and that is what we want. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Louise Fazenda—Splendid, clean two-reeler. Plenty of laughs and hokum. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, New Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IN A NIGHT CLUB, A: Mentone No. 1-A—Have had better Mentone Musicals, but this is still better than the average two-reel comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

PIN FEATHERS: Pooch Cartoon Series—Here is the best cartoon we have got from Universal in a long while. A story of the little bird learning to fly and sing, with Pooch the Pup helping it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION—No. 2: This short pleased everyone. Things are shown that the average person would not believe. Our patrons liked it and told us so. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

WAX WORKS, THE: Oswald Cartoon—One of the best of this series we have played. Running time, eight minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Rural and working class patronage.

WAX WORKS, THE: Oswald Cartoons—Average Oswald cartoon. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BEN POLLOCK AND BAND: Melody Master Series—This is a good one-reel musical featuring Ben Pollock and his famous orchestra, playing several popular selections. The dance by Miss Doris Robbins is excellent. This is one of the best series of shorts on the market and always pleases my patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BUDDY, THE WOODSMAN: Looney Tunes—This is an excellent cartoon comedy that is good entertainment for the entire family. One of the best of this series and pleased all of my patrons. MOROCCO NIGHTS: Broadway Brevities—This is a wonderful short and is great entertainment. It is full of beautiful girls and plenty of good music, all done in color. Just the type of entertainment that the movie patrons like. Let's have more of these color shorts. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PURE FEUD: Pepper Pot Series—Excellent single reel.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE STARS MUST GO

The blazoning by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of the four-star rating given "The Merry Widow" by the New York Daily News is not only unnecessary in selling that excellent production to the public but weakens the position of theatremen throughout the land who find only box office harm in this method of reviewing.

From the opinions of members, published on a following page, we quote J. L. Cartwright, of Daytona Beach, Florida, who says: "The meager glow of three or four stars is not bright enough to illuminate the screen universe for its multitudinous audience." And this thought no doubt expresses the sentiment of many straight thinking showmen.

The endorsement given star-rating by the exhibitors themselves is to be regretted especially at this time when some progress in the general campaign against the evil might be reported, to judge from the recent action of the News. This publication, responsible for the origin of the system, has evidently made somewhat of a tactical retreat by yanking the offending symbols from the head of the picture reviews and endeavoring to bury them, but not too inconspicuously, in the body of the criticisms.

The slight concession on the part of the publishers, though indicating a willingness to recede from a previously adamant position, is not enough.

There can be no compromise. The stars must go. But they will not go until producers and exhibitors present a solid front by discontinuing the featuring of these injurious stars in all manner of advertising.

TO MR. ANONYMOUS:

This acknowledges yours of recent date requesting this department to publish attached open letter to theatre executives calling attention to the continued danger of paying able managers salaries less than commensurate with their positions and responsibilities. What you say is true, undoubtedly, but you weaken your case by remaining anonymous.

We are grateful that members come to us with their difficulties, and if our feeble talents are helpful to any extent in smoothing the way, so much the better. However, those men who call upon us must identify themselves. We cannot intercede for shadows. Therefore this department does not choose to publish anonymous letters.

We yield to no one in our desire to battle for the man in the field who in so many cases is so shamefully imposed upon. Ammunition is needed, but less than useless are the "blank cartridges" of anonymity.

ONLY MERIT COUNTS

For the information of those showmen who may assume that entries for the Quigley Awards must be put together artistically to receive consideration, allow us again to repeat—"'taint so." Theatremen desiring to doll up their entries are invited to do so, but the form of presentation is of no importance in the decision of the judges.

Winning campaigns are chosen strictly upon merit and no other factor enters into the final choice. Please remember, it's the "meat" that counts and not the fancy package.

THAT VITAL QUALITY

A visiting Round Tabler, now unemployed, conveys to us the information, disquieting if true, that at some of the offices where he has made recent application a preference is being expressed for college men to be trained for positions as managers. Without going too deeply into the virtues of education as a stepping stone to managerial prominence, considerable thought should be given to this slant by interested theatre executives before any such movement becomes general.

There is little doubt that the university graduate in many cases is better equipped to battle the world than his unlearned brother. But whether or not this applies to the business of theatre operation is a horse of a much different color. The college man may attain Phi Beta Kappa, cum laude, Ph.D. and what have you, and still lack that most vital and necessary showmanship which is to be had for the asking among many unemployed theatremen with post-graduate degrees only from the College of Hard Knocks.

A ROYAL SEND-OFF

When after two fruitful years as the manager of the Savoy Theatre, in Princeton, Kentucky, Paul Wykoff resigned to take over the Riviera, in Anderson, Indiana, one of the local papers not only ran a two column front page story on his promotion but topped it with a six-column banner head. We refer this unusual send-off to exhibitors who still refuse to allow managers to take an active part in community affairs.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Larson Clicks With World Series' Wager

Just before the opening of the World Series, we ran a box reporting Frank Larson's unique gag of betting the entire populace of Idaho Falls, Idaho, a free show at the Paramount Theatre if Frank failed to pick the winner of the Series.

Larson selected the St. Louis Cardinals and thus was saved the necessity of acting as host to his town, although on a number of different occasions he reports his chances looked extremely dubious.

Much advance publicity was secured on this, especially in the sport pages of the various local dailies. The nature of the bet made it real news and as results of the game were published, daily stories were also run on the progress of the wager. Larson further put up a score board in front of the theatre which also helped.

Stunt Pulls Extra Grosses

Frank kept interest high at the theatre by running trailers, lobby cards and kept mentioning the gag in his advertising. In addition to his newspaper, this included circus heralds plugging the bet and the stage appearance of a mind reader whom Larson had select the Cardinals in advance, thus building up extra attention.

So well was the idea maintained and so well was it sold, that this Round Tabler reports extra grosses for the attraction playing after the series was over. This was reported to be the same story last year when the gag was first pulled and, although Larson lost in 1933, he states that so many paid their way in for the early shows to have a seat for the free performance, his usual grosses for the day shot up some $300.

As we suggested, this stunt can be adapted right now to the football season where local interest is out of the ordinary. The bet can be made on some important game a few weeks ahead, allowing plenty of time for the buildup in which newspapers should be willing to cooperate. And, of course, it is just as good for next year's World's Series, or for that matter any local baseball game or other athletic event.

"Where's Wimpole Street?" Asks Harold Kaplan

Four men on the street asking people to direct them to "Wimpole Street" was one of the stunts pulled by Harold Kaplan, Century Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., for the "Barrett" date.

Slips were handed out in beauty parlors calling attention to the Shearer haircomb. Leading depots used tack cards reading "Take advantage of low excursion to see Barrett's." Screening was held for well known women whose word-of-mouth comments aided. Special writeup and art on Norma Shearer placed in teachers' bulletins.

Unique Lobby Flash on 'Happiness Ahead'

In exchange for a split of the receipts on the first Monday showing for the benefit of their Christmas basket fund, the Hearst papers were reported to have given a lot of additional space to the opening of "Happiness Ahead" at the New York Strand. Other publicity was planted in suburban newspapers in 25-mile area.

Further newspaper tiein was effected with the Evening Post, which used large cuts of Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson and the title of the picture in a full page ad to stimulate a circulation contest. Paper further plugged the title by tying it into ad on contest in one of masthead boxes. The Hoff cartoon teaser drawings also made effective advance advertising.

Interesting innovations were featured in the lobby over the front arch being built what was called a Photomontage (see photo) the display made up of scenes from the picture radiating from a circular sunburst of star heads. The flash on actual film was illuminated from the rear, portions of the whole being lit up at different times to give an effect of motion.

From the left corner of the arch straight tubes of Neon gave the effect of a music bar, title in sheet chromium against the tubing, star names and credits also in chromium. P. A. system played the title song of the picture.

On opening night, sound truck toured New York and Brooklyn, attendants distributing heralds, and advertising blimp traversed the Times Square section. Soft drink, soap, magazine, Postal Telegraph and florist tieup, as suggested in the press book, were some of the other slants put across.

Cartwright Builds Doll House for Shirley

A unique miniature display was built by J. L. Cartwright, Empire Theatre, Daytona Beach, Fla., on "Baby Take a Bow," in the form of a doll house with entrance measuring 42 inches high, exact height of La Temple. Card on door called attention to height and offered free admission to persons who could enter door without stooping.

Cartwright also gave away small celluloid dolls with tags attached reading "Take me home, but bring me back to see, etc., etc." Imprinted balloons, some of which contained passes, were dropped from plane over beach, tire covers on taxis and telephone directory gag were some of the other stunts used.

Chair Derby Helps Knight on "Dames"

The host of ideas put across by Manager Fuzzy Knight on "Dames" at the Fairmont, Fairmont, W. Va., excited enough local interest to land an editorial in one of his papers on the picture and the advertising effort put behind it. While complimenting Fuzzy's work, the editor took the opportunity to stress the importance of advertising to stimulate business in all lines.

Two of the gags that brought Knight the deserved bows were first, a "female" flagpole sitter atop the marquee who really was a professional dressed in woman's clothing. The second was a rocking chair derby in which three girls (see photo) were seated in a prominent spot and kept rocking supposedly, to quote the copy, to win prizes so that they could see the picture. On the first, want ad was used for girl to act as flagpole sitter, the slant bringing over 25 replies.

Airplane towing a 70-foot banner also helped as did Hollywood opening and announcement at local fight club by famed Jack Dempsey, in town to make appearance at fistic arena. Wigwagging Boy Scouts collecting crowds displayed theatre banners and newsboys carried back-placards in advance.

Local girls in bannered new model car, high school girls with shorts bicycling, carrying picture copy, panels attached to pay stations, and 10 by 28 pole cards on incoming roads were also used. Additionally outstanding, reports Knight, was a mounted 24 sheet on front porch of residence at head of Main Street seen by all incoming and outgoing motorists, the flash in metallics showing up especially well at night.

THREE MONTHS REMAIN FOR QUIGLEY AWARDS

Competition Enters Last Laps As October End Approaches; Entrants Speed Campaigns

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The end of the Quigley Awards year appears distinctly upon the horizon, for with the ending of the October competition, but three months remain in what has in this short time proved itself to be the most practical idea yet conceived to bring to the able manager his long deferred recognition.

October, November, December and then—the prize thrill of the year, the choosing from the monthly winners of the fortunate showman who will receive the Quigley Grand Award.

Until now, little has been said about this ultimate award, but as the close of the year approaches, attention is being directed to what many theatremen regard as the most desired prize in the history of theatre exploitation and advertising.

Again, for the information of those uninformed regarding this much coveted trophy, the Grand Award is 11 inches wide by 14 deep, mounted on heavy grain mahogany 12 inches wide by 15 deep all over. Upon its silvered surface are 12 small plates, upon each of which is inscribed the name of the monthly winner. And above is a large plate awaiting the inscription of that theatreman whose name will be honored above all the rest. Photograph of the Grand Award appeared in issue of Jan. 3, 1934.

To you showmen who have not yet landed a Quigley monthly plaque, be informed then that three opportunities remain to enter into the charmed circle. And, gentlemen, make no mistake regarding the position held by those who have already been selected as Quigley Award winners.

As the months go on, the virtues of the Quigley competitions are being brought home to more and more theatremen. In Pittsburgh, a few weeks back, the September winner, Jim Totman, said that the presentation to him of the Award was one of the greatest moments of his career, and it is expected that his participation will eventually earn him still greater rewards.

In next column we are again running the rules for those few who have up to now missed their previous publications. Study these simple rulings and come on in.

October Judges and October Deadline

The industry representatives who have accepted appointment to the Quigley Awards Committee for October are Messrs. John D. Clarke, General Sales Manager, Fox Film Corp.; H. D. Buckley, Vice-President, United Artists Corporation; Robert M. Gillham, Advertising and Publicity Director, Paramount Pictures.

As stated last week, the deadline for October is midnight of Thursday, November 8, and to be eligible for consideration all entries must be at headquarters by that time. Address is noted at bottom of column to right.

Rules and Information

A QUIGLEY AWARD — a silver plaque, is presented each month during 1934 for the theatre exploitation campaign selected by the judges as possessing the highest merit of all those submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club on pictures played between the first and last days of that month. . . .

THE QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD will be presented at the end of 1934 to the theatre manager submitting, in the opinion of the judges, the most meritorious campaign on any pictures played between Jan. 1 and Dec. 31, 1934. . . .

CAMPAIGNS should be forwarded as soon as completed, but may be forwarded after the last day of the month, providing they are on pictures played during that month. This may include attractions played on the last days of one month and the first days of the following. . . .

THEATRE MANAGERS everywhere in the world are eligible and campaigns may be on domestic or foreign products, from major or independent producer. Campaigns from foreign lands will be given consideration to make up for the difference in mailing time. . . .

EVERY CAMPAIGN entered must contain visual evidence of everything used, such as tear sheets, photos, heralds, etc., etc. Managers must obey this ruling to be eligible for Awards. . . .

EQUAL CONSIDERATION will be given all campaigns, irrespective of their origin. Managers with small budgets have the same break as those with unlimited appropriations. Remember, "it's not how much — but how good." . . .

Thomason Uses Clowns For "Circus" Stunt

Richard M. Thomason, Crystal Theatre, Ellis, Kansas, on "Circus Clown" flashed a large banner (see photo), copy reading "Your only chance to see a circus this year, etc." Clowns carried the banner all over town.

Another gag Dick pulled was a "plant" in audience and clown on stage who would offer to take photos of any patron. "Plant" on posing for picture would find himself playfully covered with black fluid, expelled from the trick camera.

Recently Thomason offered his own and his operator's services to a local school to help install outdoor lighting system for night football games—just another builder-upper to help Dick strengthen his community standing.

"Adventure Girl" Speedboat Ballys Date at Strand

Allen Shaumburg, publicist, Strand, Stamford, Conn., on "Adventure Girl" engineered a novel street bally in which a speedboat was mounted on a large bannered truck (see photo) and girl dressed to impersonate Joan Lowell in oil skins and sou'wester sat at the wheel of the boat. Tieup was also made for parade of cars carrying theatre banners.

Hookin with Board of Education had Joan Lowell in person address high school pupils, stunt breaking local dailies.

Bernstein Asks Secrecy With Teaser Herald

For his teaser heralds on "The Last Gentleman," Julius Bernstein, Loew's Theatre, Toronto, Canada, distributed cards with copy reading "Can you keep a secret? We doubt that you can keep this one." Rest of copy in smaller type told of the surprise climax to picture with request not to reveal it.

Tieup with laundry netted bannered delivery trucks and window cards. A head, newspapers played up premiere with feature stories and Arliss cuts, and cigar tieup landed many window streamers.

De Camac Uses Various Stunts in Calcutta

Not far behind us are our brothers from overseas in their exploitation stunts as witness the work of Peter de Camac, Globe Theatre, Calcutta, India, who for "Viva Villa" had a prologue on stage with a dancer doing a rumba with dance fading into the picture. In his lobby, Peter used six-foot cut-out of Beery in Mexican uniform. Table cards placed in restaurants, doorknob hangers and handbills in three languages distributed from house to house.

On "Tarzan" Camac's street bally consisted of truck with 24 sheet of Tarzan carrying mate over his shoulder and general jungle atmosphere, and for "Thin Man" three Indians dressed exactly like the thin man distributed leaflets informing public that reward would be offered for his capture.

Ingram Makes Rain On "Romance" Front

A novel gag is reported by Marty Ingram, Hudson Theatre, Kearney, N. J., on "Romance in the Rain" wherein he suspended around the marquee a half inch pipe drilled with tiny holes. From outside water outlet a regular hose was connected to suspended pipe allowing "rain" to drop down on cutout of two figures standing at curb (see photo).

A number of one sheets were mounted on compo board and suspended from pipe on marquee by thin wire from which water also trickled, giving realistic rain effect.

Holds "Cristo" Midnite Screening for Teachers

William Tubbert, Keith's Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., made radio tieup for a fifteen minute broadcast of "Monte Cristo," and also had announcements inserted in all outgoing packages at leading department store, imprinted paper bags distributed at local perfumer and book marks in libraries.

A special midnight show was held for all English teachers as well as local school board heads and for his street bally, Tubbert pasted his sound truck with sixes and twenty-fours.

Shirley Drinks Milk And Dairy Plugs Date

Wide "kid" coverage was secured by George Rotsky on "Now and Forever" at the Palace, Montreal, Canada, especially noticeable being a tieup with one of the leading dairies specializing in baby's milk. Special photos of Shirley Temple eating a sandwich with milk beside her was used in a series of 200-line ads before and during run.

Department stores and children's specialty shop put on sales and built displays around stills of the child star, similar hookin being made with furniture company, specializing in children's furniture. Magazine distributors also cooperated by displaying cards at all newsstands showing fan magazine front cover of La Temple and carrying theatre copy.

George also reports another tieup helpful to this showing and following engagements wherein local radio manufacturers put on an open week at the factory, invitation cards being distributed at theatre. Each card was numbered for prize of free radio to be given away at the Palace, coming attractions plugged on reverse of stubs. In exchange for display of new models in mezzanine, Rotsky further secured free broadcasts and generous newspaper advertising.

Stilt Walking Couple "Chained" by Jack Lykes

Reported to be the first time the gag was used that way locally was the man and woman stilt walking bally of Jack Lykes on "Chained" at the Stillman, in Cleveland (see photo) which drew fat crowds, no doubt due to the inclusion of the fair sex in the stunt usually reserved for male execution.

Jack also tied the date into a newsboys' marathon, bannering the sound truck that announced the event and supplying the runners with the numbers that identified each entrant, dailies crediting him for aid.

Fishkin Dresses Lobby For "Last Yacht" Date

Louis Fishkin, Alba Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends along the accompanying photo of the display used on "Down to Their Last Yacht." The artist responsible for the attractive set is Stanley Carlin.

The lettering was sprayed red and yellow, the moon yellow; shadow in water a still lighter yellow, while the yacht was white trimmed with orange, the signal flags original colors; sea greenish blue and the palm trees two shades of green.

Cohen Constructs New Front for "Dames"

Abe Cohen, Schine's Massena Theatre, Massena, N. Y., constructed an almost entire new front (see photo) for his "Dames" date by use of strips of beaver board painted colorfully and a generous sprinkling of glitter. The two chorus girl cutouts measured 40x50 and were lit up from the back, the others pasted on boards and set up on easels.

Abe says he did some special billing in surrounding territory, even going into Canada, which is but twenty minutes from his town.

Another street stunt consisted of man with one half of his body dressed in black and the other half in white carrying sign plugging picture.

Shaffer Promotes Special Section on House Opening

Promotion of a special newspaper section by Manager Frank Shaffer to announce the opening of the new Virginia, Harrisonburg, Pa., was reported to be more than successful, Frank securing cooperation from 35 merchants who took sufficient space to make the edition costless to the theatre, thus allowing Frank to spend the money thus saved on other profitable stunts. In addition to publicizing the opening, Frank devoted quite a bit of the space to his forthcoming releases.

The actual opening was very Hollywood, immediate streets decorated and large theatre shields placed over each store entrance within two blocks. Streamers and banners were suspended from telegraph poles and 1,000 watt lights were played on front of theatre from across street.

Combination 80-piece girls and boys band paraded the streets and put on a concert in front of the theatre (see photo) before the opening. Mayor and other city officials attended, his Honor making an address of congratulations from the stage. Ladies were presented with roses and autographed photos of Dick Powell, special souvenir programs distributed, wires received from leading locals and Warner stars and Frank rounded out his excellent campaign with a posting of special 14 by 22 cards within a radius of 25 miles on all main arteries.

Upside-Down Display Ad Tilts Second Day Gross

Although the virtues of the classified hookups are more or less taken for granted, Manager Joe Ryan, Grand, St. Cloud, Minn., goes into more detail in describing its benefits as used locally. For 10 passes daily, Ryan obtains a two-column five-inch ad and full-page streamer atop the page, the guest tickets given to those whose names are placed between the ads. New names are listed daily and Joe reports that besides the benefits of free advertising, by actual count each ticket recipient brings along from one to four paid admissions.

Ryan also forwards a two-column, upside-down ad on "Bachelor Bait" with outline headcut of Stuart Erwin placed head downward. Tiein copy reads "Yes, it's Stuart Erwin—slightly cracked and badly twisted." Gag is given credit for holding up second-day business above normal.

Bernie Seaman, Ogontz Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., pulled a neat one for his "Treasure Island" date recently by tying up with a bank promoting and distributing three by five cards with bright new penny pasted in upper corner, copy reading, "This penny brings you a fortune—a fortune in entertainment, etc., etc. See reverse side." Other side carried bank's ad and words "Treasure chests for silverware, jewelry, valuable papers, etc., rented for less than one cent a day."

Borrows Zoo Animals For "Jungle" Lobby

In the nature of a scoop was Manager Seymour L. Morris' street gag of placing a 10-foot cutout of a monkey suspended from the top of a light pole at the town's busiest corner on "Lost Jungle" at the Palace, Oneonta, N. Y., with theatre credit cards attached. Morris reports this one as a "first timer," street signs usually being frowned upon by the city fathers. Also attracting street attention was a float planted in parade of circus playing the town.

Letters were written to all members of the local Educational Council detailing the picture's many endorsements from national organizations, circus heralds distributed on rural routes and post cards mailed to all children in theatre kiddie clubs.

Reeds, cat tails and grass mats decorated the lobby and for further atmosphere, Morris promoted some of the animals from the city zoo, palm trees being placed between each cage to carry out jungle effect.

'STAR RATING PRODUCER HANDICAP'

— GUS LAMPE, MANAGER, ECKEL THEATRE, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

SAYS SYSTEM DOES NOT HELP THEATRE

Star rating system is a problem that I believe varies in this respect: In Greater New York, both Liberty and Daily News star rating system may mean something but in the hinterlands, or, let us say, in upstate New York, with which territory I am thoroughly familiar, the number of prospective patrons that are guided by star rating is negligible.

I have taken many pictures that were given less than two star rating by Liberty and made money with them. On the other hand, I have had many four star pictures with rave notices and didn't even get by.

First of all if you will trace back the Liberty magazine rating idea, you will find that in nine cases out of ten it's the class or shall we say arty film that gets the four star nod. Never a picture that was meat for the masses. The average person that reads Liberty never went for Dumas, or any of the classics. They go for Elinor Glyn, Fannie Hurst, etc. Therefore, when you read a rave notice that has to do with anything that requires too much concentration, it is just so many words to them. I speak of upstate cities with population ranging from towns of 2,500 to cities of 300,000.

Let us take Shirley Temple and Will Rogers as outstanding examples. In my territory, I wouldn't care if Liberty just awarded one of the points from one star, these two stars would do business in a big way. On the other hand, if they awarded it 50 stars, it would still do the same at the old box office. Then again, let us look at it this way: In upper New York State many pictures are played long before Liberty gives us any rating, so it has no bearing on these pictures either.

It reverts back to the old argument which all theatremen have been through one time or another with local critics. Why should one man's opinion guide the destiny of a million dollar production? What is meat to one critic may be gravy to another. Read the various comments in the many trade papers, weekly and daily. One says a great bet for any theatre; the other says, just a few reels of film.

Does this mean that one critic is right and the other wrong? Are they reviewing a production on the merits of their individual likes and dislikes, or are they reviewing with the idea in mind of the masses; and, after all, isn't it the masses that make standing room, or is it the few who criticize? I have used Liberty ratings in my ads and fronts and have never noticed or heard commented on, from any patrons, that it either brought them out or kept them away.

I believe that the producers are handicapped with this star rating system and also that the theatre gains nothing either.

If the critics want to be fair in their reviews let them give a resume of the picture along with any highlights they think would interest their readers and keep their personal opinions clear of the review. Then let Mr. and Mrs. Public make their own decision as to whether or not they want this type of picture for their entertainment.

The star rating system is like the old report card in school—it gave the faults of the students but offered no remedy for correction. —GUS LAMPE, MANAGER, ECKEL, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

PROTEST AGAINST STARS GENERAL

Following Fred Hinds' logical dissertation on the evils of the star rating system in last week's issue, we are pleased to present on this page further comment from other members who interestingly expound their views on the subject for the information and, we trust, benefit of our readers.

AUDIENCE REACTION FINDS RATINGS WRONG

I note your article in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD regarding Liberty magazine and its ratings of pictures. That publication has been a thorn in the side of us for a good many months.

Our audience reaction has indicated that the reviewer has been wrong 70 per cent of the time on pictures which were given low ratings. But make no mistake, there are a lot of patrons to whom this Liberty magazine is the motion picture bible.

It is eminently unfair to prejudice patrons in the way that this magazine does. It certainly requires some strong means to stop this kind of system. It is hard enough to get them in for good pictures, but when this sheet puts the picture on the spot, we can look for poor business on that certain picture.—A. E. HANCOCK, MANAGER, COLUMBIA, COLUMBIA CITY, IND.

REVIEWER'S FUNCTION NOT TO GRADE PICTURES

The development of the screen play in the United States has been and still is a great, ever-changing, ever-growing adventure in artistic creation that has brought more than mere entertainment to its public. And this great adventure in drama-making, in graphic interpretation of modern and past times, the star method reviewer would, if he could, control with a yardstick.

The most obvious elements in the star method are the pretense of authority, the rugged individuality, and the narrow localization and centralization of point of view exhibited by those so-called critics who use it.

The critic, after all, is just a human being. His experiences and reactions certainly cannot be completely common to all humanity. In fact, the reviewer must be by the very nature of his profession something of a provincial. His entire set of values is conditioned largely by his own personal situation. There passes under his scrutiny screen creations that range all the way from the slapstick of the Marx Brothers to masterful adaptations of the classics and the best in naturalistic comedy and drama. And all that he sees and considers, the star method reviewer, with a certitude altogether callow, subjects to an arbitrary and arithmetical grading system that could be applied much better to eggs or tomatoes.

I have managed theatres in more than two score cities in the United States, and that experience taught me that a play meaning much to the audiences of one city, often fails to please in another. There are plays that please youth but displease old age; plays that thrill the adventurous and bore the lovers of ease; plays that please men and offend women, and vice versa. And there are a few plays that satisfy all. But the star system reviewer cannot be at once old and young, daring and timid, masculine and feminine.

The meager glow of three or four stars is not bright enough to illuminate the screen universe for its multitudinous audience.

The creative critic's service to the public, the producer and the theatre consists of illuminative classification and exposition of a play without telling its story. If the reviewer's work is well done, the playgoer will be saved from the disappointment of sitting through an offering that he was sure not to like, and the theatre manager will be spared embarrassment and loss of good will.

It is not the function of the reviewer to tell the playgoer flatly what is good, better or best in terms of stars and fractions of stars. His job is one requiring more skill and greater understanding. It is to aid the playgoer in selecting plays that he is almost sure to like.—J. L. CARTWRIGHT, CITY MANAGER, HALIFAX THEATRES, DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.

Showmen From Here and There Report on "Treasure"

In those campaigns already run on "Treasure Island" we have detailed at length what many of the boys have done. Therefore, in the following are spotted highlights of a number of recent contributions.

In Boise, Idaho—

J. R. Mendenhall, Fox Theatre, ran a novelty organ program nine days before consisting of pirate music and slides calling attention to the run, followed by excerpts from the trailer. Program was called "Hollywood Bound" and plugged different stars by means of slides and music. Program was arranged by Farney, organist.

Down Louisville, Ky.—

George Hunt, Jr., at Loew's State, put on a premiere opening with invitations sent to Governor and family, presidents of all social clubs and leading citizens. Two announcers in lobby gave description of opening with all its trimmings and bombs were set off at intervals from roof of theatre. Boy Scout and Bugle Corps marched through center of town and wound up playing in front of theatre and broadcast from stage. Red carpet laid from curb to inner lobby and pathway lined with palms.

To Houston, Texas—

Where Bill Taylor, State Theatre, arranged with Municipal Golf course authorities to stage as added attraction the naming of a champion flight for "Treasure Island" and stars. Silverware purchased at less than cost from jeweler was put up as prizes. Cards were placed in all local golf clubs and special score cards printed with theatre copy for gallery at final match. Trophy Award made from stage was dedicated to popular Houston student and former title holder.

And In Memphis, Tenn.—

Francis Deering, at Loew's State, employed a man to go on streets dressed as pirate selling silver dollars for 90 cents, using appropriate spiel tying in picture.

Baker distributed small dodgers entitling kids to free admission if they were able to assemble complete set of dodgers on which appeared letters of title of picture. Baker also carried banners on all trucks and plugged it over their radio broadcast. Girls paraded streets distributing novelty keys for lock on treasure chest in lobby.

BETTER HOUSING CAMPAIGN

Various Suggestions to Put Over Local Drives in Conjunction With Nationwide Plan Now in Operation

In view of the importance attached to the success of the Better Housing campaigns now being put over nationally under the sponsorship of the Federal Housing Administration, many managers have possibly participated in local campaigns and others are open to such cooperation.

It is obvious that the theatremen should take a leading part in any local housing activity and for the benefit of those desirous of presenting to their civic leaders a more comprehensive plan, we submit the following additional ideas:

The Housing Administration, from Washington, has already appointed many committees to stimulate local progress of this movement, and to these might be directed a campaign which would embrace housing exhibits at the theatre and perhaps prizes of cash and theatre tickets for contests on various phases of the drive.

Contact Local Organizations

First, it is suggested that the theatre manager make the proper contacts with the various leading citizens who of course should include officers of different lunch and civic organizations, Chambers of Commerce, merchant associations, city officials, women's clubs, school principals, newspaper publishers and others of like importance.

With the cooperation of these leaders, a meeting should be called, possibly at the theatre, at which time the manager could explain the plan for the contemplated campaign, aimed first to stir the enthusiasm of the tradespeople, and secondly, to heighten the interest of the prospective consumers, those citizens who are expected to avail themselves of federal assistance in improving their homes.

Exhibit at Theatre

The exhibit in the theatre, if put over properly, will serve to expedite both of the above aims. Builders, realtors, dealers in builders' supplies, hardware and furniture dealers, interior decorators, nurserymen, garden clubs are merely a few of those who should be invited to participate.

Where lobby space permits, the exhibit should be housed at the theatre. and the mezzanine area might also be considered. That this can be done and done successfully has been proven in more than one instance by members who have put on similar exhibits which have been previously detailed in these pages.

The advance buildup, of course, will be handled by the manager in the same manner as he would put on the advance of any big coming attraction. Screen trailers, window displays, single and double co-op pages, street floats and contests may all play a part, the latter to be encouraged by the local press.

It has been suggested that each participating merchant and organization pledge a certain sum for campaign costs and from this might be given cash prizes to those property owners doing the best remodeling jobs and also awards to those architects, builders, interior decorators, nurserymen, etc., cooperating and turning out the prize creations. These awards might be framed photographs of the finished job with a credit card included, or if it were the consensus of the prize committees, additional cash prizes could be offered.

Prizes might also be given for the best exhibits of amateur and professional floral decorations which might be a part of the exhibit, and the younger element should be attracted with an essay contest in the local press on some phase of the housing plan, winners also to receive moderate cash prizes and theatre tickets.

To stimulate business, entrants would be requested to fill out blanks secured in the stores of cooperating merchants. And perhaps arrangements could be made with a local photographer to take pictures of the remodeled projects, judges to select, let us say, five or six of these for semi-final judging, these properties to be inspected personally by the judges before making their final decisions.

Of course, there will be many residents who by these activities will be induced to make the necessary loans and proceed to renovate or remodel their homes. Such being the case, obviously the time of the contest should be regulated so that these, too, will have sufficient time to complete their alterations and to forward their entries.

Press Cooperation Necessary

Interest in the contest after the Better Housing exhibit would be kept alive of course by the local press, although the other contests above suggested would be decided much sooner. Managers will realize the necessity of 100 per cent cooperation from their papers in advance, during the week and after, and in spots where newspapers are tough, other advertisers on the various committees can be called upon to exert pressure.

The above plan presents many opportunities for the strengthening of theatre prestige and publicity. And of equal importance is that put over successfully, the exhibit and contest ideas of necessity will aid in placing more people on payrolls and more money in circulation to the obvious benefit of the box office.—A-MIKE.

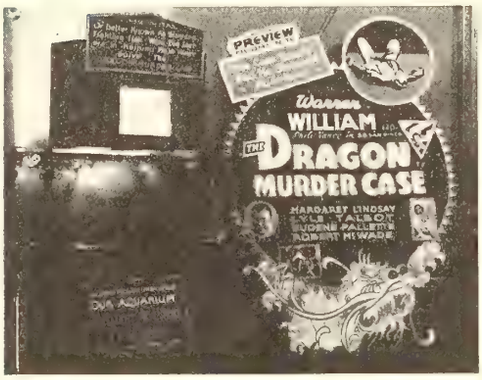
Harman's "Cleo" Tieups Secure Wide Coverage

Tie-ups were the order of the day when Homer Harman, Shubert Rialto, St. Louis, Mo., played "Cleopatra," securing cooperation from Old Gold, Lux and Woolworth's among others. The latter used a girl at the door of their leading stores handing out cards with theatre and picture copy and directing customer to perfume counter, where "Cleo" scent was sold. Shoe stores featured "Cleo" sandal ad and windows with colored enlargement backgrounds.

FRONTS AND STUNTS FROM AFIELD

An Unusual and Inexpensive Sign



(Left) J. M. BLANCHARD, Strand, Sunbury, Pa., is the creator of this "light" flash in which the letters are wired and covered with cellophane to give the appearance of a Neon sign. Each letter is 12 inches thick, capitals 3 feet high and other letters 28 inches.

(Right) DAVE MORRISON, Rex, Greeley, Colo., utilized this giant telephone outfit as a P. A. system on "I've Got Your Number", with attached wire running from his office. Dave would call out names of various passersby and also give data on picture. Giant directory carried copy.

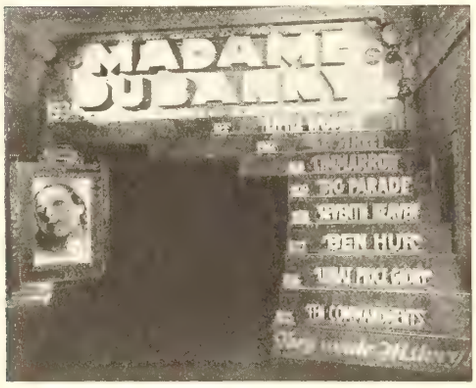
Quite an Idea, Isn't It?

Different Way to Sell Mystery



(Left) DOC ELLIOTT, Alhambra, Canton, Ohio, promoted this novel aquarium bally for advance lobby flash. The fish in the tank were tied into the plug on "Dragon Murder Case" and Doc reports this unique display plus the novel set piece created unusual interest.

Note How Harold's Glasses Flash

In the Company of Former Greats

(Left) LOU WASSERMAN, Hippodrome, Cleveland, Ohio, conceived this smart display in selling the date on "Madame DuBarry." Step effect with picture titles in cutout letters and indirect lighting helped greatly in carrying out Lou's idea on the bigness of the date.

(Right) W. C. McDONALD, Liberty, Great Falls, Mont., and house artist, CECIL F. SMITH, take the bows for this interesting advance lobby flash on "Treasure Island." Boat was made of papier mache and back piece was painted muslin with title in Neon.

A Very Professional Piece of Work

Even the Banks Go For It

(Left) MARTIN BURNETT, Loew's, Dayton, Ohio, obtained this striking window on "Rothschild" from one of his prominently located banks. This angle on the picture was utilized fully in many spots and Burnett's tie-in is a further indication that banks will go for smart exploitation.

(Right) BERT BICKERT and LARRY CONRAD, Palace, Ashland, Ohio, cooperated on the creation of this well done but inexpensive street bally on "Navy". It was built around top and sides of a sedan to obtain raised deck effect. Local bugler in costume blew Navy calls.

Completely
DEPENDABLE

THE dependability of Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative is not based entirely upon its well-known uniformity. It is the original, inherent quality of the emulsion...its constant ability to help producers and cameramen make the most of every picture...that completes its dependability...that seals the acceptance which this famous film enjoys. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
